NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

When the United States Supreme court assembled at noon Monday last, the Chief Justice announced the death of Mr. Justice Woods, whose chair was draped in black, and said that as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the court would adjourn until Monday next, when motions would be heard and a later date fixed for the court's final adjournment. Most of the justices will go to Ohio to attend Justice Woods' funeral.

Friends of Attorney General Garland are very confident that he will be appointed Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to succeed Judge Woods.

There is a rumor that the United States Supreme court has reached a decision in the Bell Telephone case, and that it would have been handed down to-day but for the death of Justice Woods, in whose memory there will be an adjournment without the transaction of business. According to the same report the decision will be technically in favor of the Bell company, but that it will define and limit the rights of the company under its patents.

LEGISLATIVE.

The big distillery at Des Moines, Iowa, was served with notice Wednesday that under the ruling of the Supreme court it must close up. About thirty-seven thousand five hundred gallons of beer in vats were seized at Matthe's brewery yesterday afternoon, and will be destroyed.

The Streeter tobacco bill, which prohibits the selling of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, etc., to minors, has passed the Illinois Senate, and is now on order of second reading in the House.

Recently at Des Moines, Iowa, Constable Pierce, refused to surrender seized liquors to the United States Marshal, and was arrested for contempt of the Federal court. Tuesday Judge Love rendered a decision in favor of the constable.

The report of the legislative committee to investigate the charges against Mrs. Orr, Superintendent of the Soldiers' Orphans' Home at Normal, is a complete vindication of that lady.

A quarrel occurred in the Illinois Senate Chamber Wednesday morning, between Senators Crawford and Gibbs, who first questioned each others veracity, and then came to blows, but were speedily separated. The trouble arose over the report on the Roche-Winston drainage bill.

COUNTRY.

The grand jury sitting at Portsmouth, Ohio, investigated the killing of Dr. Northrup at Haverhill by the McCoys of that place, and returned an indictment May 9 against all four of the McCoys for murder in the first degree. The evidence brought out before the grand jury showed that the shooting grew out of a prosecution of the McCoys for selling liquor.

Extensive rains on Sunday through Illinois, Wisconsin and the whole Northwest, caused general joy and thanksgiving. Many years have passed since so dry a spring has been known. No rain to speak of has fallen in some parts for over two months.

Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, the well-known Brooklyn preacher, took quinine the other day by mistake, and had it not been for the prompt assistance of several physicians the result might have been serious.

The will of Washington C. De Pauw was probated Thursday at New Albany, Ind. It bequeaths $5,000,000 to his family, and the residue of his estate, estimated at $6,000,000, is devoted to benevolent, educational, and religious purposes, including a bequest of $500,000 to De Pauw University.

A vein of coal 7 feet 9 inches was struck near Taylorsville, Ill., on Thursday, at a depth of 438 feet.

Annie Boyd, wife of a man who, while drunk, committed murder, and is now serving a life sentence in the Michigan Penitentiary, secured a verdict for $9,500 damages Thursday against the Rockford, Mich., saloonist who sold her husband the liquor.

The last stone of the Philadelphia public buildings began thirteen years ago was laid last Saturday. The stone occupies a position on the tower 337 feet and 6 inches above the level of the street. The tower still requires 200 feet of iron work to complete it.

In a sermon Monday at New York, Archbishop Corrigan declared the Catholic church opposed the fallacy that ownership in land was unjust, and stated that every man had a right to acquire, by honest means, as much property as he could.

Forest fires are burning in various portions of Worcester county, Massachusetts, and threaten the village of Still River with destruction.

In a church at Parkridge, N. J., Sunday night one of the auditors attacked an evangelist named Mason for calling him the prince of devils. The preacher was also roughly handled by others of the assemblage and was released on the promise that he would leave town.

Walter W. Vrooman, socialist and editor of the Labor Organizer, of Kansas City, Mo., was arrested while speaking in the Diamond in Allegheny City. Vrooman said "the American flag was a pole with a rag to it." This aroused the ire of the crowd, and they became so violent in their denunciations of the speaker that Mayor Pearson ordered his arrest, fearing that he would be injured. A charge of disorderly conduct was made against him.

A mob of negro and Hungarian strikers attacked coke-workers Friday at Jimtown and Dawson, Pa., using clubs and pistols. A number of persons were wounded and a large amount of property destroyed.

Recently a gang of robbers invaded the premises of Farmer Wagner, near Tionesta, N. Y. A desperate fight followed, one of the burglars being killed on the spot; another being found dead a few days later. Three others of the party have been arrested.

A tannery, soap-works, and a number of dwellings at Bridgeport, Conn., were destroyed by fire Friday afternoon. An old and valued leather-splitting machine, used by General Grant at Galena, was ruined by the flames, which caused a loss of $100,000.

Charles B. Reynolds was found guilty of blasphemy at Morristown, N. J., Friday, and fined $25. He was defended by Robert G. Ingersoll.

The business portion of Lake Linden, Mich., was destroyed by fire, Friday afternoon, burning brands from the surrounding woods causing the conflagration. Over 200 buildings were burned. The only business buildings left are one saloon and one small store. The loss is fully $2,000,000, with insurance $735,000, in English and Eastern companies principally. Lake Linden was a town of about 5,000 people, many of whom will be without shelter to-night.

Forest fires threaten Crystal Falls, Whitney and Nestor with destruction. The fires are worse than ever before. A special from Marquette, Mich., of May 18, said: "Forest fires are starting again on the peninsula and are raging fiercely southwest of this city, south of Autrain, east of Los Anse, and southwest of Baraga. In the vicinity of Negaunee and Ishpeming they are very severe, and are now burning large tracts of valuable hardwood timber south. All employees of the Champion Mine turned out to fight the fire and save the mine and cordwood. All along the highlands of Portage Lake, between the canal and west of Hancock, fires are doing heavy damage. The location of the Hancock Mine is in imminent danger, and a large force is fighting hard. Near the Quincy, Franklin, and Pewabic mines thousands of cords of wood are burned. The wind is strong and the forests are dry. Nothing but speedy and copious rains can save the peninsula from a conflagration."

FOREIGN.

It is reported that the Bulgarian regents are meditating the proclamation of King Charles, of Roumania, as Prince of Bulgaria, thus virtually making the Danubian Balkan provinces one kingdom, Roumania having, it is said, consented to the scheme. The policy is attributed to the initiative of England, and is said to have the approval of Germany.

William O'Brien, editor of United Ireland, and now in Canada, and who was twice mobbed last week, has been elected to Parliament for the Northwest Division of Cork.

The Financial Secretary of India has advised the British Government of the discovery of treasure estimated at $25,000,000 which had been secreted by an East Indian Prince.

General Boulanger's plan for the mobilization of the French army causes uneasiness at Berlin. If France mobilizes Germany will mobilize also.

The Budget Committee of the French Chamber of Deputies approved Pelletan's report, which demands a reduction of from 2 to 3 per cent in the expenditures of all branches of the government. On the adoption of the report the cabinet of Premier Goblet resigned. De Freycinet attempted to form a cabinet but was not successful.

The miners in that part of the province of Hainault, including the surrounding city of Mons, Belgium, are generally joining in a strike. Troops will be kept in the garrisons ready for an emergency. A number of detachments of troops occupy the mining districts. The Cri du Peuple, organ of the socialists, announces that 10,000 men are already on a strike, and the number is being added to hourly. An unsuccessful attempt has been made to destroy with dynamite the bridge over the river Haine, near Binche, in Hainault.

THE SECRET ORDERS

OF

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 50c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is a warning to those who are trusting in their own righteousness, and a blessing to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfinger. Paper covers, 10c. This book goes to the very heart of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of hell which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It is a warning to those who are trusting in their own righteousness, and a blessing to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which, he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

A dispatch from Saratoga says that the two Good Templar bodies meeting there and figuring on a union have resolved in favor of prohibition! We read with amazement—"In favor of prohibition." Next we shall hear that the brewers and distillers are in favor of the saloon, or that the churches are in favor of religion. But, after all, we are glad to hear of it, and so will be the W. C. T. U. Nevertheless the announcement casts a suspicion upon the former position of this secret order toward the temperance cause.

George W. Cable, the talented New Orleans author, has lived in comparative retirement since his removal to Northampton, Massachusetts, some two years ago. Previously, his powerful magazine articles on the social conditions at the South had proved of national importance, and there were many evidences that his views of the social ostracism of the black race were approved by multitudes of the most candid people in the South. But he finds that there is yet a relic of savagery, and supposed injuries are never forgotten. He was engaged to lecture in Columbia, South Carolina, this week, but the citizens object to hearing from a son of the South who can accept Lee's surrender in earnest, and he has notice not to visit the city. Columbia needs a hotter fire than Sherman's conflagration—coals heaped on the head to burn, as the old darkey said, "de debbill out of um."

A decision of the Supreme Court in Washington last week puts several hundred thousand persons at the mercy of a drive-well monopoly. The case came up from Indiana where there are fifty thousand such wells on which a $10 royalty was demanded. Judge Nelson of that State decided against the monopoly, believing that the public had acquired rights during the four years the well was in use before a patent was applied for. The Supreme Court reverses this decision, and it is an unhappy defect in our patent laws that allows the successful parties the power to impose an aggregate penalty of an immense sum upon the farmers, who are the innocent patrons of this invention and have probably paid well for all the advantages they have from it.

So much ado was made over the Crosby high license bill in New York a few weeks ago, which passed the legislature but was vetoed by Governor Hill, that some interest will be taken in the new measure just passed under the name of the Vedder bill. The Governor's great objection to the first bill was its limitation to cities of 400,000 inhabitants, that is, to New York and Brooklyn only. The new bill makes a sliding scale of the license from $30 for all liquors and $10 for beer or wine, to $400 and $100, respectively, in the two cities named. Yet Governor Hill is said not to be pleased and will give saloons the gracious benefit of another veto. A son of Dr. Crosby makes the best of an illogical and unhappy case in a defense of the first bill in the North American Review in which he confesses that the liquor dealers are the most strenuous and inconsistent opposers of high license. This opposition, he adds, shows an "inexcusable ignorance of the forces which are marshaling against them. Public opinion is undergoing a wonderful change." It is this change of public opinion which gives effect to the figures which set off the benefits of high license. Instead of cutting down the saloon list, it would grow, high license or no license, were it not for the rising up this public condemnation which shall soon send back the dark traffic to its native hell.

Geneva College, over which the powerful defender of our anti-lodge faith, Pres. H. H. George, bears genial sway has just passed through a trying experience, proving once more the rule to have very rare exceptions, that in college difficulties students may rely upon it that their faculty of instructors are right, and their own case will prove to be in the wrong. In December last the college building was broken into at night, the boilers tampered with, seats daubed with white lead and oil, and general vandalism perpetrated. Four seniors were suspended for the villainy, but the young men were popular and wealthy, and friends flocked to them when they claimed to be innocent, and demanded a more positive proof of their guilt than the faculty were able to show. The father of one of them was a trustee of the college and donor to the amount of $35,000. He came on from New York, and from the result of his own investigation decided against the faculty and for the innocence of his son. The exigency became so great that the former decided to engage detectives, who in a few days produced such conclusive evidence of the guilt of the students that their case utterly broke down. They were overwhelmed with shame. The trustee was reconciled, the faculty vindicated and peace restored. Much vexation and bitterness might have been spared had the rule above indicated been remembered. It is an unpalatable, but a very wholesome lesson for young men and woman just free from the dear restraints of home life and intoxicated with high spirits and a show of independence, to learn that there are times when they are pretty sure to be on the wrong side; and it must be regretted that the lesson has often to be learned at a great expense of faith in human kind.

Some of the Good Templars of the vicinity of Haverhill, Ohio, are attempting to make out that Dr. Northrup, lately murdered by saloon keepers, was not killed because of his hostility to the liquor traffic. They may be correct, but from the mass of evidence to the contrary, it may be that the victim was outside the Good Templar ring and so cannot have its endorsement or sympathy. At least the saloon must bear its share since the grog-seller murderers are of the liquor brotherhood. An editorial in the New York Tribune ably argues that the whole business is responsible for these murders, thus: "Nor is it so certain that the holding to account for such crimes of the liquor interest generally is so unfair as may seem at the first glance. For it must be considered that this traffic is one which naturally and necessarily attracts and enlists the lowest elements of the community. The saloon in politics has made the country acquainted with those elements in the most startling way. It has put over the heads of the best citizens the vilest, most ignorant, brutal and venal. It has disfranchised intellect and virtue often, and given the control of government to vice and stupidity. It has systematized plunder and corruption, and lifted demagogues and knaves into power at the expense and sacrifice of the public interests. In many cities it has so fortified the criminal classes that they have been enabled for years to defy all efforts after reform; and in more than one instance it has been necessary to have recourse to violent methods to dislodge them. It is, therefore, no exaggeration to say that the employment of the worst instrumentalities, in the worst ways, belongs naturally to the prosecution of the combat in which the rum power is now engaged. And the further its representatives are from the centers of civilization, the remoter their location in the country regions, the more apt will they be to revert to the rowdyism and ruffianism of their lowest type, as in the Haddock and Northrup cases."

POLITICAL UNREST IN GREAT BRITAIN.

BY REV. JOHN BOYES.

The political atmosphere of this country is far from clear at present. Irish questions continue to block the way of all useful legislation. There are many urgent matters which are essential to the welfare of the people pressing for attention, but the demands of Ireland stand as an obstacle to progress. The Crimes Bill brought in by the government does not meet the wishes of the Irish people, nor does it satisfy the desires of vast numbers of the people of this country. So long as we have class legislation it is state of things will continue. More concern for the national welfare and less for success of party schemes is highly desirable. My own conviction is that the only right way of dealing with Ireland or any other country is to pass wise and righteous laws, and towards those who will not comply therewith, use compulsion. In the presence of great national questions all sectional differences ought to sink.

Of late years beneficent and remedial measures have been passed time after time, but Ireland is so honeycombed with secret societies, which are always plotting against law and order, that even the most generous legislation is rendered unpalatable and abortive. The Crimes Bill brought in by the government is termed by the opposition a Coercion bill, and is now in committee for the consideration of its separate provisions. The state of social order is still very unsatisfactory, and according to the views of some people things are getting worse instead of better.

The government bill seems to me to deal more with the symptoms of the disease than the causes thereof. The government thinks or pretends to think that their Land Purchase Bill, which will be settled immediately on the passing of the Crimes Bill, will cure the disease; but if so, why not apply it first? The greatest objection to the bill appears to be in the fact that it empowers the Lord Lieutenant and the Castle authorities to repress any organization which they may think detrimental to the state. Whether this is aimed purely at secret political societies I cannot say, but it looks in that direction. Many people think that it is its main purpose, and if so, and its provisions are good, every law-loving man should endeavor to sustain its authority. A few nights ago Mr. Parnell and his colleagues were charged in the House of Commons with fraternizing with known law-breakers and murderers. Facts are difficult things to get over, and Mr. Parnell and his friends did not vault over the accusation gracefully.

MORAL HEROES.—III.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS

won for himself a reputation wide as the domain of Christendom, and justly deserved. When there shall arise one who can do justice to the thundering plunge of the awful Niagara, then there will be a man or woman that can properly illustrate the powers of Frederick Douglass. While as yet those powers, that in after days shook the nation, slumbered, he entered my church in western New York soon after the service had commenced, a stranger to all, bearing a countenance that would attract attention any where; with a skin a little less bleached than that worn by some of us and a physique of faultless symmetry. I descended the pulpit and invited him into the vestibule, where he informed me that he was recently out of slavery, and would be glad to speak to the people there present, as he had an appointment at Le Roy in the afternoon.

I said, "Are you a Christian?"
"I think so."
"Do you think you can interest the audience?"
"You will have to try me."

It was a big venture, for we were in the midst of a revival. Nevertheless I said, "Follow me into the pulpit."

Never shall I regret that venture. Ere he had spoken ten minutes, the sluice way to the eyes of the people was opened, and never did magnetism fasten its victim in closer bonds than did young Douglass bind the audience to himself. What of money there was in the house was transferred to his pockets. He went his way, and I forgot his name. In after days when we met I used to ask him if he remembered the young minister who asked him into the vestibule to see if he knew enough to interest an audience.

The ordinary laws of heredity were certainly set aside in the birth of Mr. Douglass. It was nearer the fabled bound of Minerva from the head of Jupiter than any other birth of our day. Though Mr. Douglass insists that his mother was a woman of extraordinary talent, it is faint praise to say that she gave to the world a son of unsurpassed genius.

In those heart-rending appeals for his enslaved people, pity and love were the fuel of those volcanic fires that burned in his great nature. With the high and the low he was equally at home, and both are alike swayed by his seraphic eloquence. In vain I attempt to describe this wonderful man. Frederick Douglass can be known only by seeing and hearing him. He now resides in Washington, D. C., but most of his life has been spent in Rochester, N. Y.

His photograph lies before me. The eyes that flamed with indignation over the wrongs of the bondmen and his own as well, retained the same steady, searching gaze as when we stood together at the "rescue of Jerry" in Syracuse, and talked of John Brown in Rochester. He is now as intent on the elevation of the freed people as he was for emancipation, and few there are who wrought more effectually for these ends.

HON. JAMES G. BIRNEY

was justly esteemed the worthy standard bearer of our embattled hosts. A man of statesman-like views and comprehensive ideas of civil government, of large reflective faculties, of unblemished integrity and every inch a true philanthropist. At the death of his father he purchased all the slaves that were inherited by the other heirs, and gave them their freedom. He then removed to the North where he hoped to have freedom to labor for universal emancipation. His personal experience, his extensive knowledge of the slave system, rendered him a terrible foe to its defenders; as Judge Platt of this city disastrously learned in a debate to which he challenged Mr. Birney. He soon became so widely and so well known that in 1840, and then in 1844, he received the first anti-slavery nomination for President of the United States. So fearful of Mr. Birney's influence at the coming election were the Whigs that the day before the election came off (thus giving no time for contradiction) they perpetrated the first roorback, known as the "Garland forgery," ever imposed upon the people of this country, viz, that, "Mr. Birney has refused his nomination and joined the Democrats." The outrage was such an unheard of thing as to carry the uninitiated over to the support of Henry Clay, but not enough to save him from defeat. That was the heaven-appointed opportunity for testing the loyalty of the nation to liberty and to God. But, like the Jews of old, they knew it not; and as the Jews chose a murderer in the place of the world's great Emancipator, so the nation rejected God's anointed Birney, for the chief defender of slavery. As the madness of the Hebrews came back upon their own head, so was it with this nation.

In pursuance of his mission North, Mr. Birney established an anti-slavery paper in Cincinnati, hoping to awaken the people of the Free States to a sense of the danger of oppression. But they threw his press into the river and mobbed him. Then he sought to reach the people through public assemblies. Though Mr. Birney lived for several years in Michigan, he spent the last years of his life in the State of New York. And his ashes repose among the heights that restrain the waters of the Genesee river, not far from the village of Genesee.

HOLINESS AND SECTARIANISM.

BY J. LEE GAMBLE.

Sectarianism is unfavorable, if not utterly opposed, to the possession and perfecting of real Bible holiness.

1. All sectism is positively condemned and forbidden in 1 Cor. 1: 9-13 and 3: 1-5.

2. It is utterly impossible for the Saviour's prayer in John 17, 11, 22 to be fulfilled as long as the present sect system continues.

3. Sectarianism puts the believer in closer fellowship with a part than with the whole; he is not in full fellowship with all the believers.

4. All Christians in any one place should be joined together as described in Acts 1:14; 2:1, 42. Heartily believing this I cannot perpetuate division by joining one sect and thus putting myself in closer fellowship with a part than with the whole. I must take no other name than that which distinguishes me as simply a follower of Jesus and in full fellowship with all others who follow him. How it must grieve the Lord Jesus to see in a small village three or four or more sects, professing his name, and separated from each other by rules and bars which they have put up, and all together scarcely able to keep up one society or support one minister. The Lord help his people to see quickly how sad and inconsistent and unscriptural is this state of the Church of Christ.

5. Sectism is idolatrous, leading to the exaltation of the creature and the "ism" above the Lord. Long before I saw the sin of sectarianism, when in all the large anniversaries of one of the largest and most popular sects of Christendom I heard so much about what their "ism" required, and so little about what Jesus and His honor demanded, I felt that the "ism" was usurping the place Christ only should fill, and that idolatry was certainly creeping in unawares among us. So far as I am concerned I love and revere the names of Luther and Calvin and Knox and Wesley and many others, as men of God, but see clearly the sin of joining with a part of the body in a closer and more intimate communion around any human name, however great and good, than that which I recognize in the universal "communion of saints" around the name of Jesus alone. Multitudes seem willing to fight for "their church" who appear to know little about personal communion with a personal Saviour; their church (?) is their idol.

6. Sects are founded on human definitions of doctrines, and thus real Christians are separated and estranged; for as soon as they begin to define they also begin to differ and diverge. This is not the will of the Lord.

7. Until the Lord comes again there will be differences of opinion among Christians as to Scripture teaching and interpretation, but these should not be tests of membership in the church of Christ. The New Testament gives but one test, viz.: The belief that Jesus, the Son of God, died and rose again for our sins. Rom. 10:9; 1 John 4:15, etc. With these and kindred Scripture before us how can we set up, as a test of membership in the church of Jesus Christ, views of baptism, ordinances, church polity, etc.?

It is very desirable that all the members of Christ's body should see alike on all subjects; and to this end teachers who are taught of God should seek constantly to open up the Word to their fellow disciples, who should have the humble heart and teachable mind and be ready, like the Bereans, to search the Scriptures for themselves, to see whether the things preached are really so.

8. But this full teaching of the whole Word of God is impossible under the present sect system. There are many important doctrines which many believers see plainly taught in the Word which they would be prohibited from preaching to certain other collections of Christians. And then the influence of sectism upon the best minds is such as to make it well nigh impossible for them to receive certain truths without prejudice; they will measure everything they hear by their sectarian standards.

A minister who was proposing to preach to his congregation on the Bible doctrines of Divine healing, and the personal return of the Lord Jesus to earth was told by some of his most intelligent members, "These things are not according to our church standards, and we don't want anything preached which is not approved by our church." When the reply was made that these doctrines were taught in the Bible, he was given to understand that they could not be preached there as long as the church authorities did not endorse them.

The Lord have mercy on such people; and yet such is the legitimate fruit of sectism. Even where the whole truth is permitted to be preached, sectarian prejudices shut it out entirely from the heart, or allow it but a reluctant or partial reception; and its influence upon the heart and life is weakened or destroyed.

9. Real Bible holiness objects to all man-made rules—as the Bible needs no "fixing up"—and to all human ordinances as necessary to the exercise of any of the gifts and graces of the Spirit.

For these and other reasons I am prepared to stand by the declaration that all sectarianism is unfavorable if not utterly opposed to the possession and perfecting of real Bible holiness. 2 Cor. 7:1; Eph. 4:1-16; Acts 2:41-47.

SECRET SOCIETIES AND CHRIST'S KINGDOM.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT J. BLANCHARD IN THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONGRESS, CHICAGO, MARCH 30TH AND 31ST, 1887.

The object of this paper is, to ascertain what "the Secret Lodge System" is, whence it come from, and where it belongs—in short to find and state the place of secret societies in the "Intellectual System of the Universe."

There is a book having this lofty title, which was first issued in 1678, and it has been reissued in England and the United States for one hundred and fifty-nine years—the last edition being that of Gould & Newman, Andover, 1837; published with the approval of the old Andover Faculty, Drs. Woods, Stuart, Emerson and Skinner.

The book justifies its imposing title: "The true Intellectual System of the Universe." The ablest writers of its time called it "The noblest performance of the age;" and, fifty years later, Cromwell's Domestic Chaplain, John Howe, whom Robert Hall called "A lumbering wagon loaded with gold," designates the author of this wonderful book as "The inimitable Ralph Cudworth." Ministers and scholars well know Cudworth, but I speak for students and the young, and because we have the source of secret societies in this book.

Paul the Hebrew, was "debtor to the Greeks," but born a Roman. He knew all of the Old Testament, and wrote much of the New. He at one time met Greek philosophers in "Mars' Hill," and he had converts at Rome in "Caesar's household." Paul's mind governed Cudworth's, who, with marvellous learning and judgment, has taken his conception of the Intellectual System of the Universe from "Hebrew, Greek and Latin" sources—the three languages written over Christ's head as he hung on the cross. And this stream of intelligence, running from Palestine through Greece to Rome and England, along the southern belt of Europe, in which most of the thinking has been done and books made for mankind, found Cudworth in an English University, where he was thirty years a professor; and furnished him that Intellectual System which he has given us in his book. And as horses are worshiped in Japan, monkeys in Hindoostan, and snakes in Africa, we do not yet go to those continents for philosophy or religion. We have in Cudworth sound learning and religion if we have any on the globe. We therefore quote him at length:

I. He says: "No intelligent Pagan (and he quotes most of them) asserted a multitude of eternal, unmade, independent deities. All universally disclaimed it, and professed to acknowledge one Supreme God." I. 236.

II. "Magicians were devil worshippers, who honored evil deities in order to the gratification of their revenge, lust and ambition;" and others, beside Pagans, worshipped devils."

III. "The Pagans' religion was corrupted and depraved by four things: (1) The superstition of the ignorant. (2) Licentious fictions of poets and fable-mongers. (3) The craft of priests and politicians; and (4) The imposture of evil demons or devils. By means of these four things the Pagan religion became a most foul and corrupt thing."

IV. "In due time God sent the promised Messiah; the Eternal Word, or God-man, invested with all power, as his visible Image, and the King, Mediator and Intercessor between God and men."

V. "This religion of one God and one Mediator did effectually destroy all the Pagan, inferior deities, middle-gods, and mediators."

VI. "Introducing inferior, self-projected worships into Christianity, therefore, seems to be the paganism that which was intended for the unpagingizing of the world." I. 322.

VII. "There is a perpetual war betwixt two polities—or kingdoms—in the world; the one of light, the other of darkness.

And our Saviour, Christ, or the Messiah, is appointed head or chieftain over the heavenly militia, or the forces of the kingdom of light." And, "There will be at length a palpable and signal overthrow of the Satanical power and whole kingdom of darkness, managed by our Saviour Christ, as God's Vicegerent and visible Judge both of quick and dead."

Omitting Cudworth's learned and thorough confutation of the atheists, this is a brief outline of all the world knows of unseen, rational beings; an outline endorsed by some of the ablest minds in Christendom for a century and a half, viz.: One Supreme God; good and evil angels; and good and evil spirits of men embodied and disembodied; and the "perpetual war, said to be waged between the evil and good spirits, seems visible to the naked eye, in the ceaseless conflict between right and wrong on this earth. The secret lodge system, which is "the Mormonism of all ages," belongs to the side of darkness in this war, as would be easily seen and universally acknowledged, if there were no such thing as sin, and consequent love of darkness.

But many causes combine to hide from us the true nature of the secret lodge system; as (1) Entrenched ignorance. This filled the patriot-philosopher John Quincy Adams with bitter astonishment—that men professing to be called of God to teach their fellow men, should blink a question, involving murder and millions of the peoples' money—by saying they "Know nothing about it;" "an ignorance," says Adams, "which they took care always to preserve." (Adams' Letters, p. 230.)

(2) Then lodge leaders study to promote ignorance, in order to keep men from worshiping as Christians, by making them wonder like heathens. Geo. F. Blackie, member of a lodge dating back to 1559, more than a century before the Apple Tree Tavern Grand Lodge, London, says of Masonry, as a boast rather than a regret: "Its origin may be said to be lost." But this no more hinders our knowing and stating the nature and influence of lodgery, than our not knowing what morass first sent up miasm and malaria, prevents our knowing that they spring from swamps and breed diseases. If there were no lodges, they would spring up to-morrow.

(3) But a worse hindrance to knowledge of the lodge system is, that it has the nature of the polyp, a disgusting creature, every section of which, when cut off, becomes a perfect animal, distinct from the parent, yet the same. Hence the name of Masonry is, now, Legion. It was an original invention of priests. Its fundamental writers, Mackey, Rebold, and the rest, including the cyclopedias, derive the system from the fighting monks of the Crusades, whose sham "Knight Templary" has come back to us from the grave where indignant nations buried it. French priests invented the chapter degrees; and Blackie, the Masonic writer already quoted, tells us of the Masonic systems which have become extinct. It is scientific in the college; beneficial in the society; insurance in the secret corporation; infidel in the Orient; political in the "circle" and "post;" reformatory in the temperance lodge; benevolent, charitable, social or political, Pagan or Christian; the Kofong and the Purroh in Africa; the Jesuits with their Monita Secreta, and the papacy at Rome, the mother of them all; secret from Confessional to Inquisition—these deluges of darkness are pouring into and along all our channels of life, like the flood from the mouth of the dragon; diverse, yet the same.

"Distinct like the billows, yet one like the sea."

Let us see whether these societies have a common nature; and, if so, what that common nature is? and, whether, in any just sense, that nature is conspiracy against God?

There can be but one moral system in the universe, whose author and executive is God. There can be but one, for this plain reason, that a second infinite system, if distinct, must displace the first. The badge and binding force of this moral system is its worship; and the oath or vow is the highest worship; that which binds mind to the God of mind; and the one point which we make is, that these secret orders do un-God our globe, by substituting another worship and other oaths for the true. In effect they displace God from his own moral system, and so do destroy that system within their scope. In short, horrible as it may seem, there is no obligatory law of right and wrong in a lodge. It is a side-system—a wen—orexcrescence in the Universe. Being neither civil nor ecclesiastical, human or divine, but diabolical; it has courts, but no sheriff; no right but might, and no motives but terror and secret advantage. It is a brotherhood or family with no rightful head; and unless doomed, as it certainly is, it would produce a world with no God but a usurper, who was a "liar and murderer from the beginning." (Jno. 8:44.)

"But if the lodge system is so fearfully abhorrent, why have not Christians found it out and abhorred it?" The answers are many and various.

1. In the first place Christians have found out and abhorred it.

In 1751 France, Russia, Hamburg, Florence, Portugal, Naples and Spain adopted laws suppressing Freemasonry. The rulers of Sweden, Denmark and England had some of their number join the lodges to protect their governments. But the Southern nations generally loathed the lodge. Thus, in thirty-four years after Freemasonry dropped stone and mortar, and set up priest-craft and rites, professing to fit men for heaven, the lodge had so developed its malignant nature, that the Protestant, Catholic and Greek religions in Europe suppressed it. Later, in this country, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont and New York enacted laws forbidding lodge-oaths. The Northern lodges were suppressed, and would have remained suppressed, if they had not had in them the vitality of false religion. These facts show that Christians have found out and loathed the lodge. Yet, to-day, educated men are totally ignorant of the nature of the lodge.

2. The second reason is, its members are sworn to conceal it from those outside; and, except a few in the highest degrees, from themselves, even. So that the Masonic masses are as ignorant of the nature of Masonry as outsiders, and often more ignorant. Then, putting conflicting oaths into a man's conscience breaks down his moral nature, so that uttering untruths to conceal Masonry is not, to him, lying, but keeping his oath to conceal; and he becomes incapable of truth where the lodge is concerned. Hence, though revealed a thousand times, the lodge still goes on selling revealed secrets. Even its frivolity is profound craft; and it lies hid under the contempt of sensible men. The poet Schiller was wheedled through the Entered Apprentice ceremonies by a shallow nobleman, who asked him, as they came out: "Well, do you detect any treason in that?" The poet replied: "Would to God, my lord, there was treason, for then there would be something in it."

3. But the grand explanation of this universal ignorance is, that Gentile or false worship is paid to devils, (1 Cor. 10:20), "who blind the minds" of their worshippers. This is expressly affirmed by Paul. 2 Cor. 4:4. By what mesmerism they do this we know not. All ultimate processes are hidden. But we do know that self-projected worships blind minds. O'Connell, one of the stateliest of men, blinded by such a mass of trivial ceremonies, ordered his heart sent to Rome, to be kept, perhaps adored, as a relic—to Rome, the mother of false religious inventions, despotisms and "spiritual abominations." And there are in this city of Chicago, ministers of large following, and private members of orthodox churches, who have taken the top of a human skull sawed off, and drank wine from it, invoking double damnation on their souls should they reveal the frivolous and oft-revealed secrets of Knight Templarism. Surely these are they "in whom the god of this world hath blinded the mind." (2 Cor. 4:4.) Paul is speaking of Corinthians who had practiced false worship.

But some of these men of blinded minds deny that the lodges are religions; and they deny this in the face of their own greatest writers, who declare Masonry to be "a religious institution." (Mackey's Lex., Art. Prayer). This Mason who denies that his lodge is a religion, uttered a deist's creed at the door; knelt inside at an altar; bound himself by oaths; Christless prayers were said over him; he is called a "brother," living and dead; is buried as a brother, and the liturgy of the lodge lands him in heaven. Whoever, in the face of these facts, denies that this is a false or Gentile religion, proves that he is blind or worse than blind.

All observing men can see that there is something in a man-made religious ceremony which blinds the devotee to what that ceremony covers. The hood-wink of the lodge symbolizes that blinding force. When Morgan's murder was discussed in the Batavia lodge, endorsed by a letter which—unless forged—was sent by DeWitt Clinton, then Governor of New York, the Episcopal minister, and every male member of his church, and elders of the Presbyterian church, and other good men, if they had any good men in western New York, sanctioned that dastardly crime. This, many of them, afterwards penitently confessed. There never was but one thing on earth which explains such "blindness of mind;" and that one thing is false religion.

Some prominent members of the W. C. T. U., and others, think we should discriminate between bad secret orders and good. But there are no good secret orders. Do they not all worship? And do they worship Christ? Are they not all secret, in contempt of the example of Christ? Will one say, "some have but little secrecy;" but was not a soldier in our late war who wore one patch of gray uniform meaner than he who bravely wore a full suit? The mis-called Grand Army, Good Templars and Knights of Labor, who plead the littleness of their secrecy, as Lot pleaded for Zoar, are they not all in the Dead Sea plain of a Christless religion? Are not their secret rituals all commandments of men, which makes worship vain and law void? The Good Templar constitution has nothing to prevent electing a swearing brother as chaplain, and their lodges often do it. And do not their deist creeds all omit Christ, and "brother" his contemners? The Word of God was, and is, "Tarry not in all the plain." And though Lot was allowed to compromise on Zoar, because "it was a little one," the good man fell into drunkenness, and his wife became a pillar of salt for looking back toward the plain of Sodom with desire. We hope the noble temperance women of this country will witness no similar transformation, or manufacture another pillar of salt.

Let us now turn square toward the Word of God. What does the Bible teach concerning the secret lodge system?

The side religions so denounced by the Bible, and the secret lodges of to-day, are one and the same system. Both are inventions. Both cram the popular mind with legends and lies, to crowd out the truth. Neither of them have the true, Infinite God, because destitute of a mediator. And without a mediator men cannot reach the Infinite God. Both the lodges described in the Bible, and those of to-day, are also destitute of the perfect law of supreme love to God and equal love to man; and neither system has a perfect human character after which to copy. The lodges of to-day are the false religions described in the Bible, brought down and modernized. This is so plain that "wayfaring men, though fools," need not err. Thus in the Bible Satan promises Adam and Eve to make them divine by occult knowledge. The lodge does the same. Satan proffers the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them. The lodge proffers popularity and secret and political advantages. In the 8th of Ezekiel, God shows his prophet a lodge of sun worshippers behind a wall. Blackie, a Masonic writer in Johnson's Cyclopedias, Art. "Freemasonry," says the lodge is "simple sun worship, overlaid with mystic speculation." The "New Masonic Trestle Board" speaks of the idolatrous Hebrew worshippers in the "high places," as, "Our ancient brethren." Moses foretold the dissolution of the United States of Palestine by false worships; which was fulfilled under Jeroboam, and ten states were struck from the map of the world. Secret lodges made the raid on Kansas and in them was inaugurated the rebellion which took eleven States out of our Union. The ten lodges in the District of Columbia all went for secession, and on the battlefield of Pea Ridge many of our men in blue uniform were tomahawked and scalped by Indians who would not fight our Union till their leaders had been taken to Washington and initiated by Albert Pike, "Sovereign Grand Commander" of Masons in the United States! Pike obtained money due the tribes for their lands from the United States Treasury and spent it for the rebellion against the United States, thus robbing the Indians of the price of their lands, their bread money and school fund. And he did this by the power of the lodge. So Jeroboam confirmed his rebellion and dissolved the Hebrew union by his lodge altars at Dan and Beth-el. But the Pike and Jefferson Davis rebellion did not succeed because we had Lincoln instead of Jeroboam as our chief magistrate.

Do we not see, also, in the days of Elijah the strange altars taking the entire nation from the altar of Jehovah, which was "broken down." The same work is now being done by the lodge altars in our Southern cities; where thousands of colored mothers take in washing, feed their children and board their husbands, whose earnings are eaten up by lodges which are run by their very worst men, and which are disintegrating their churches, supplanting the Bible by Masonic fables, and driving Christ from their religion.

But we need not go through the prophets. Every one of them declares what we see must needs be true, that national calamities come from false worships, and that ours are the same as theirs. Multiplying religions multiplies oaths, till, as Washington foresaw, and said in his farewell address, "the oath loses its sanctity, society trembles to its dissolution, and anarchy comes down on us like night." Let no one think we are safe because the names and images of the pagan gods are gone. "An idol," says Paul, "is nothing in the world." But worship is everything which Satan craves, and which Christ refused him; and idolatry can be practiced in Christian, as well as in heathen countries, without images as well with them. But let us come to generals.

There are three points where our race is assailable, the Family, the State, and the Church. And God has sanctified the Family as our Father, the State as our King, and the Church by Christ its "head." In the first book of the Bible, Satan as a serpent embroils the first family, and in the last book, the Revelation, his "three spirits of devils like frogs" are sent to embroil the nations; and, as "a great red dragon," he waits and watches to destroy the man-child, Christ. He achieves all three by false worship. The Mormon lodge destroys the family and makes us Mormons. By secularism he destroys all reverence for law, leaving nothing but the slender power of a magistrate, often a demagogue, "between our breasts and the daggers of assassins." And, taking away Christ, he un-Gods the globe. For "he that hath not the Son hath not the Father," and Satan takes away God from the globe when he takes Christ out of its religion. This, however, he will never do, for Christ still "hath all power in heaven and in earth."

But this he can do. He can spread Mormonism and make the family a curse. He can embroil nations as he has embroiled Europe, Mexico and our own States by his power in the lodge; in the words of the philosophic Seward and thirty-eight New York statesmen, "trampling on our rights, defeating justice, and defying every government which it cannot control!" And Satan may be permitted yet to assail Christ and his church, expelling him by receiving to communion the worshippers of his adversary and rival, cutting his name out of the Bible used in the lodge, dropping his name from its creed and prayers, casting out "Father, Son and Holy Ghost" to make room for the "Grand Architect" or "god of this world." For this secret lodge system, what is it but a foul, sustained scheme to drop Christ from the religion of mankind and leave our race morally bankrupt, without an endorser at the bank of eternity!

Such are the moral teachings of the Bible concerning the secret lodge system. Paul is more explicit. Of the mysteries which Greece brought from Egypt, Europe borrowed from Greece, and we have imported from Europe, Paul says: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," Eph. 5. 11. "I would not that ye should have fellowship with devils." 1 Cor. 10:20. "The cup of devils" of which Paul speaks, was drunk in elegant banquets by the first scholars of the world, in temples whose ruins furnish our orders of architecture, accompanied with eloquence, poetry and music. Yet the Apostle saw that Gentile sacrifices were paid not to God but to those evil spirits which inhabited the old idolatrous shrines and resisted Christ and his apostles as the legion who infested the Gadarene and the seven who possessed the Magdalen. How must his converts have shrunk from such ghastly fellowship!

Some of us have seen the slave power in this country controlling everything in church and state as the lodge power now does. But it fell as by the touch of God. Unlike the slave power we have seen the lodge power once fallen afield. Forty-five thousand out of fifty thousand forsook its lodges and it only lived by feigning to be dead. It has come back to power by changing its names and a feigned change of its nature. But its master can not deceive the Spirit of God. Every true revival of religion is fatal to it; and when stripped of its aliases, like felons of their false names, it must sink sooner and deeper than before. The slave power met its first defeat in Kansas. God grant that Chicago may prove a Kansas to the lodge and this Congress its Osawatimie, leading to its Appomattox.

LABOR LODGES SOCIALLY CONSIDERED.

Strikes, and the whole system of federated labor of which they are the result, are utterly un-American. Our institutions are based on the idea of individual manhood. Each citizen is supposed to be able to take care of himself, to respect himself, to be a free and independent voter, and to look to the law of the land to protect him in his rights. But this imported socialism says: No, you individually cannot take care of yourself. The ballot is not sufficient. You must become a member of a secret organization. You must surrender your manhood and be the slave of some master workman or executive committee. You must work when he or they tell you to. You must strike when he or they tell you to—yes, strike just as the soldier in battle shoots when the commanding officer says "fire." In war it is necessary that men should obey orders without asking questions. War is a relic of barbarism at best, and martial law is the most absolute of despotisms. But we are at peace. We are cultivating, as employers and employes, the arts of peace. We are governed by the law of supply and demand. Every man has a right to hire his neighbor to work for him and to pay him such wages as he can afford to pay, and the neighbor need not work for the offered wages unless he chooses to. He has the privilege of going elsewhere and doing better if he can. But he has no right to say that if I don't hire him I shall not hire anybody else, or that it is his prerogative to fix the wages that I shall pay, and to boycott me and destroy my property if I refuse to accede to his terms. Let our newspapers expose the sophistry of the shallow-pated theorists who are humbugging our honest working men—making them believe that they can make water run up hill—and the strike and the boycott will soon be things of the past.—Rev. Dr. C. E. Babb, in the Interior.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

THE NATIONAL DRILL.

Washington is full of martial music and beat of drums. The National Drill is opened and the contests are begun. The city of tents around the base of the Washington Monument is quite picturesque, and there is also a ladies' camp just north of the parade grounds. Large parties of ladies accompanied some of the military organizations here, and some of them preferred to go into camp to stopping at the hotels and boarding-houses. Some preferred it for the novelty of the experience and others because of the economic features of camp life.

Quite a sensation occurred when it was reported that there would be no liquor sold in camp because of an order issued by the President to revoke the privilege. It seems that a committee of ladies, appointed for the purpose by the W. C. T. U., called on the President and presented him a protest against the sale of intoxicating liquors on the drill grounds, it being a government property, and asked his interference. The ladies said the President received them most courteously, expressed his disapproval of the license to sell liquors on the drill ground, and gave them much encouragement to believe it would not be done. The ladies also called on Col. Wilson, Commissioner of public buildings and grounds, and other gentlemen having authority.

The bar-room privilege of the ground had been sold for $1,800, but about noon on last Friday, the man who bought the privilege of opening the bar under the grand stand, was notified that the order granting him this privilege was revoked, and he at once ceased his preparations. Later it was stated that this action of the Drill committee was in no way due to the President or to the efforts of the ladies of the W. T. C. U., that before the ladies had waited on the President the Drill committee had passed their resolution revoking the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Drill ground.

Probably the real secret of the committee's action was that it received through the Commissioner of public grounds a polite intimation that it would be very gratifying to the War Department, to which the Drill ground belongs, if intoxicating liquors were excluded. The committee, already under great obligations to the War Department, could not afford to ignore a hint of that kind, and they promptly made the order revoking the bar privilege. So, at the refreshment counter under the grand stand, only temperance drinks will be sold this week.

The President, who has been working very hard and steadily for some time, has decided to take a rest. He will go soon, accompanied by his wife and her mother, Colonel and Mrs. Lamont, to Saranac Lake, N. Y., for about ten days' fishing. Last season he delayed his trip to the mountains until it was almost too late for this sport. He expects to get there before the crowd of Adirondack visitors assemble, with a view of securing a good rest. It is probable that this will be his only opportunity to be away from Washington for any length of time. Extra session talk is again revived, and should he deem it necessary to call an extra session of Congress, as many men of prominence think he will, he would probably be deprived of a later summer vacation.

An extra session is urged chiefly by the advocates of tariff reduction, who think that the country demands relief from taxation and a release of a good deal of the money that is thereby locked up in the Treasury. From a partisan standpoint, the Democratic politicians would of course prefer to avoid an extra session. It would involve additional expense, for which the dominant party is always held responsible.

[SPECIAL LETTER.]

The great military parade is just now the all-absorbing event of the city. Splendid uniforms are everywhere seen. One would suppose, if he did not know the facts, that we were in imminent preparation for a great war. More than $50,000 have been raised by private subscription in this city and other large sums are required to defray the expense. The President of the United States, the heads of the Departments and the Governors of the several States are giving to it their presence and influence. From all parts of the land great multitudes are taking advantage of the reduced rates to come to this city intent on seeing the great show.

Is there any good reason for this great conclave? Will the country be the better or the worse for this great military display? There was at least no occasion for it. Never in the history of our country were our relations with all the world more thoroughly peaceful. Even the poor savages are for once quieted, and the tomahawk has been buried. The ordinary police force is ample to secure the enforcement of law. Not only is there no danger of foreign invasion or domestic conflict, but the resources of our nation were never so ample for any emergency. We have a vast surplus at our command, and a great and loyal population ready to respond to their country's call. There is nothing in the air to indicate the slightest necessity for this gathering. That it will have great influence in stimulating the military spirit of the country is quite evident, but that the peace and defense of our country depend on a healthy emulation among its militia is utterly untrue. The nations that have the most careful military preparations have as a rule the most war. Those nations whose main reliance is in their peaceful intentions, and the moderation and justice of their demands, are the best defended and most secure.

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the world from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts.

"The warrior's name would be a name abhorred,
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would wear forevermore the curse of Cain."

"The military spirit" which this gathering will have "great influence in stimulating" is the curse of the nations, the demon whose power for evil is unsurpassed only by the curse of intemperance. The nations of Europe are groaning beneath its burdens, and the whole world is travelling in pain because of its demoniac power. France, Germany, Russia, Turkey and Great Britain are ready to seize each other by the throat and engage in a death struggle; and for very little reason, except that they have great armaments and a fine "military spirit." Is it a time for us to emulate their example? Are there no arts of peace that we can cultivate, and no works of mercy and beneficence in which we can engage? What a wonderful example of faith in free institutions, courageous adherence to Christian principle, and a benevolent regard for all mankind we could give, if on the one-hundredth anniversary of our National Constitution we should decree a universal disbandment of all our militia. There are, too, other conflicts in which we are engaged, and in which we will be greatly embarrassed and held back by such gatherings as this. The coming together of such a great mass on such an errand, always increases the ravages of intemperance, and checks the progress of the temperance reform. This is illustrated by the following from the Post of this city, of the 23d:

The boys had read in the newspapers that the drill management had forbidden the sale of liquors in the camp, and wanted to turn back upon hearing the sad news that Rochester beer could not be secured for a week. Hot, dusty and tired they arrived at the mess hall, and tremblingly looked with searching eyes for some sign of this liquid refreshment. Only water and coffee met their gaze. Caterer Kearns, noticing their eager intent and whisperings, asked if there was anything wrong about the breakfast. "Only this," said one, "it is too dry." "Oh," said the obliging caterer, "I forgot to say I have some nice, cool Rochester beer on ice, if any of you gentlemen ever drink." "Give us fifty-three bottles," was the only reply. The order was promptly filled and the liquid more promptly dispatched—fifty-three throats drinking as one.

Our great conflict just now is with the drink traffic. Let us not embarrass it by seeking to cultivate the twin barbarism, the spirit and practice of war.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Invincible Armada was built by Philip II. of Spain in 1588 for the purpose of destroying Protestantism in England. It consisted of 130 ships, larger than any Europe had ever seen. There was a land force on board of 20,000 under the Duke of Parma and 34,000 assembled in the Netherlands ready for transportation into England. The gifted and experienced sea officer, the Marquis of Santa Croce, was to command the fleet. Success seemed sure. But God fought for his own. Before sailing Santa Croce died, and the Duke of Medina Sidonia, "a person utterly inexperienced in sea affairs," received the command. Shortly after leaving the port of Lisbon a violent storm arose; some of the ships were lost and the rest returned for repairs. Again putting to sea they approached the British Isles in the form of a half moon, the extremes seven miles apart. A panic seizes them in the first engagement. They fly. A storm overtakes them. They are terribly shattered. "Of the whole Armada fifty-three ships only returned to Spain and these in a wretched condition."

Satan is preparing another Armada against Christianity. The first ship is the liquor traffic. It puts upon the public expense every year in our land 880,000 paupers, 315,000 criminals, 50,000 idiots. Our annual drink bill is $1,500,000,000. It murdered Haddock, Northup, and Gambrell. In England two out of every thousand die yearly from drink; in Scotland three; in France two; in Switzerland three; Sweden six, and in New York State twelve. The second ship is speedy and easy divorce. In England, Scotland, France and the United States the divorces more than doubled between 1870 and 1880. In England in 1880 the divorces were 2 to every thousand marriages; Scotland three; France nine; in Massachusetts forty-five. Another ship is Sabbath desecration. Sunday trains, Sunday newspapers, Sunday base ball, Sunday excursions and concerts have converted our Sabbath into a Parisian holiday. Another is the war between organized labor and concentrated capital. Perhaps 200,000 workmen are on a strike at this hour. It grows worse. Mormon polygamy and political corruption are other vessels. They make a frightful array. But the Captain of our salvation rules the sea of society in which they float. By and by he will raise up a storm which will scatter and disable the whole fleet and the Ship of State, our Republic, with Christ at the helm will command the sea. To him the National Reform Association is calling this nation as our Great Deliverer.

Last Sabbath I preached in the Second Presbyterian church, Rev. Geo. P. Hays, D. D., pastor. This congregation has above 600 members. They have a Sabbath-school of 700 scholars. They also have a mission school on Walnut Hills of about the same size. They support a mission on 6th street and also another in the West End. Their contributions are immense. They are justly proud of their pastor. Dr. Hays was five years pastor in Baltimore; then president of Washington and Jefferson college. He was pastor of the leading congregation in Denver, Col., for five years before coming here. He is infusing a new life into every department of their work. They occupy a stone church. Its appointments are complete. With the gift of the Holy Ghost who can measure the possibilities of their work. As Dr. McCosh says, "We can bring the gift to the altar but except the heavenly influence descend we will be as little able to kindle it as the priests of Baal upon Mt. Carmel by cutting themselves could bring down the needed fire.

The Commercial Gazette complains in an editorial that the Cincinnati Presbytery passed resolutions condemning the Sunday newspaper and affirms that ministers riding on the street cars on Sabbath are just as culpable as they. The article is lengthy. "He draws out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument." Why can he not distinguish things that differ? Does he not know that the priests spent all the Sabbath in the temple slaying the sacrifices and were blameless, while the people were not allowed to slay a sheep or an ox for food? It would be wrong for a farmer to hitch up his team and draw a load of grain to the market on Sabbath. But it is right for him to hitch up his team to take his family to church on that day. It would be right and eminently proper for the street cars to run on certain hours on Sabbath to take people to and from church provided they would remain tied up the rest of the day. But to run them all the Sabbath day simply to put money in the pockets of the stockholders is a sin and a crime. It is a crime against society and a sin against God. And that is what the Sunday newspaper is guilty of. The ancient Egyptians brought a coffin to their feast to solemnize it. The Sunday paper is the coffin at our Sabbath feast. It ought to be taken out and buried out of our sight with all it contains. J. M. FOSTER.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

A MODERN POOL BETHESDA.

As was the pool Bethesda, Boston is being stirred by the visit of an angel, or rather angels, of health. Standing in front of Tremont Temple at 10 o'clock A. M., it is seldom one witnesses so "great multitude of impotent folk, of blind, halt, withered, waiting for the moving of"—not of water, but the hands of the Drs. Henion, who cure (?) free of charge all who are fortunate enough to get upon the platform over the baptistry of the Temple. Many go away disappointed, as the single hour of the exhibition is insufficient to treat the numberless crowd of afflicted ones.

Last week a similar scene as that witnessed at the pool Bethesda was enacted in the Temple before a large gathering. A man who had not walked without crutches for five years was assisted upon the platform. His complaint was inflammation of the knee joints. The doctors rubbed the sufferer's knees and in ten minutes he walked across the platform without crutches, cured, and shouting vociferously that it was the first time in five years he had walked without the aid of crutches. So elated he became that he actually ran back and forth, shouting his joy, while the audience also gave vent to boisterous expressions of appreciation of the result of the doctors' operations. Throwing his crutches over his shoulders, the happy fellow left the hall.

Among other subjects was an old colored lady afflicted with rheumatism of the most acute kind in both feet. The doctors applied their hands and in five minutes the old lady gave a sudden jump and rushed across the platform yelling, "Fore God, doctor, I done gib up all hope, but now Ise gwine to lib suah." After the exhibitions, if they can be so called, free consultations are given at the Quincy House.

Whether these marvelous cures are genuine or not it is difficult to determine. To ascertain the facts the services of a detective would have to be secured. Magnetism seems to be the agent which the doctors employ in effecting their stupendous cures. The modus operandi of imparting the current is through manipulations of the hands. Mind and faith cures seem to be left behind.

Only those worked upon can know the genuineness of the exhibitions. That many believe it, more or less, is demonstrated by the multitudes that flock to the Temple every day. Great amusement is derived from the affair, if nothing else. What do the physicians make out of it? With the following announcement I will leave the Cynosure readers to form their own conclusions:

Free treatment given the public at Tremont Temple, 10 to 11 A. M.; free consultation given at Quincy House, 9 A. M. to 7 P. M. D. P. MATHEWS.

Good men, grand men, noble men, heroic men, will be the rule rather than the exception, when the prohibition of the liquor traffic shall become the law of the land and in our National Government.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A GOOD RECORD.

The Congregationalist church at Byron, Ill., held its semi-centennial on the 20th of May. The programme prepared by the committee was slightly varied on account of absentees, but there was no lack of something to say and somebody to say it. The present pastor, Rev. S. A. Harris, acted as "field marshal," and Edgar A. Nott, church chorister, conducted the song service. Rev. J. S. Braddock, Rev. A. E. Arnold, and Rev. J. H. Thomas made brief, but fitting remarks. The historical address was by Rev. J. P. Stoddard, pastor from May 1st, 1861, until January, 1872. A bountiful repast was prepared by the ladies and served on the church lawn to over two hundred persons, who passed the time of intermission in reviewing sacred memories, renewing old and forming new acquaintances. A "Band Concert in the church yard" at 7 P. M. was an attractive feature to the general public. Rev. John Gibson, also a former pastor, gave the evening address, and was followed by pastor Harris and I. S. Knowlton, who had held the office of deacon in the church for thirty-eight years.

The church was organized by Rev. John Morrell, with eleven members in Lucius Read's log cabin, in May, 1837. William D. Johnston, one of the original members, is now living at Lexington, Ill., and his letter to the convention was received with great interest. Services were held for a time in Deacon Read's cabin; then in the school house, as occasion served. The contract for a house of worship was let March 13th, 1845. It was completed in 1847, and dedicated the same year by Pres. J. Blanchard, who represented its principles not only in doctrine and faith, but upon the slavery, temperance and reformatory questions of the hour. It cost in money $2,042.49, to say nothing of the self-denial and sacrifice involved when there were no celled houses, broad acres of harvests, or fine carriages in all that valley, and when wheat was worth only 25 cents per bushel, and pork 1½ cents per pound. Friends at the East gave $193.58; the remainder was raised in the congregation, all but $20 being paid before the dedication. In 1853 a bell was added, costing $310. In 1880 a commodious parsonage with a barn was added at a cost of $1,500, and the recently renovated audience-room is in every respect commodious and attractive. A well-trained choir under the leadership of E. A. Nott, Esq., has instrumental accompaniments and is helpful in leading the congregation in song service. There is in connection with the church a prosperous Sabbath-school, superintended by Mrs. Dr. J. Blount, and other benevolent and reformatory enterprises of which I failed to obtain statistics. The church site of half a block was donated by its first pastor, Rev. Ebenezer Brown, and the grounds are in the special care of the young men of the church, whose industry and taste have added much to the natural beauty of the situation.

The church has had eleven pastors and been blessed with a number of precious seasons "of refreshing from the presence of the Lord," and has received 411 members. Of this number 52 have died in connection with the church, 191 have been dismissed, 43 dropped or excommunicated, and it has now a roll of 137, of whom only twelve are reported absent, which is the largest working membership given at any one time since the organization.

There are very many incidents which it would be pleasant to mention, but all may be summed up in a word: the church of the living God in Byron stands where the fathers and mothers in Israel planted it, "The pillar and ground of the truth," united in its membership, at peace and working in harmony with its neighbors, and teaching the same grand, glorious Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It enters upon its second semi-centennial under the pastorate of Bro. Harris with every prospect of success in its mission of hastening the coming of that kingdom which is "righteousness and joy and peace in the Holy Ghost."

A SENTINEL WITHOUT SELF-POSSESSION.

PAXTON, Ill., May 18, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I have received a circular from the American Sentinel office calling attention to the National Reform Association, and requesting an expression of my reflections and suggestions. I do this through the Cynosure, as I am in correspondence with it.

I have at times given considerable thought to the different questions agitated which lie between our friends who observe the seventh day and all other Christian people. I have been on the most intimate and friendly terms with some of their ministers; have bought and read their publications. I would remark in view of the matters contained in the circular that the simplest things possible often solve and illustrate the most intricate and perplexing questions. The company of the literary men could not make an egg stand on end until Columbus struck one on the table hard enough to make a flat surface. Then all could do it. It was perfectly easy. Look for something simple, brethren, very simple, to solve the questions that agitate you. Don't get scared. Don't get agitated; and above everything don't get bitter, suspicious and uncharitable. This will solve nothing, but make everything worse. I have in mind a very simple thing that I think will straighten out everything and make everything plain if adopted. I will give it to you.

Down in the southeastern part of Illinois there lives a Seventh-day Baptist minister. He is a good man. Everybody, in church and out, have confidence in him. Of course they all love him. He is faithful to his convictions; preaches what he believes to be true; tries hard to convince his Christian neighbors that the seventh day is the true Sabbath. I have an intelligent Christian neighbor whom he invited to his house, and spent the day with her, Bible in hand, to get her to see that the seventh day was the true Sabbath. He did not succeed; but both understood their Bibles better than when they began, and had more Christian love and confidence in each other. This brother would preach on the seventh day for his people, and on the first day for other Christian neighbors, with perfect acceptance to all. This leaves no question to be settled. This will settle the whole thing everywhere if the method is adopted.

As to the union of church and state, I don't believe there is one individual who wants it; but the circular says there are one thousand enlisted in the National Reform who believe in, or would consent to a union of church and state. Instead of getting so agitated that all sober thought takes its flight, test the question faithfully and see if anybody wants the church and state united. It will be plenty time to raise the alarm when anybody is found who wants it done. The circular states that religious tests will be made as qualifications for holding office. This charge is too general and very misleading. It implies that men will be required to be professors of religion. This is not true. We don't want drunken, licentious, gambling, profane men for office-holders. They should be required to be clean and decent. But no man will be required to be a member of a church or a professor of religion. There are heathen places of worship now set up on our shores; we don't want idol worshippers for officeholders. We have religionists who hold polygamy as a religious right; we don't want our public officers to be polygamists. All public officers must take an oath of office. We don't want this service a mockery. We want an oath taken such as God sanctions. If an individual is so destitute of moral manhood that he cannot take this first step he ought to have too much candor to apply for office, or the people too much wisdom to elect him.

I think the brethren of the Sentinel too much excited to treat this question fairly. They throw out very uncharitable and disparaging remarks upon the persons and enterprises of others. Now such a course as this will do nothing but harm. In one number of the Sentinel it speaks as though the progress of the National Christian Association had been small. This was said with an uncharitable spirit. It had the rankle of a snub in it. If this was true, was this the way to do? Is the man in a right spirit to accomplish any thing good, who will do this way? But the slap betrays great ignorance, as well as a bad spirit. Let the brother make a patient and honest inquiry into the progress of this Association, and he will be astonished at the wonderful progress it has made, instead of sneers for the smallness of its gains.

Too much of this spirit is manifest in the Sentinel. Its criticism of brother M. A. Gault is of this character. Now I am personally acquainted with brother Gault, and I know the criticism to be as bitter as it was untruthful, and as untruthful as it was bitter. It accuses him of cool, calculating selfishness under the guise for a desire for justice. This is an intensified, wicked piece of writing. I know brother Gault, and he will go as far, and do as much to protect our Seventh-day brethren in their religious worship as he would our First-day brethren. All he would say is, Let us respect each other's rights. If you must work on the first day let it be so as not to disturb us, and we will do the same by you. Brethren, you must feel different and speak different if you expect to influence those who differ from you. Let us all seek a right spirit. Fraternally yours,
W. W. BLANCHARD.

SOUTH-EASTERN PENNSYLVANIA MOVEMENTS.

GREENCASTLE, Franklin Co., Penn., }
May 18, 1887. }

Editor Christian Cynosure:

DEAR BRO.—Perhaps a note from this part of the field of battle would not be amiss to the readers of your great and good paper—devoted to the greatest reform of the age.

The loyal U. B. held a convention in King Street church, Chambersburg, Pa. Bro. Wm. Dillon, editor Christian Conservator, was present, and during his stay preached five excellent, profitable and soul-comforting sermons. Oh, for more of such preaching, and there will be less secret society in the churches, and more Holy Ghost among the members. One day was taken up with the convention. Bro. J. M. Bishop, the long and tried anti-secrecy champion, was elected president, and I. C. Weidler, secretary. Bro. Dillon was the chief speaker, and entertained an intelligent congregation in a Christian and able manner, showing the evils of secret societies and the folly of the U. B. commission to open the doors in the U. B. church to admit this curse of churches and of the country. If the General Conference and commissin ring would have been as godly and devoted as ministers ought to be, there would have been no such folly committed in Israel; but instead, measures adopted to purify the church and cleanse it from sin.

The U. B. church has got old, and the sons have gone to house-keeping, inheriting the wealth, temporal and spiritual, and some of them the "brains" that the fathers lacked—as they think—and they have concluded to formulate a church "worthy of Christendom, and of the ages to come," making secrecy the chief corner-stone. Thank God, more than seven thousand of the U. B. children, having the courage of their convictions inherited from their fathers, will not bow the knee to this modern Baal.

Bro. Dillon gave a profitable lecture in the Covenantant church in Fayetteville, the village where Bro. Keiter was refused the privilege of preaching the Gospel in the U. B. church. Some of the sons of "brains" run that church. The preacher was present to hear the lecture, but was a "little" afraid to come to the front.

I have just read Rev. Talmage's sermon, "For the times," and am taken aback with the far-famed Dr.'s apology for secret societies, and of his confession of ignorance in reference to them. It is a matter of surprise that a minister of so much research and painstaking to expose wickedness, would risk his reputation for truth and faithfulness in his mission, and tell us that he is ignorant of the horrid oaths that bind Freemasons together, and of their ejecting and rejecting Christ from his Word in the lodge.

AN ADDRESS AT THE CONGRESS CALLED FOR.

NEW YORK, May 21, 1887.

DEAR BROTHER KELLOGG:—I write to ask you to secure for early publication in the Cynosure the address of Father Blanchard at the late congress of churches.

I desire to urge this as a deserved tribute to him as one of the earliest, most earnest and able champions of this great reform. Like the venerated Washington he has the dauntless spirit and courage for war, the mild and Christian spirit for peace, and is enshrined among the first in the hearts of those, his countrymen, who know and love the truth.

I desire it also for the sake of the thousands of your readers who were not able to be present at our convention to hear it from his own lips. It is also very much desired by those who were present in the congress at the time, but because of lack of light for the reading and quietness for the hearing of it, felt they were not able to enjoy it as they desired. And finally, I urge its publication, because, having been favored with the reading of it at my leisure after the convention, I feel confident it will be considered by intelligent and careful readers as one of the most successful efforts of the author's life, and the most complete summary of the truths bearing on that most important branch of this subject that has ever been published.

I also desire and expect to see it copied by every journal advocating the cause of anti-secrecy. It will thus be "like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Yours very sincerely,

J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XI.—June 12, 1887.—The Commandments.—Exodus 30:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart.—Matt. 22:37.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The reason why God should have supreme homage. vs. 1-2. Every command of God has its root in the highest reason, and here we see that he establishes his claim to be worshiped supremely, not on the basis of creation but of redemption. "I have redeemed thee. I have called thee by my name. Thou art mine." That he had brought Israel out of such fearful bondage ought to have been enough to bind the nation for all time to his service. Has he done less for us individually or as a people? That he gave his Son to die for us is a far higher claim on our gratitude than the mere act of creation and renders the giving up of our entire selves to him indeed but our "reasonable service." And it is also in the highest degree "reasonable" that a nation he has so wonderfully guided and preserved for over a century should recognize him in all its public acts and elect for rulers and lawgivers "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness." In no way can a people insult him more than by electing vile men to fill high places. In this respect the American nation has deeply sinned. Men of loose morals, impure lives and hands stained with bribery are set to be his viceroys, to represent him who is of purer eyes than to behold evil, who is absolute purity, absolute justice, absolute truth! Have we not reason to fear his righteous judgments?

2. Idolatry Forbidden. vs. 3-6. Idolatry seems to be one of the most deeply rooted instincts of our depraved human nature, and for this reason the command against it takes the lead and is the basis of all others. It is of no great consequence to us what kind of false worshipers were practiced by the nations of antiquity, but it is a question of absorbing, of vital moment whether our own nation practices them. What is Masonry with its mock resurrection of Hiram Abiff? Masonic writers tell us that "Hiram Abiff is the Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mythus of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, the Dionysius of the Fraternity of Artificers, and the Atys of the Phrygians, whose passion, death and resurrection were celebrated by these people respectively." But every one knows that these are the names of pagan deities, and if we inquire farther, not of its enemies but of its own standard writers we shall find that its ceremonies are modeled on the rites of ancient heathenism; and, therefore, every Masonic lodge in the land, as well as all minor secret societies, of which it is the mother, break this first commandment "and teach men so."

3. Profanity Forbidden. vs. 7. Every false or extra-judicial oath is profanity. He who goes through the first seven degrees of Masonry takes 69 different oaths that are doubly unlawful (1) because of their nature—they shield crime and enjoin revenge and murder; and (2) because they are illegally administered. The vows and obligations in the lesser orders though not so shocking to the moral sense are still false oaths. They bind men's consciences, because to a tender conscience they have all the sacredness of a solemn vow.

4. The Sabbath Day. vs. 8-11. It is not strange that with such a record as regards the first three commandments the lodge should lead the way in breaking the fourth. From the highest Masonic orders down to the trade unions the Sabbath is systematically violated by Sunday picnics, street parades and heathen ceremonies. It is only the true God who claims the seventh day. A false god means no Sabbath, no rest for the poor and toiling, no shadow of heavenly things brought down to earth; but instead, Mammon's clutch on every day in the week.

From Peloubet's Notes.

(1) The Ten Commandments express the great principles of true life. Hence (2) no outward penalties are attached, as to civil enactments, for they were to be the life principles of freemen, training them to the obedience of love. (3) Hence, also, they are eternal. They never have been outgrown; and never will be. They are obeyed naturally in heaven and by all the good. They have never been repealed (Matt. 5:18), and never can be, unless the very nature of God should be changed. (4) They are comprehensive. "They sweep the whole field of morality." (5) The law is marked by wonderful simplicity and brevity. Says Hamilton, "Such a contrast to our human legislation, our British statute-book, for instance, which it would need an elephant to carry and an Edipus to interpret!"

The First Commandment. (1) Every person must have some God. We all have a tendency to what Carlyle calls hero-worship; we must look up to some one greater and better than we. (2) The test as to who or what is our God is the supreme affection and choice of our souls. This is the Ithuriel's spear of our moral natures. Whatever we love most and choose first is our God. It may be ourselves, or money, or pleasure, or honor, or it may be our heavenly Father. This is the foundation of all true religion and morality.

All that is good and true in our natures demands of us that we worship and love the God who has made us, and redeemed us, and watches over us with loving care.

The Second Commandment forbids (1) the worshiping of God in a false manner. (2) It requires me to render to the true God that kind of worship which is suited to his spiritual nature and unlimited perfections. (3) It is impossible, absurd and wicked to make any outward, visible representation of that God who fills immensity with a spiritual, invisible presence and energy. (4) This command does not forbid the use of sculpture or painting for other purposes, as some have absurdly imagined. (5) I am not allowed to frame, even in my mind, any image or conception of God as possessing form.—Boyd on the Shorter Catechism.

The Third Commandment.—This forbids (1) being false to judicial oaths; promising in the name of God and not fulfilling the promise. It does not forbid a judicial oath, which is of a very different nature from profane swearing, or taking God's name in vain; though even of such oaths Coleridge says, "The more swearing, the more lying." (2) It forbids all careless, trifling use of God's name. Men excuse themselves for swearing by saying that they did not mean anything; but that is the very sin forbidden here. (3) It forbids all irreverent use of the Bible, hymns, sacred things; all joking and punning upon them or connecting funny stories with them. (4) It forbids all irreverence, thoughtless laughing and talking in the house of God. (5) It forbids all empty forms of religion, without its spirit. (6) It forbids all that large class of by-words which may be called "substitutionary oaths." They are the devil's drill ground for profanity, and recruiting office for the army of profane swearers. (7) All mean, narrow, grudging doing for God's cause is profanity lived.—P.

The Fourth Commandment.—"Remember." This word is evidence that the Sabbath was not a new institution. It is as old as the race. The law is written (1) in the Decalogue; (2) in the nature of man. Some say the Jewish Sabbath is abrogated. The Jewish peculiarities are fulfilled as their other ceremonial law. But this command is not abrogated. It represents God as a foolish being to say that he has annulled it from the Decalogue, but continues it in the nature of man. The power of its obligation is that God commands us to keep the Sabbath. "Sabbath." The original word means "rest after labor." The Sabbath is therefore literally "the rest day."

"To keep it holy." This points to something more than mere rest; the day should be set apart to special religious privileges and duties. The commandment was not intended, however, to repress the natural feelings of the heart and exercises of the mind, in so far as these are consistent with the general requirement of rest and worship. In very holiness should make it cheerful. The remembrance of creation completed, and of a Saviour triumphant over the grave, and triumphant for us, should occasion only the most jubilant thoughts. Parents should endeavor to make this day one of sacred and decorous joy in their own use of it and in the estimation of their children.—Johnson. The Sabbath is more restful for being kept religiously.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

George Washington, in a letter written a year before his death: "I preside over no lodge, nor have I been in one more than once or twice during the last thirty years."

President Millard Fillmore, J. C. Spencer and others: "The Masonic fraternity tramples upon our rights, defeats the administration of justice, and bids defiance to every government which it cannot control."

Chief Justice John Marshall: "The institution of Masonry ought to be abandoned as one capable of much evil and incapable of producing any good which might not be effected by safe and open means."

John Quincy Adams: "I am prepared to complete the demonstration before God and man, that the Masonic oaths, obligations and penalties cannot by any possibility be reconciled to the laws of morality, of Christianity, or of the land."

General A. W. Riley: "I hold that the difference between the Christian and a heathen religion is that one has morality and the other has not. And when our churches refuse to speak of such subjects as slavery, liquor-selling and secret societies, they are becoming heathen religions; that is, religions without morals."

Charles Francis Adams: "Every man who takes a Masonic oath forbids himself from divulging any criminal act, unless it might be murder or treason, that may be communicated to him under the seal of fraternal bond; even though such concealment were to prove a burden upon his conscience and a violation of his bounden duty to society and to his God."

Charles Sumner: "I find two powers here in Washington in harmony, and both are antagonistic to our free institutions, and tend to centralization and anarchy—Freemasonry and Slavery; and they must both be destroyed if our country is to be the home of the free, as our ancestors designed it."

Disraeli, Lord Beaconsfield; in conducting the governments of England; the world are not only sovereigns and ministers, but secret orders to be considered, which have agents everywhere—reckless agents, who countenance assassination, and, if necessary, can produce a massacre."

General J. W. Phelps: "All secret organizations are links of one and the same chain which binds men to evil and not to good. The Masonic lodge is the parent source from which all similar modern organizations have emanated and this lodge is now in active operation in every city and considerable village of the country swaying our parties and churches; filling our offices, secular and divine, with its partisans; shaping our political destinies; and teaching a spurious and corrupting morality subversive both of the Christian religion and of free institutions."

Thurlow Weed: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the Anti-Masonic excitement by a sincere desire, first to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next to arrest the great power and dangerous influences of secret societies."

A. M. Sullivan, Irish Leader: "I had not studied in vain the history of secret, oath-bound associations. I regarded them with horror. I knew all that could be said as to their advantages in revolutionizing a country, but even in the firmest and best of hands they had a direct tendency to demoralization and are often on the whole more perilous to society than open tyranny."

Hon. Edward Blake, leader in Canadian Parliament, March, 1884: "I am not in favor of State recognition of any secret societies. I have never joined one, though many of my best friends are members of secret societies. But I believe the tendency of secrecy itself to be injurious. I believe that it brings with it the possibility of evil; I believe that it involves a certain amount of sacrifice of individuality and independence, and gives very great facilities for the misleading of members by designing leaders—very great and mischievous facilities for that purpose." "I believe that a great deal of the trouble, social and political, that has occurred in those countries [Europe and America] is due to secret societies."

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

Charles P. Sumner, father of the Senator, and a renouncing Mason: "Masonic engagements, whether they are called oaths, obligations, or promises, ought never to be made. They are not sanctioned by law and are not obligatory. They make it a Masonic crime to divulge that which the good of the community requires should not be concealed."

Hon. Ezra Butler, ex-Governor of Vermont: "One Masonic obligation requires that a Mason shall vote for a brother in preference to any other person of equal qualifications. Is not this political Masonry? The Masons in Vermont are about one-twentieth part of the freemen and they hold about three-fourths of all the important offices in the State. Is this owing to their superior fitness, or to political Masonry?"

Philo Carpenter: "This saint of God (Moses Stuart) like the old prophets, was satisfied with the institutions and ordinances of God's house, and consequently did not give his influence or aid in supplementing the same with human ordinances and worldly alliances; in other words, he was opposed to secret, oath-bound societies, into which many good men, and even clergymen, have been, and are being 'ensnared.'"

Hon. Cadwallader C. Colden, Mayor of New York and M. C.: "It is true that I have been a Mason a great number of years, and that I have held very high Masonic offices and honors. It is equally true that I have for a long time ceased to have any connection with the institution because I have believed, and do now believe, it is productive of much more evil than good. I have long entertained my present opinion, that a man who would eschew all evil should not be a Freemason."

Horace Greeley: "Many persons were brought to trial on account of the murder of Morgan, but no one was judicially found guilty of murder. It was established by seceding Masons that the oaths—at least in some of the highest degrees—that were administered, and taken by those admitted to Masonic lodges, disqualified them from serving as jurors in any case where a brother Mason of like degree was a party, and his antagonist was not."

Hon. Seth M. Gates, ex-Mason: "Profoundly convinced by long experience and observation that Freemasonry is an evil and pernicious institution. I wish once more in my advanced age to lift my warning voice publicly against it and all kindred organizations, and to beseech Christian men to have no connection or fellowship with them. Jesus is not, and cannot properly be recognized in Freemasonry. He must be ignored in the lodge-room, in its lectures, instructions, and in its prayers."

Hon. Heman Lincoln, ex-Governor, Mass.: "Freemasonry, as a distinct, independent government within our own government, and beyond the control of the laws of the land, by means of its secrecy and the oaths and regulations which its subjects are bound to obey under penalties of death, has occupied much of the attention of the committee. . . . We believe, in the language of the Edinburgh Review, that all secret societies are justly deemed odious, wherever the government is tolerably free, and can only be excused where the existence of arbitrary power, foreign or domestic, leaves no other means of escaping from hopeless slavery."

Gen. Henry Sewall, a companion of Washington: "I was initiated an Entered Apprentice to the Masonic rites in October, 1777, at Albany, soon after the capture of Burgoyne, being then an officer in the American army. . . . I was led by the influence of this 'perfect rule of faith and practice,' during the year 1784, to view speculative Masonry in a shape still more deformed. Its charity appeared to be selfishness, because restricted to its own members; its religion deism because entirely devoid of the Gospel. Its history appeared fabulous; its claims to antiquity unsustainable; its titles fulsome; its rites barbarous and absurd; its oaths extra-judicial, unlawfully imposed and blindly taken, and the penal sanctions annexed, horrid and impious."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE-RY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them every considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhamah Cong. Hamilton, Miss.
Pleasant Ridge Cong. Sandford Co. Ala.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD.

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1887.

THE LUTHERAN HOUSE-FRIEND is the agreeable name of the German organ of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod, whose headquarters are in Chicago. One of the editors, Rev. Mr. Severinghouse, gives in a late number a most dramatic and life-like picture of Knight Templar Thomas, as he appeared in the Congress of churches in March last; his cool assurance at first, running into bluster and impudence; and, under the questioning of Pres. C. A. Blanchard, ending in slinking out of the house like a poodle dog when water is thrown on him. This minister Thomas of LaCrosse, Wis., is a discredit to the Presbyterian name.

Did our readers scan closely two articles on page 3 of the Cynosure of May 5th., one from the Bombay India Watchman, the other from the Chicago Times Mexican correspondent? If not, turn to them and read them carefully. The Times writer says, "Freemasonry has recently seemed to receive a new impetus in Mexico." This is true of the United States, and, doubtless, of every country on the globe. These affect society as earthquakes affect the earth: internal fires, finding vent in eruptions of volcanoes, as human passions find vent in wars and insurrections. The earth was cursed for the sins of men, and it shudders when sin is to be punished. See Rev. 16: 18.

BISHOP DICKSON: THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.

The Telescope of May 25th has an admirable reply to Talmage's sermon from Bishop Dickson; that of Rev. B. T. Roberts only equals it. The Bishop is severer than his wont. He quotes from the Homiletic Monthly charges against Mr. Talmage of "unreliability," and "recklessness." But the article is good tempered and the argument crushing.

The same paper gives a weak argument from Prof. Kephart to prove the "Commission" legal, which tenders a false issue, which is always illogical, and, when intentional, immoral.

If the Commission of twenty-seven whose legality he defends, had said (like honest men) "Freemasonry, as heretofore, is excluded by our Constitution, as it has been by our church from the first." Then they would have said something. But the Commission now say nothing. They drop a plain, honest clause made by honest, upright men, viz., that Freemasonry must not be tolerated in the church, and substitute a clause giving the General Conference power to exclude such secret societies as are "contrary to the Word of God," without saying there is such a secret society on earth, or ever was! As Mohammed dodged the question of eating pork, so the Commissioners treat Masonry, an order which is secret; and so despises Christ's example, which promises salvation to its members without Christ or the Holy Ghost; which swears its members to have their throats cut if they break its by-laws; which caricatures the Burning Bush, and allows, nay, requires grog-selling lodge masters to say, "I am that I am;" which practices infant baptism as they say the heathen did before the pyramids; and mocks and mimics the Lord's Supper, by killing and eating the "paschal lamb." All these facts lie open on the pages of Masonic books, now printed and used as authority in Masonic lodges. Even so low down as the third degree of the universal Blue Lodge, Christ is insulted and the resurrection caricatured by the force of raising Hiram Abiff by the "grip" of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, which is a direct blasphemous insult to Christ as the raiser of the dead.

Now the twenty-seven Commissioners have taken out the condemnation of this lodge from the constitution of the church, and given the General Conference power to do what? "To legislate against secret societies which are contrary to the Word of God," without saying there are any such secret societies, or, if any, what? This makes a sporadic constitution, tolerating Masonry where that prevails; Odd-fellowship, with its chains, masks and skeleton, where it prevails; the false Grand Army; the secret temperance lodges; and the Knights of Labor led by papists, etc., for all these are ready to swear their secret lodges "are not contrary to the Word of God."

The Commissioners do this to allow Masons unchallenged in city churches. They say they wish to make their church popular in cities, and they know that, till the lodge falls, they cannot do this while they exclude Masons, though they admit all the others. If they were honest men they would say: "We intend Masonry shall have a quiet lodgement in our churches where that lodge is popular," for that is what their constitution provides for in practice.

Mohammed wanted to take in the Christ-hating Jews, at the same time he wanted those Christians who ate pork. So he said, as Cowper gives it:

"There is a part in every swine
No friend or follower of mine
May eat, whatever his inclination,
On pain of excommunication."

But he did not say what the prohibited part was, as the twenty-seven do not say what lodge is prohibited. So, as these men swallow, by their non-committal constitution, the whole secret lodge system. In practice, they go the "whole hog."

"Mohammedans eat up the hog."

"With sophistry their sauce they sweeten,
And quite from tail to snout 'tis eaten."

Bishop Weaver wrote cosy letters to the Harrisburg paper, while Warner, who is a Mason, was its defender and moved to have it issued at Dayton, when every one knew it was supported by Masons. Mr. Shuey employed lodgement to work on the Telescope when plenty of Brethren printers could have been had; and when he was told of young men, members of Summit street church, who were joining the Odd-fellows, and requested him to say or do something against it by kind advice to the pastor, he refused.

Now we do not "judge" these brethren. God will do that. But as Paul withstood Peter in a like case, "because he was to be blamed," so the Cynosure withstands them; and we affectionately entreat them to cast off the disguise they wear, and not deceive the brethren who trust them and love them; and who were made United Brethren by the Holy Ghost at Isaac Long's barn, a hundred years ago, and whose constitution has kept good the glorious testimony against devil-worship which these Commissioners are now throwing away.

THE CHINESE AT HOME AND ABROAD.

The report of Rev. N. R. Johnston, missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian church to the Chinese in Oakland, California, is not only an interesting document in itself, because of its varied information respecting the mission work on the coast, but also is it valuable for its suggestions respecting the Chinese already in America, and their influence upon the uncounted millions in their native land.

The almost universal rage against the Chinese, all up and down the Pacific Coast a year ago, has subsided as quickly as it arose, like an inflated bubble, blown up by the bankrupt preacher and Freemason, Ravlin, and the vulgar demagogue, O'Donnell, king of hoodlums, and philosopher and high priest of the Sand lots. The cowardly persecution led by these men, and such as they, culminated in massacre and pillage in many places, and in San Francisco in beating, kicking and stoning every Chinaman found alone on the street. Chinese women on their way to the mission had the rings torn from their ears, windows of Chinese schools were broken and filth thrown into the rooms. But when the anti-Chinese lodges began a systematic boycott and persecution of business men who in any way showed the Chinese a favor, they went a step too far and their work broke down. A reaction has followed, and the condition of the Chinese is now much improved, though there is yet some suffering for want of employment. There are seven Chinese missions in California: the Reformed Presbyterian in Oakland; the United Presbyterian in Los Angeles under Rev. J. C. Nevin, and five in San Francisco under different denominations. Of the Oakland mission, Mr. Johnston says in his report:

"Since my last year's report I have baptized five converts, three in May, and two in January of this year. And in accordance with the direction of last Synod I dispensed the sacrament of the Supper to the Chinese Christians of the mission. During the year the condition of the mission has not changed very much; and yet in no previous year has it been in such good working order, so regularly attended, and so free from annoyance."

"The roll of attendance in the night schools during the past year numbers one hundred and forty-eight."

"We are now making the experiment of street preaching at the Chinese quarters on Sabbath afternoons. So many of the heathen who gather there cannot understand English preaching, I can give them the Gospel only through the helper as interpreter. He himself, however, is a pretty good lay evangelist, and he also speaks to the people. How much of the seed sown will grow up to bear fruit in the salvation of souls, we may never know."

In connection with these notices of the condition of Chinamen in this country, our readers will be interested to know the views of a Presbyterian missionary in Canton, A. A. Fulton, who writes to the Interior of the condition of Americans in China. There are five hundred of our countrymen in that land, he says, nearly one-half of whom are missionaries. Instead of being free to settle in the empire, they are restricted to a dozen treaty forts, most of them near the coast. They may travel with a passport which has several restrictive conditions. He considers himself fortunate if he returns from a trip without being stoned. The officials seem anxious to interpose objections to the missionary, refusing protection and countenancing the vexatious interference of the people. Last year he was driven out from a district city and the houses occupied by the mission looted and burned. French priests driven out at the same time soon returned protected by official proclamation. French, English and German missionaries are allowed in the interior, but Americans cannot live outside a treaty fort.

Mr. Fulton complains that the treaty rights of Americans are sadly disregarded except at the caprice of a suspicious and proud people, who are led by a bigoted literary class, against whose influence, and the countless superstitions fostered by the priests it is almost impossible to contend under the present restrictions.

These difficulties we hope will not be of long duration, as American officials are already attempting to remove them and gain for American missionaries the privilege of publishing the Gospel of Christ freely among the benighted millions of China.

GOV. ST. JOHN.

Early in the campaign of 1884, months before the election, the Wesleyan Methodist insisted that St. John confessed to Agent Kinney that he was a Mason, and in living connection with the Good Templars and Grand Army; and Superintendent B. T. Roberts went strong for the Republican party, to keep out the "secesh" Democrats. These things and more like them hurt, for a time, the confidence of many of our best subscribers in the fidelity and consistency of the Cynosure.

Some time later Gov. St. John wrote to Bro. Disette of Sabatha, Kansas, that he had not been in a Masonic lodge for some eighteen or twenty years, and added the material fact, "I never shall be in another." He has also said the same things of the Good Templars and Grand Army. We learn that there has been recent correspondence between him and Bro. Disette, which the latter is free to publish. If we get this correspondence we will at once lay it before our readers.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman was too unwell to continue work in Philadelphia last week, and returned to Washington for a brief rest, hoping to rejoin Bro. Cole early this week.

—I. R. B. Arnold with his company were at Rochelle, Illinois, expecting to go on to Oregon by Wednesday. He urges that a colporteur be sent out to make the most of the good effect left in the communities he visits.

—Secretary Stoddard went to Michigan on business for the N. C. Association last week, making his first stop in Ypsilanti, where he found seven churches and thirteen lodges. He purposed calling upon the pastors and putting out some tracts and other literature through the city before passing on.

—Among the commissioners to the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church meeting last week in Omaha we notice the names of Rev. Dr. T. E. Bliss of Denver, Rev. Wm. Morrow from near Chicago, and Rev. George W. Bainum from Greencastle, Ind. Also from Ohio appear the names of Dr. Geo. P. Hays and Revs. Cartelony and Houston, which have appeared in our Cincinnati letters.

—Some very interesting statistics of the present strength of the various religious bodies and their progress during the last four years have been compiled by the Independent. From this synopsis it appears that the evangelical denominations have added 1,684,420 to their membership within four years, besides making up for all losses by death or dismissal. That represents a gain of one and six-tenths per cent on the total membership of four years ago.

—The seventy-fifth annual commencement of the Princeton Theological Seminary took place on Tuesday, May 10. Fifty-seven students received diplomas. An address was read by Prof. R. E. Thompson of the University of Pennsylvania, upon the "Christian Aspects of Labor and Capital." The discussion following was joined in by Elliot F. Sheppard, Governor Beaver and Dr. McCosh, who all favored co-operation.

—The Daily News of this city printed Friday a long letter from its Washington correspondent reporting Senator Pomeroy's case, which our readers had last week from Mr. Pomeroy. The correspondent also mentions other cases of remarkable cure, and gives an interview with the physician whose discovery has been so beneficial in them all. This discovery is a simple remedy which operates on the nerves of the stomach, overcoming the sensation of hunger.

—Cyrus Smith of DeKalb, Iowa, answers through the Cynosure a letter from State Agent Hawley asking that he make an effort to collect funds for the State work, as there is pressing need. Bro. Smith is unable to go about such a work at present as erysipelas has set in upon a leg which was broken last winter. He wishes, however, to urge all friends in the State to aid the work promptly and as much as they are able, sending to the treasurer, James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Iowa.

—Elder Kimball of the Christian Witness writes us that the notice of Mrs. Lemuels of Allegheny City, who offered in last Cynosure to send out a work on infidelity, is a fraud, and advises everybody to beware. We hope, however, that a notice from J. B. Mitchell of Defiance, Ohio, "colporteur of the American Tract Society," is genuine. He asks benevolent people for donations of religious papers and books for destitute families whom he visits, and especially to send to Africa. He has a call from Liberia for 5,000 volumes.

—Pastor F. L. Grundtvig, of Clinton, Iowa, has just had issued from the Danish press at Cedar Falls, Iowa, a pamphlet in that language on the lodge entitled "The Church of Jesus Christ and the Idolatrous Societies." In our ignorance of the Danish, the author has kindly translated some of the chapter headings by which we may give some idea of the plan of the work. These are: "Idolatrous Societies," "Knowledge of the Societies," "Christians in the Societies," "Freemasonry," "Odd-fellowship," "Danish Brotherhood," "The Danish Church and Idolatrous Societies," "Sermon of David Pease." These titles suggest the scope of the discussion, and all who know Mr. Grundtvig's intelligence and zeal, need not be told that the questions considered are ably treated. The Danish churches must be congratulated in having so able a champion of the truth to battle against their insidious enemy.

—The United Presbyterian General Assembly is meeting in Philadelphia, and is attended by brethren Hinman and Cole. The latter was accorded the privilege of addressing the Assembly on Friday last. The music question developed a singular contest for moderator, two of the ablest ministers of the denomination being nominated, Dr. J. G. Carson, of Zenia, Ohio, and Dr. M. M. Gibson, of San Francisco. A year ago when the former was visiting San Francisco and cordially fraternizing with Dr. Gibson, it was probably farthest from their thoughts that they should be selected to lead opposing interests in their church. The very fact that their leaders are so near together in fellowship and sympathy shows that the two parties made by the organ are not very far apart after all. The choice of the Assembly fell on Dr. Gibson, than whom an abler presiding officer it would be hard to find unless it be Dr. Carson.

—In addition to the urgent letter of Rev. Mr. Milligan requesting the publication of the address which appears on another page, Rev. William Morrow, who represents the Presbyterians on the permanent committee of the Christian Congress, and Joseph Cook, the well-known Boston lecturer, with others, have made special requests that this address be put in type. There are two or three other papers from the Congress which have not yet been printed. The Conservator published that of Rev. Halleck Floyd; the American, Bro. Bailey's; Rev. B. T. Roberts's appeared, we believe, in the Free Methodist, and Rev. N. Wardner's in the Westeyan. The Christian Worker sent for Pres. C. A. Blanchard's address on the labor question; a German paper of this city gave Rev. Mr. Grunert's address in the original; and the Cynosure has printed the papers of Pres. Fairchild, and Rev. Drs. Grunert, French and Johnson; and if the executive committee does not decide to publish, we shall secure, if possible, all the papers yet unprinted and give them duly to our readers.

REFORM NEWS.

THE STAID CITY OF BROTHERLY LOVE.

BRETHREN HINMAN AND COLE AMONG THE MINISTERS AT PHILADELPHIA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A week in Philadelphia develops the fact that whatever may be men's convictions, the one constant, overshadowing power to which all, with but few exceptions, yield obedience, is the power of the lodge. There is much, and, I believe, increasing anti-secrecy sentiment in the city, but in the main it is not aggressive. Denominational interests are regarded as of paramount importance, and these are supposed to be endangered by whatever antagonizes public opinion. There are multitudes here who with their mouth show much love, "but whose heart goeth after covetousness." It is not probable that Philadelphia is worse than other cities, only it is more conservative.

Just now there is in session the General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church of North America. This is the wing which separated from their brethren in 1883 on account of the question of voting for National or State officers. This body (known as New School) favored voting; the other branch, though equally interested in national affairs, do not think it right to support the Constitution or to vote for others to do so. It would be difficult to find a body more learned, pious, and dignified than those now in session here. They are reformers, too, but it is feared that with them as with others, the supposed interests of the denomination are unconsciously given precedence over everything else. I was, however, treated with great courtesy. A letter from Dr. Stevenson introduced me, and a few minutes were given me to present the claims of the N. C. A. The following resolution was then introduced and passed without dissent:

Resolved, That General Synod has heard with satisfaction the remarks of the Rev. H. A. Hinman, representative of the Christian Association, and that we express our hearty sympathy, according to our long established principle, with this Association in its opposition to secret societies.

There is also in session the Philadelphia Annual Conference of the African M. E. Zion church. I have had the privilege of attending some of its sessions, and find that it includes many able men, some of fine culture. I was greatly impressed with a fine speech by Prof. Sarcola of Salisbury College, N. C. But while I appreciated his talent it was sad to me that he made use of Masonic language, and expected it to be understood. "Ministers" in North Carolina, he said, were expected "to be worthy and well qualified, duly and truly prepared." I was, on the whole, much pleased with the report on temperance which was presented by a young man who permitted me to copy it, and which shows the drift of public opinion among the colored Christians, both of the North and South. Bro. Cole was accorded a hearing before the Conference, but of that he will speak. We are distributing a good supply of literature among the members of both the Synod and the Conference.

FROM THE IOWA LECTURER.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Finding no open door for lectures in Scranton I went to Churdan and preached once and lectured twice in a hall occupied by our Free Methodist friends. From there I went to Marshalltown and called upon that tried and true friend of reform, Bro. A. M. Miller of the United Presbyterian church. He and his aged father-in-law are cheerful supporters of the Iowa Christian Association. Being furnished with a horse and buggy, I drove to Mr. Coppock's, who is a veteran supporter of our reform. I then drove to Quarry and saw C. C. Bratt, Esq., who subscribed for the Cynosure and assured me that he would support the reform work.

From Marshalltown I went to Cedar Rapids, intending to go six miles into the country to Samuel Heaton's. I stopped over night with N. Bourne. Failing to get a conveyance to Mr. Heaton's I went on to Masonville. Here I preached once, and also once at Mount Hope. I made arrangements for two lectures at Masonville, and for two at Quasqueton, in Buchanan county, and for two at the Hoover church in the same county. I then went to Vinton, in Benton county, and have arranged to speak in the Covenantant church six miles from Vinton.

The evenings are getting so short, and the people so busy, that I will not push the lecture work so hard, for awhile, as during the lecture season proper. There are important interests connected with the Iowa reform work that can be better promoted by personal visitations than in any other way. Though the evenings are short for lectures, the days are long for personal effort, to secure practical friends and supporters of the reform. Give me your prayers and sympathy and hearty co-operation while I labor to ensure the success of the reform. C. F. HAWLEY.

AN IMPORTANT EDUCATIONAL WORK.

The annual meeting of the Trustees of the Slater Fund for the Promotion of Education Among the Freedmen was held lately at Old Point Comfort, Va. The President of the Board, R. B. Hayes, of Ohio, was in the chair. The other members present were Senator Colquitt, of Georgia; Rev. Dr. Boyce, of Kentucky; Messrs. W. E. Dodge and John A. Stewart, of New York; D. C. Gilman, of Maryland, and W. A. Slater, of Connecticut. From the report of the General Agent, Dr. Haygood, of Georgia, it appears that $40,000 has been disbursed during the past year from the income of the fund, an advance of $10,000 upon the disbursements of the year before. Forty-two schools, most of them training places for teachers, have been aided during the year in sums varying from $300 to $3,000. The report of the Treasurer shows that the original capital of the fund, $1,000,000, has been slightly augmented, and its securities are well invested. The session of the Board was devoted to a consideration of the wants of the various schools receiving aid, and an aggregate allowance of $45,000 was made for the years 1887-8. Among the schools receiving aid in industrial training is the Slater School at Knoxville, Tennessee, conducted by Miss Austin. Pres. Haygood has also promised Rev. Byron Gunner $1,000 for the New Iberia School so soon as it shall be established.

—It is one of the landmarks of Freemasonry that a man should never be solicited to join the lodge. "Of your own free will and accord," and "unbiased by friends and uninfluenced by mercenary motives," are standing requisites to admission in the questions put to the candidate before he is unclad for the first degree. But Masons know these laws are universally violated, and occasionally as much is acknowledged by the lodge journals. One of them tells a story of a barber who was being made an Entered Apprentice, and having not yet learned the great Masonic virtue of deception, when he was asked the usual question, "Brother X—, in your present condition what do you most desire?" he answered with bland innocence, "More barbering!" The fact came out that a zealous Mason, proselyting for the order, held out the great inducement that if he would join the Masons, his business would be greatly increased by the patronage of the order. Such hopes of pecuniary advantage are the mainstay of all secret orders; without these hopes, and unless they were in some degree fulfilled, the lodge would soon fall into decay.

The Treasury Department at Washington has decided adversely on the application to admit free of duty a dragon, 150 feet long, representing the god "Ho Wong," and intended for a Joss house in San Francisco. The figure is composed of paper, silk, metal, glass, feathers, tinsel and goat's hair. The application is based on the provisions of law for the free entry of "regalia and gems, statues and specimens of sculpture, where specially imported in good faith for the use of any society incorporated or established for religious purposes." The Department held that the image is not included in the list of articles above mentioned, and is, therefore, not entitled to free entry. We are at a loss to see by what method of reasoning, from the generally accepted premises, the government reached this decision. If this nation knows no distinction between Christianity and heathenism, and stands no more in connection with the one than with the other, then by what right do its servants discriminate between a Chinese idol and a lectern or altar-piece for an Episcopal church? Yet the public mind instinctively feels that there is a difference; that a case of English Bibles for use in a Christian sanctuary, and a "dragon" intended to be worshiped, are not on the same plane before our laws. The decision of the Department will be felt to be right so far as it goes, but it cannot be deduced from the premises which lie vaguely in the popular mind. This is a Christian nation, historically, and actually, in some important senses. It ought not, therefore, to hesitate to say so, and to provide that its action on all questions touching religion shall be in accordance with the religion of Jesus Christ.—Statesman.

The track of a cyclone will not be more apparent than the progress of the people to a higher standard and plane of civilization, when prohibition with a party committed to its interests is in the ascendancy.

THE HOME.

"IT IS WRITTEN."

Dost thou falter, Christian soldier,
In the contest fierce and strong!
Do thy hopes begin to wither
That the victory waits so long!
Then arouse! nor sleep, nor slumber,
Gird thy heavenly armor on;
Look thee to thy Captain's orders,
For 'tis written, "Be thou strong."

Dost thou tremble, Christian sailor,
While the billows round thee roll?
Does thy faith begin to falter,
Dark forebodings fill thy soul?
Surely thou hast not forgotten
That the waves obey His will;
And though wild be the commotion,
It is written, "Peace, be still!"

Art thou fainting, Christian worker,
'Neath the burden of the day?
Mid the strife, the heat, the labor,
Do thy zeal and strength give way?
Oh, take courage, never faltering,
Never let it be forgot,
In the Word of God 'tis written,
"We shall reap if we faint not."

Christ has "trod the way before thee,"
All the weary journey through;
His dear feet, all torn and bleeding,
Pressed the thorns that now pierce you;
Then press onward, never fearing,
Hope and faith and courage take,
And remember that 'tis written,
"I will never thee forsake."

Soldier, sailor, worker, pilgrim,
To His Word and promise hie;
Then in radiant light 'tis written,
"I will guide thee with mine eye."
And to him that overcometh,
Give I "crowns of glory" bright,
"Palms of victory," and 'tis written,
"They shall walk with me in white."

WHERE DID MOSES GET THAT LAW?

An infidel, wishing to examine into the truth of the Christian religion, inquired of an elder of the Presbyterian church as follows: "What books, sir, would you advise me to read?" "The Bible," said the elder. "I believe you do not understand me," resumed the unbeliever, surprised in his turn; "I wish to investigate the truth of the Bible." "I would advise you, sir," repeated the elder, "to read the Bible; and," he continued, "I will give you my reasons. Most infidels are very ignorant of the Scriptures. Now, to reason on any subject with correctness, we must understand that about which we reason. In the next place, I consider the internal evidence of the truth of the Scriptures stronger than the external." "And where shall I begin?" inquired the unbeliever; "at the New Testament?" "No," said the elder, "at the beginning—at Genesis."

One evening the elder called and found the unbeliever at his house or office, walking the room with a dejected look, his mind apparently absorbed in thought. He continued, not noticing that any one had come in, busily to trace and retrace his steps. The elder at length spoke:

"You seem, sir," said he, "to be in a brown study; of what are you thinking?" "I have been reading," replied the infidel, "the moral law." "Well, what do you think of it?" asked the elder. "I will tell you what I used to think," answered the infidel. "I supposed that Moses was the leader of a horde of banditti; that, having a strong mind, he acquired great influence over a superstitious people; and that on Mount Sinai he played off some sort of fire-works, to the amazement of his ignorant followers, who imagined, in their mingled fear and superstition, that the exhibition was supernatural." "But what do you think now?" interposed the elder. "I have been looking," said the infidel, "into the nature of that law. I have been trying to see whether I could add anything to it, or take anything from it, so as to make it better. Sir, I cannot. It is perfect."

"The first commandment," continued he, "directs us to make the Creator the object of supreme love and reverence. That is right. If he be our Creator, Preserver and supreme Benefactor, we ought to treat him, and none other as such. The second forbids idolatry. That certainly is right. The third forbids profaneness. The fourth fixes a time for religious worship. If there is a God, he ought surely to be worshipped. It is suitable that there should be an outward homage, significant of our inward regard. If God be worshipped, it is proper that some time be set apart for that purpose, when all may worship him harmoniously and without interruption. One day in seven is certainly not too much, and I do not know that it is too little. The fifth defines the peculiar duties arising from the family relations. Injuries to our neighbor are then classified by the moral law. They are divided into offences against life, chastity, property, and character; and," said he, applying a legal idea with legal acuteness, "I notice that the greatest offence in each class is expressly forbidden. Thus, the greatest injury to life is murder; to chastity, adultery; to property, theft; to character, perjury. Now the greatest offence must include the less of the same kind. Murder must include every injury to life; adultery, every injury to purity; and so of the rest. And the moral code is closed and perfected by a command forbidding every improper desire in regard to our neighbor."

"I have been pondering," he proceeded, "where did Moses get that law? I have read history; the Egyptians and adjacent nations were idolaters; so were the Greeks and Romans; and the wisest and best Greeks and Romans never gave a code of morals like this. Where did Moses get this law, which surpasses the wisdom and philosophy of the most enlightened ages? He lived at a period comparatively barbarous; but he has given a law in which the learning and sagacity of all subsequent time can detect no flaw. Where did he get it? He could not have soared so far above his age as to have devised it himself. I am satisfied where he obtained it. It came from heaven. I am convinced of the truth of the religion of the Bible."—Selected.

SAD BUT TRUE.

It is sad to think that there are many who eagerly respond to any objection that is urged against the perfect credibility and infallible inspiration of the Bible. They instantly leap to the conclusion that those who assail its authority must be right, and its defenders wrong. Their natural sympathies are with the "higher criticism" and other forms of skepticism, simply because their natural sympathies are not with God and his Word.

A gentleman who professes to be a Christian and claims to be a great reader, came not long ago in a state of excitement, to a minister, exclaiming: "I have just found a wonderful book in the library. It is a book by Prof. Robertson Smith of Scotland, who shows that the laws of Leviticus were unknown to the Jews for a thousand years after Moses, and that Deuteronomy was written at a period much later than his day."

The minister looked at him a moment, and quietly said: "What is it in you that instantly takes sides against God's Word? You did not inquire whether Prof. Robertson Smith had been utterly refuted and routed, but immediately jumped to the conclusion that he is right."

"I did not know," the man sullenly answered, "that any one had replied to him."

"Just so; you did not know, and you did not care to ask. Now, let me inform you that Prof. Green of Princeton, to say nothing of Hengstenberg and others, whose scholarship is so far beyond that of young Smith, that it is unworthy to untie their shoe-latchet, has proved that all his talk about Leviticus and Deuteronomy is the merest trash."

He is the representative of a large class who eagerly take up with anything that promises to shake the faith of men in the Scriptures. They hope to find the old Book false, because it bears so hard upon them in their unsaved state; and yet, if it were proved false, they would be left in an infinitely more pitiable condition to grope through darkness to an unknown eternity. But he that is brought to bow his proud will at the foot of the cross, and to accept of pardon as the unmerited gift of God, through Jesus Christ our Lord, can turn to the inspired Scriptures as the unfailing fountain of wisdom, strength and consolation; and the more he resorts to them, the more surely will he see that "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."—Rev. James H. Brooks, D. D.

The great German scholar, Prof. Dr. De Wette, furnished Theodore Parker, and almost all modern infidels of that school, with the weapons with which they attack the faith of the Christian church. But this same Dr. Wette, called the "universal doubter," was so fortunate as to marry an eminently holy and lovely Christian lady, and the influence of her merciful spirit and life led to a wondrous change in all his thought and teaching. In his last commentary we find these memorable words: "Only this I know; in no other is there salvation, except in the name of Jesus Christ, and him crucified, and for the human race there is nothing higher than the God-man realized in him, and the kingdom of God planted in him."

THE HONORED AND REJECTED BOOK.

The wisecracks in the church laugh with infidelity at the story of Jonah and the great fish; but Jesus declares that it is true (Matt. 12: 40). They think it impossible that Sodom and Gomorrah could have been destroyed by a storm of fire and brimstone; but Jesus declares that it is true (Luke 17: 29-32). They refuse to receive as credible the history of Elijah and Elisha; but Jesus declares that it is true (Luke 4: 25-27). They inform us that Abraham was a myth; but Jesus declares that he was born and existed (Luke 13: 16, 28; John 8: 39, 58). They regard the account of the creation of man and woman, and of Abel's death, as innocent nursery tales designed to point a moral; but Jesus declares they are narratives of facts (Matt. 19: 4, 5; 23: 35). They assure us that Leviticus and Deuteronomy were not written until the times of Josiah and Ezra; but Jesus, quoting from both of them, declares that they were written by Moses (Matt. 8: 4; 19: 7, 8).

Thus it is with all the other passages which the theory of inspired thoughts, and uninspired words, linked as it always is with "the higher criticism," has dared to call in question. It would seem as if the Holy Ghost, foreseeing the frightful errors of these last days, had made special provision to put believers on their guard, by causing the parts of the Old Testament most exposed to assault, to be reproduced and to be sanctioned in the New. But the mischief already done by this abominable theory is incalculable, and it will produce a harvest of everlasting woe.—Faithful Witness.

A QUESTION FOR A LAWYER.

While Hopu, a young Sandwich Islander, was in this country, he spent an evening in company where an infidel lawyer tried to puzzle him with difficult questions. At length Hopu said: "I am a poor heathen boy. It is not strange that my blunders in English should amuse you. But soon there will be a larger meeting than this. We shall all be there. They will ask us only one question, namely, 'Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' Now, sir, I think I shall say, yes. What will you say, sir?" When he had stopped all present were silent. At length the lawyer said as the evening was far gone they had better conclude it with prayer, and proposed that the native should pray. He did so; and as he poured out his heart to God, the lawyer could not conceal his feelings. Tears started from his eyes, and he sobbed aloud. All present wept, too, and when they had separated the words, "What will you say, sir?" followed the lawyer home, and did not leave him till they brought him to the Saviour.—Word of Life.

JUNE.

O June! delicious month of June!
When winds and birds all sing in tune;
When in the meadows swarm the bees
And hum their drowsy melodies
While pillaging the buttercup,
To store the golden honey up;
O June! the month of bluest skies,
Dear to the pilgrim butterflies,
Who seem gay-colored leaves astray,
Blown down the tides of amber day;
O June! the month of merry song,
Of shadow brief, of sunshine long;
All things on earth love you the best,—
The bird who carols near his nest;
The wind that wakes and, snoring, blows
The spicy perfume of the rose;
And bee, who sounds his muffled horn
To celebrate the dewy morn;
And even all the stars above
At night are happier for love,
As if the mellow notes of mirth
Were wafted to them from the earth.
O June! such music haunts your name;
With you the summer's chorus came!

—St. Nicholas.

ASKING CHILDREN ABOUT THE SERMON.

I think a great deal can be accomplished with very little trouble by questioning children after they come home from church and inciting them to bring as much account as they can of what they have heard. Indeed, I would advocate going even farther and rewarding them for thus paying attention and remembering something.

I would suggest doing this from the very beginning of their church-going, so that the habit of inattention might never be formed. To this day that habit, early acquired, clings to me. I generally lose the text before I think to fix my mind on the preacher, and slowly or never find out what it was, so missing often much of the meaning of the sermon, while the prayers also are too apt to slip by me. I was taken to church as far back as I can remember, and I never dreamed of attending to any part of the service, only of enduring to the end. I think it would have been less irksome had I been inspired with an ambition to listen; and I am quite sure that the habit of listening would have been learned several years sooner and would be stronger now.

But this plan unwisely carried out would do harm. If children expected to be frowned on, perhaps scolded, on their return from church if not found more or less well informed as to the sermon or chapter, it would of course make Sunday and church the more to be disliked, and this evil might well be greater than the good gained.—Am. Messenger.

FAITHFUL TO HIS WORD.

George G. Lake, the benevolent merchant of New York, whose death has been recently reported, came to the great city from Connecticut and obtained employment as an errand boy in a store in Catharine street. He was an errand boy of the old-fashioned kind, one who received two dollars a week wages, slept on or under the counter of the store, and lived chiefly on crackers and cheese. But he was a good boy, attended to business and made friends. In a year or two he obtained a better place, in a better store, in a better street, where he advanced rapidly from one post to another until, at nineteen, he was he was placed in charge of the silk department, the highest position in the store.

Salaries at that period were so small that this smart young man thought himself lucky in getting $400 a year, and he engaged to remain four years in the service of the firm at that rate of wages.

As the head of the silk counters he had frequently to visit a great importing house, to replenish the stock of his own firm, and there he attracted notice by his excellent taste in selecting silks, and his sound judgment as to what patterns would be likely to please people.

One day he was asked to step into the counting-room of the importing house, where one of the partners invited him to enter their service at $1,000 the first year, $2,000 the second and $3,000 afterward. The young man replied that he had just made a contract with his employers for four years at eight dollars per week.

"That contract was only verbal, I suppose," said the merchant.

"I never break contracts," replied the clerk, "whether verbal or not."

So he went back to his silks in the old store and to his eight dollars a week. He served out his four years faithfully. At the end of the period he had made himself the indispensable man to his employers, who offered him $10,000 a year or a partnership. He took the salary, and after some years entered the firm, of which in due time, by the retirement of his partners, he became the head.

He made a large fortune in the business, from which he retired at an early age and spent the remainder of his days in happy and honorable retirement, a good patriot, good Christian and a wisely benevolent man. The solace and charm of his old age was music, of which he was a warm lover and munificent patron.—Youth's Companion.

BEARDING LION AND LIONESS.

Many an old man can recall the glow with which he first declaimed the lines from Marmion:

"And dar'st thou then
To beard the lion in his den,
The Douglas in his hall?"

The lamented martyr of Equatorial Africa, Bishop Hannington, once illustrated those lines by a deed of cool, calm courage, such as only he could manifest from whom all fear had departed.

He was botanizing one day, about a mile from his African camp, when he saw an animal moving through the dense mimosa scrub. He fired; the animal fell, and proved to be a large lion's cub.

The bishop's gun-bearer, a negro, seeing the prey and knowing what would follow, ran away, shouting, "Run, banana, run!" The shout was accented by a double roar. Looking around, Hannington saw a lion and a lioness bounding towards him.

Had he ran, he would have been overtaken and torn to pieces. He deliberately faced the enraged beasts. They as suddenly checked themselves, stood still, and glared upon the bold man.

Only a few paces separated Hannington from the bereaved lion and lioness, but he kept his eyes fixed upon their yellow orbs, and, placing one foot slowly behind the other, backed away, until he had placed a hundred yards between himself and the transfixed beasts.

Then he turned and walked quietly away, musing as to how he should secure the skin of the cub he had killed. Turning again, he retraced his steps until he was near enough to see the lion and the lioness walking around their dead cub, licking its body and filling the air with their growlings.

At this moment an unknown flower caught his eye. He plucked it, took out his note-book, pressed the flower between the leaves, and classified it as far as he was able.

Then he ran forward a few paces, threw up his arms and shouted. The lions stopped, looked up, turned tail and bounded away. They had never encountered such a fearless antagonist before. Hannington shouldered the cub, and carried it until he met his runaway gun-bearer.

Giving him a good scolding for fleeing, he made him drag the carcass to the camp. The boy walked in terror, looking behind him every moment, for he expected to see the lions bounding after him. He could not sleep for two or three nights afterwards, feeling sure the lions would come into camp to seek their cub.

The natives of the village were stirred with admiration of the white man who had dared to kill "a child of the lion." It was far more dangerous, they said, than to kill the lion's mate.

The ants destroyed the cub's skin, but the tuft at the end of its tail is still preserved as a trophy of one of the coolest and bravest acts ever performed by a man.—Youth's Companion.

TEMPERANCE.

THE TREATING HABIT.

HENRY CARLETON OFFERS SOME SUGGESTIONS.

If we Americans treat each other to entirely superfluous drinks, why not to groceries, articles of clothing, mutton chops, and hardware? I wonder how it would work in the way of medicine. I go into a drug store for a quinine pill. I meet there my friend Lucian Van Bumblebug, who is in search of a porous plaster. Lucian insists upon my taking the pill with him. I do so. Lucian must then take another plaster with me. He does so. In comes Freddie de Royster for his noonday dose of cod-liver oil. He swears he cannot dose himself alone. I tell him I have already had two pills and am feeling pretty comfortable, but Freddie insists. I introduce Van Bumblebug with his double plasters. Freddie sets them up. I get another pill, Van a third plaster, and Freddie all the cod grease his breathing machinery really needs. Van Bumblebug then, being a good fellow, orders another fish toddy for Freddie, a fourth pill for me, and an entirely superfluous plaster for himself. It is now incumbent on me to set them up in Fred's honor, and we get another dose all round. Just at this juncture in comes jolly George Bolivar, who has the jumping toothache, and two jolly friends with the heart disease. He introduces me to his friends, I introduce him to my friends, and then the real pleasure of the day begins. Van Bumblebug can't stand another plaster and tries a little colchicum; I vary the pills with a little aconite and ginger; Freddie is full of cod-liver oil to the ears, but takes podophyllin straight—we have the pleasantest sort of a time, sample every drug in the shop, and go home with seventeen distinct symptoms, and smelling like a case of cholera.

Now, really, why should Lucian, in the first place, demand the right to pay for my pill? It can save me nothing, for I am compelled by the sacred laws of Treat to at once insist on his taking a second plaster. Freddie has weak lungs, and needed only one touch of cod liver; but before he leaves we pump him so full he feels like a Standard Oil Company. There is something wrong in this system. I know there is something wrong with my system next day. Isn't it a little absurd? The stolid Englishman pays for his own drink. So does the chattering Frenchman, and the German would be insulted if you settled for his beer in a public place. The custom is purely American and simply a villainy. If I wish one noonday drink, and on entering the place find there six men I know but slightly, why should any one of them claim the right to place me under an obligation? To discharge the obligation I must take another drink and pay for seven. There is no hospitality on either side. I give Dr. Crosby this pointer: Get 1,000 young men to paste in their hats a resolution neither to treat or be treated, and I believe more sobriety will result than would have come from his lamented and vetoed bill.—N. Y. World.

SNATCHED FROM DEATH.

A correspondent of our earnest, pious, and fearless neighbor, the Bible Banner of Chicago, writes of a happy deliverance from Satan's bondage which he beheld when lately visiting the city:

The most remarkable display of God's power to save, that I ever witnessed, occurred in Chicago on the occasion of my visit. A fine, large man, with Southern aspect, intoxicated, approached me on Madison street. He was in a forlorn and pitiable condition. His speech showed him to be quite refined and well educated. He was without home, friends, or money, and was contemplating suicide. He informed me that he was a lawyer and a colonel, but he had no hope, and that to-morrow's papers would report his death by suicide. I requested the colonel to halt. I told him that as destruction was evidently awaiting him if he continued in his present course, the wisest thing for him to do was to "turn" about—"Cease to do evil and learn to do well." He then informed me that he was an Ingersoll man and a Spiritualist, and had no faith in religion. I requested him to go to the Murphy meeting at Farwell Hall, and finally he promised me he would go.

After I had finished my business I went to the meeting, feeling solicitous about this man, and I found him in Mr. Murphy's arms. Tears were rolling down his cheeks, and Mr. Murphy was wiping them off his face, and saying, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." The poor man prayed, and suddenly exclaimed: "Where am I? I am in a new heaven, glory to God."

I mentioned the preceding facts to Mr. Murphy, and he took steps to have him taken to the Washingtonian Home. Here I visited him several days after, a changed man, having no desire, but rather a disgust for liquor, and after a heavenly conversation he requested me to pray with him. I left the colonel with a sense of satisfaction that I had been instrumental in some small degree of bringing him to Jesus.

I learned this lesson—"Never think that any man is too low down for Christ to save." Jesus can save to the uttermost, "Whosoever will."

A PARABLE CONCERNING A SNAKE.

A farmer once found a rattlesnake in his field. Having caught it and gagged it and put it in a bag, he carried it home, and called his neighbors together, saying, "Behold, I have captured a snake, and it's a big and strong; now, therefore, what shall I do with it?" Then one man rose up and said, "This is a very harmless-looking reptile. I think he might be allowed to go wherever he pleases." Another said, "My friends, do you not know that this harmless-looking serpent has a sting? Now, therefore, I move that all people, and especially all young people, be warned faithfully to keep out of the way of the serpent, lest they be bitten." This counsel seemed to impress the assembly very favorably.

Then a third speaker began on this wise: "Since the bite of this reptile is so very dangerous, I would submit that it might be well to make certain rules and regulations; as, for instance, that he is not to go abroad on the day that is called Sunday; and that he must not be allowed to sting anybody who is not of age; moreover, that he shall not be let out from his cage at all until a council of citizens shall so decide. And finally," said this wise and thoughtful man, "I suggest that an oath be administered to our neighbor, the keeper of the snake, that he will faithfully fulfill all these provisions."

Now, it came to pass that the neighbors were so moved with these words that with one voice they cried out, "Let it be done, even as thou hast said!" And they were about to adjourn.

When, behold, there came an old man into the council, and hearing what had been done, he exclaimed, "The snake! Give him to me, and I will crush his head!"

At this there was a great commotion. Some cried one thing and some another; but all were agreed that such proceedings would be contrary to their rights and liberties; for they loved the snake. And, lo, he liveth to this day! He that is wise, let him interpret the parable.—The Sower.

The liquor traffic is not to be settled until it is settled right, and the right way is annihilation. Anything short of this will continue the struggle indefinitely; there must be no compromise with this monster evil. The life and best interests of our home, our country, and our religion, demand extermination as the only remedy.

The dram-shop is a clog on our civilization, and its only effect on society is to destroy everything that is either good, true, or beautiful.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The sixty-first annual meeting of the American Home Missionary Society will be held in Saratoga Springs, N. Y., June 7-9. Rev. F. A. Noble of Chicago will preach the annual sermon. Rev. Julius Seelye, D. D., president of Amherst College, is expected to preside and deliver an address. Representative pastors, laymen, and missionaries will be present from different parts of the country and take part in the proceedings. Among them are Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. J. G. Johnson, Dr. Josiah Strong, Dr. J. G. Roberts, Dr. George F. Pentecost, and others.

—The International Missionary Union will hold its fourth annual meeting at Thousand Island Park August 10-17. Over sixty foreign missionaries of various denominations and fields were present last year, and the discussions and addresses were of unusual interest. A better time, even, is anticipated this year.

—The surprising fact is noted that while the Wesleyan church in Great Britain had 1,970 ministers, it had 24,579 lay class leaders, and 15,009 local preachers last year, so that the greater part of its pastoral and preaching work is done by laymen—and none the less effective work for that.

—Resolutions were adopted Friday by the General Council of the Reformed Episcopal church, in session at Philadelphia, recognizing adultery as the only Scriptural ground for divorce, and forbidding the marriage of divorced persons, excepting only when the decree was awarded for violation of the seventh commandment.

—The system of profit-sharing of which we spoke favorably a few weeks ago has been adopted by the shareholders of the Toledo, Ann Arbor and Northern railroad. All officials and employes except the president will become beneficiaries under the plan. It is also reported that the Century Company of New York, whose magazine has become so justly popular, is managed under the same system.

—At the alumni meeting of Hartford Theological Seminary, held in connection with the graduating exercises, resolutions were passed to the effect that "the aggressive and persistent public presentation of doctrines and hypotheses commonly known as progressive theology, future probation, new departure and the like, threaten great harm to the ministry and the church," and calling on the faculty "to adopt some radical and comprehensive plan by which the character and work of this institution, and especially the relation its teaching holds to the present discussion of Biblical interpretation and eschatology, may be brought and kept before the public in a definite and unmistakable manner."

—The Baptists of the United States, Northern and Southern, gave last year $1,677,706 for home and foreign missions. For education and other purposes the contributions amounted to $1,914,442, and for church support $4,924,553, making a grand total of $8,510,701, by over 2,700,000 members.

The annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Thousand Island Park, St. Lawrence river, August 10-17. All returned missionaries are eligible to membership, and will be entertained during the meeting free of cost. The sessions are open to the public.

—The Presbyterian Assembly at Omaha received a resolution Friday from the Assembly in St. Louis looking to united action between both divisions of the church. It read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of four ministers and four ruling elders, with the Moderator, meet with a similar committee of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America, such committee to be appointed for the sole purpose of inquiring into and ascertaining the position that the Assembly purposes to maintain as to the colored churches, ecclesiastical boards and any other subject regarded as obstacles in the way of united effort for the propagation of the Gospel, and report these facts to the next General Assembly, and such action as they may warrant.

A committee was appointed by the Northern Assembly to confer with the committee above referred to.

—In the Baptist Missionary Convention at St. Paul Dr. Murdock, corresponding secretary, submitted his annual report, showing a manifest increase in the cause of missions. The following missionaries died during the past year: Edward A. Stevens, D. D., William George, Norman M. Waterbury, S. J. White, C. H. Carpenter and Thomas S. Ranney. The treasurer had received from all sources $406,639, including donations of $176,488, and legacies of $66,068. The appropriations for the current year were $351,890; the balance now in the treasury is $11,220. In missions to heathen lands there are 54 stations and 974 out stations. Including those now on furloughs there are 160 married missionaries, 22 unmarried men and 66 unmarried women, including widows of missionaries. In all missions there are 248 missionaries, including lay evangelists, 1,730 native preachers, 1,265 churches, 123,530 members; 9,342 were baptized in 1886. The increase from last year was 22 missionaries, 45 churches and 5,370 members.

—The preacher of the sermon before the Episcopal Diocesan Convention in Omaha, Neb., lately, Rev. W. O. Pearson said attempts had been made, in the name of Catholicism to foist upon the church a doctrine of Christ himself upon the altar in the form of bread and wine, by those who fail to see that if it were really true that Christ's body and blood were upon the altar, the worship of them would be a blasphemous denial of the Incarnation, and the idolatry more awful than any that could be conceived. Rev. J. Williams, of St. Barnaba's church, Omaha, withdrew, saying that the speaker had insulted members of the congregation by branding as idolatrous points of belief held by them as the most sacred features of religious life. Great commotion prevailed among churchmen.

MISSIONS IN JAPAN.

Hon. Richard B. Hubbard, U. S. minister to Japan, in a letter to Rev. Dr. Marshall, lately published, gives the following interesting particulars of missionary effort in Japan. In a prefatory note he says:

"Southern Christians seem to have turned their attention mostly to China, Burmah and India—vast fields, it is true, for this work, but not to be compared to Japan in the present need and urgency, so to speak, of consecrated, educated, and self-sacrificing missionary labor. Here are 38,000,000 people on islands containing not much more than one-half of the area of the State of Texas. The whole country is accessible to the heralds of the cross from all Christian lands. Unlike the Chinese, these people do not cling as to life itself to their ancient political or religious traditions, or faiths of either church or state. Within the past one-third of a century their awakening from a sleep of ages has been marvelous to the Western world, and certainly without a parallel heretofore in history. In a word, they are ready and willing, in fact, eagerly so, if convinced, to let the scales fall from their eyes and to embrace new thoughts and creeds, whether of government, science or religion. Such a people, just at this special juncture, it seems to me, present the most inviting—urgently inviting—field for this great work of all other oriental lands."

The following are the dates of Christian societies first sending missionaries to Japan:

American Presbyterian church, 1859.
Reformed church in America, 1859.
United Presbyterian church of Scotland, 1874.

General Evangelical Protestant, German-Swiss, 1885.

Society of Friends, America, 1885.
Whole number of missionaries in Japan, 215, an increase of 32 from the year 1885.

Organized churches, 193; churches self-supporting, 64; churches partly self-supporting, 119; increase of churches from 1885 to 1886, one year, 23. Total membership of churches, 14,815, an increase in one year of over three thousand souls.

Total number of Sunday-schools, 235; number of scholars, 9,889, an increase in attendance of 2,870 children.

In the empire there are eleven Christian theological schools, having a scholarship of 169; two more such schools than in 1886, and 67 more students. There are 93 native ministers, an increase of 33 in twelve months.

Unordained preachers and helpers, 166; 44 colporteurs, and 61 Bible-women.

LITERATURE.

A DETECTIVE'S EXPERIENCE AMONG THE MORMONS: or, Polygamist Mormons, how they live and the land they live in. By Fred. E. Bennett, Deputy United States Marshal. Pp. 294. Price, $1.50. Laird and Lee, Chicago.

Of all the Federal officers who have to deal with the naseous Mormon system under law, none have such opportunities of seeing all its hideous and disgusting manifestations; and toward none have the Mormons treasured up such deadly revenge as the marshals and their deputies. One of these officers, a brave but quiet man, said to the writer a year ago in Salt Lake, that the infamous system would go out only in blood, and some of those who had been active in enforcing law would be sure to fall. "They have marked us," said he, "and there are assassins enough left among them to pick us off at a convenient time." To a reader who has read of Mormonism in the papers or in the railway pamphlets, these stories of marshal Bennett will seem like fiction and exaggeration. Not so to one who has personally observed the system even for a few days only. The whole book bears the stamp of truth, roughly told at times, but with a ready wit and frankness which reminds the reader on every page of the clear skies, and rushing streams and snow-capped ranges where this Mormon system has entrenched itself. The author was engaged in making some forty arrests of polygamists, and the story of this work has no lack of exciting adventure and disgusting accounts of Mormon life and immorality. In the following incident he aptly illustrates the Mormon idea of truth:

A case in point will illustrate how they are taught to lie from their cradles. One day myself and two friends were walking up the railroad track just outside the town of Franklin, Idaho, and our conversation turned upon this propensity of the Mormons. We shortly noticed a little midget approaching us, and I offered to bet that he would lie, no matter what I asked him. As he came up close I said, "What is your name, sonny?" He hesitated a moment, and finally stammered out, "B-b-brown, sir." We could all see by his manner of replying that he was not telling the truth, and after asking him another question or two I said, "Now, little one, what made you tell a lie? You know your name is not Brown. 'No, sir,' he said, 'it's Packer; but when you axed me I did not know you wuz Mormons, and daddy sez we must be orful kearful.' I replied, 'That is right, my son, but if you're a Mormon I am sure you can give me the grip.' 'Oh yes, sir, I can give it,' he said, with an alacrity only equaled by his previous hesitation. "Turn it loose, my son," said I, assuming as sanctimonious a look as possible. So placing his little skinny hand in mine, he gave me the grip. Although not overburdened with sentimentality, I could but wonder where such a religion would drag the poor wretches that were tied to it.

The story of the Mountain Meadow massacre is told with fearful detail as taken from a participant; and the secrets of the Endowment House are also given from the lips of one who had been through it all. All in all, this is a valuable addition to our literature on this unpleasant subject.

THE WORKS OF WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE. Edited by William George Clark and William Aldis Wright. In twelve volumes. Vols. 5 and 6. John B. Alden, New York.

These volumes contain the historical plays, Richard II., Henry IV., Henry V., and Henry VI. parts 1 and 2, and present them to the reader in such an attractive form as has been seldom attempted by any publisher before. Maurice Thompson, the well-known author and poet, gives an opinion upon this edition to which many will respond: "Beside me lies a volume of Alden's 'Ideal Edition' of Shakespeare, the cheapest and clearest-typed edition I have ever seen. You may read it as you walk; I have read it as I walked, communing with the 'Two Gentlemen of Verona' under the moaning pines and mossy live-oaks, while the lazy wash of the Gulf waves and the lazy touch of the Gulf breeze 'filled in the symphonies between.'"

Word Studies in the New Testament is the title of a work by Marian R. Vincent, D. D., pastor of the Church of the Covenant, New York, to be published immediately by Charles Scribner's Sons. This new endeavor to give Bible readers and students a new commentary will be appreciated as it is known that the purpose of the author is to enable the English reader and student to get at the original force, meaning and color of the significant words and phrases as used by the different writers. An introduction to the comments upon each book sets forth in compact form what is known about the author—how, where, with what object, and with what peculiarities of style he wrote. From the specimen pages sent the work has the promise of being one of the most useful and suggestive of commentaries on the sacred text, by which a broader as well as a more particular view will be gained of the words and phrases of the Scriptures.

As a companion article to "The Likeness of Julius Caesar" by the same author in the February number, Scribner's Magazine for June opens with a semi-historical and critical essay by John C. Ropes, entitled "Some Illustrations of Napoleon and his Times." It is plentifully illustrated from the author's fine collection of Napoleon portraits. There are full-page reproductions of famous portraits by Appiani, Isabey and Gerard. Mr. Ropes's article carefully traces the development of Napoleon's character as exhibited by his changing physiognomy from early manhood to maturity. Another article will complete this interesting study. In "The Ethics of Democracy" Mr. F. J. Simson has set forth a few of the generalizations to which he has been led by an elaborate and careful study of the laws of all our States and Territories and he has clearly stated a number of the general tendencies of democracy as shown in a wide range of legislation on such subjects as marriage, divorce, socialism, and temperance. As a result of frequent visits and long journeys in Guatemala, W. T. Brigham has given a vigorous, out-door sketch of "An Uncommercial Republic." A strange jumble of immorality, spiritualism, atheism and misconceived Christianity appears in one of the stories by Mrs. Stevenson. Another by Nora Perry shows the true Russian liberals as opposed to conservatives and Nihilists.

The Humane movement is well represented by the Humane Journal of this city and Our Dumb Animals of Boston, which report the efforts of the numerous societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, a work that has been made famous by the philanthropist Henry Bergh of New York, and which has a wide field of operation all over the land.

Science for May 27 contains several articles on the political and physical geography of Central Africa, together with some account of its people and vegetation, which are of great interest. They are accompanied by maps.

LODGE NOTES.

The Roman Catholic churches in Montreal have of late been crowded with Knights of Labor, who were availing themselves of the last days granted by Cardinal Taschereau of doing penance and making confession to their parish priest that they had joined the order. It is believed the church will not oppose the order in the future.

Mr. Powderly seems to be experiencing the fate that has too often overtaken labor reformers. Having started the ball of labor agitation, having called into existence a great and powerful organization, it is not impossible that he is destined to fall a victim to the creation of his own hands. The fault chiefly found with Mr. Powderly by dissatisfied Knights of Labor is that he is not sufficiently progressive; that his influence exerted in opposition to plans which many of the workmen believe to be of vast benefit to their cause. He is in their opinion, a species of Tory in his conservatism, while what they want is a radical reformer. These disagreements may be in some way harmonized; but if they are not the order of the Knights of Labor will in a short time break up into groups hostile to each other and utterly incapable, in consequence of divergencies of opinion, of ever acting together for a definite purpose.—Boston Herald.

A New York morning paper says: "A commotion was caused among the members of the Clan-na-Gael in this city and Brooklyn by the report that one of the leading officers of the body had gone away with $40,000 of the funds of the society. It was stated that he was a native of Kentucky and recently went to Brooklyn from Louisville. The statement was also made that he had not defaulted but had gone on a secret mission to England with the funds in his possession, which had been collected for the purpose. The executive board of that body has tried to keep the matter quiet. The missing man belonged to the faction which controlled the recent convention in Pittsburgh when several of the camps of the society withdrew on the ground that they contributed their money but never had any reports showing what was done with it."

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it, the love of the race.' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are bent upon very closely and hedged around by overmuch respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best. The writer is so sure of himself, it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted in its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains no such thing that is sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful; that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of anyone. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to title."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet complaining a letter written by Mr. Weed and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a stirring and powerful exposure of the moral depravity and the lawless seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Onondaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasonry to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS APPEAL TO IT.
In closing his letter he writes: I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the influence of the 'secret societies' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'.
The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the best historical article published in this country. It is a masterpiece of a journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

HOME HINTS.

THINGS TO REMEMBER.

Never let tea boil.
For rough hands use lemon juice.
Strong lye cleans tainted pork barrels.
Tepid milk and water clean oil-cloth without soap.

Turpentine applied to a cut is a preventive of lockjaw.

A hot shovel held over furniture removes white spots.

Sprinkle sassafras bark among dried fruit to keep out worms.

Popcorn is a good lunch for Sunday night with milk for drink.

A handful of hay in a panful of water neutralizes smell of paint.

To make a carpet look fresh, wipe with a damp cloth after sweeping.

In sewing and winding carpet rags double them with the right side out.

Clean tea or coffee cups with scouring brick; makes them look good as new.

Remove ink-stains on silk, woolen or cotton by saturating with spirits of turpentine.

Washing pine floor in solution of one pound of copperas dissolved in one gallon strong lye gives oak color.

Remove flower-pot stains from window sills by rubbing with fine wood ashes and rinse with clean water.

A paste of equal parts of sifted ashes, clay and salt and a little water cements cracks in stoves and ovens.

Mixtures of two parts of glycerine, one part ammonia, and a little rose-water whiten and soften the hands.

Cover plants with newspapers before sweeping; also put ammonia on them once a week.

Corn husks braided make a serviceable and handsome mat. The braids to be sewed with sack needle and twine.

Cabbage is made digestible by first slicing, and then putting in boiling water with a pinch of soda and some salt, and boiling just fifteen minutes.

A porcelain-lined kettle that will no longer serve for fruit is just the thing for corn loaf. A three or four quart fruit can answers well the same purpose.—Troy Times.

A nice breakfast for one who is not equal to hearty fare is made of toast and eggs prepared in this way: Put a lump of butter in a saucepan and then drop three eggs into it, stir briskly and constantly so that the eggs will be smooth and not lumpy. Have two thin slices of buttered toast ready, and when the eggs are done lay them on one piece of the toast and lay the other lightly over it; do not crowd it down and make the egg run over the edge of the toast.

BOILED BREAD PUDDING.—Crumb your stale bread into a pudding pail, cover with sweet milk and set by the stove to warm and soften. Then to every quart of milk and bread add two well beaten eggs, a cupful of sugar, a handful of raisins or sweet dried fruit of any kind. Do not have your pail full, as it needs some room to rise. Put the cover on tightly, set into boiling water and do not allow it to stop boiling until done.

A favorite dish in one of the Middle States is made by slicing raw potatoes and cooking them in milk and water; when nearly done drop dumplings made like biscuit in, and serve together with roast beef. Season the gravy with butter, pepper and salt and thicken it with a little flour.

ECONOMY IN SMALL THINGS.

A rigid economy in small things is almost unknown among our people. The waste from the table of an American family would keep in comfort a French or German peasant with his wife and children. The waste of fuel in an American kitchen where an ignorant Bridget presides would cook the food of another family. The cast off clothing of a fairly well-to-do American family would comfortably clothe another of the same size. Even families that are not extravagant in the sense of foolishly spending their money in the first instance, are very extravagant in permitting these constant wastes. They have not accustomed themselves to habits of economy, and would be very much surprised to be told that they are wasteful and that waste is a sin. Very many of the people that can make both ends meet only by a pinch would find their incomes ample if a closer watch were kept over the little outgoes that seem too insignificant to be worth a moment's attention. The difficulty at the root of this matter of economy seems to be that Americans have a notion that economy is stingy and mean. If an American hates anything it is to be called stingy or to be thought mean. In his anxiety to escape all imputation of these two qualities he goes to the opposite extreme and becomes reckless and profligate in his expenditure. If he does not live beyond his means, he lives right up to them; if he escapes debt, he fails to save anything. And yet the average American, living in this way, is above all things anxious to get rich. He is daily making the fortunes of others by his careless expenditure and wasteful living and at the same time marring his own; for, lucky hits apart, no fortune can be made except by frugality and thrift.—Examiner.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side."

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

SOMETHING NEW! DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC SUMMER CORSET

Owing to the unprecedented success attending the sale of our Electric Corsets, and in response to numerous inquiries for an Electric Summer or Ventilating Corset, Dr. Scott has placed on the market his "Electric Summer Corset." It has already met with the most gratifying popularity, the highest praise of the medical profession, and durability. It is a beauty, made of extra strong and fine quality linen netting, with pockets all around, in which are placed our watch-spring magnets. They are highly charged with electro-magnetism, which imparts a steady and gentle current, all-healing in its influence to the wearer. They create no unpleasant shock whatever. They can be worn by the most delicate invalid as safely as by the most robust, with wonderful and quick results.

The above remarks refer equally to our regular Electric Corsets, which retail at $1, $1.50, $2, and $3. Nursing $1.50; Abdominal $2. The $1 and $1.50 goods are made of extra fine and durable Jean, and the $2 and $3 and Abdominal Corsets of Superior English Satin. All except Summer Corsets come in white and dove from 18 to 30 inches; we make the Abdominal up to 38 inches. The postage on each is 15c. Every one is sent out in a handsome box accompanied by a silver-plated compass with which the electro-magnetic power is tested.

Professional men assert that there is hardly a disease which electricity or Magnetism may not therapeutically cure, and they daily practice the same on their own. A physician will inform you.

The celebrated Dr. W. A. HANCOCK, of New York, formerly Surgeon-General of the U. S. Army, lately lectured upon this subject, and advised all medical men to make trial of these agencies, describing at the same time most remarkable cures he had made, even in cases which would seem hopeless.

If you cannot obtain them in your own town, remit us the price, with 15c. added for postage, and we will deliver them into your hands free. Always mention this paper, and remit by P. O. Money Order, Draft, or Currency in Registered Letter, payable to

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army, who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and help as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

FARM NOTES.

DESTRUCTION OF VERMIN.

In the warm weather insect pests increase with great rapidity, multiplying thousands. Some of the worst of these reproduce themselves in a few days and as their progeny is very numerous, their numbers soon become overwhelming. It is, therefore, necessary that means of repression should be taken immediately. The young animals suffer chiefly and poultry roosts, indeed, not only suffer themselves, but soon infect barns and stables with fleas and lice, and it has been known that horses have died from the intolerable persecutions of vermin brought into their stables by fowls. Owls, swallows, rats and mice also bring vermin into barns and stables. Oil is fatal to every insect which it touches, and sulphur is very offensive to them. A mixture of four ounces of lard and one ounce of sulphur, well rubbed together, and with the addition of one ounce of kerosene oil and one dram of creosote, will be found an excellent remedy against all sorts of insect vermin, while the liberal use of kerosene oil on poultry roosts will free the fowls from their tormentors. —American Agriculturist.

ANTIDOTE FOR PARIS GREEN POISON.

An exchange gives the following antidote for poisoning by Paris green:

First, give an active emetic of mustard and warm water. While waiting for this to act take eight tablespoonfuls of common aqua ammonia (hartshorn), and two tablespoonfuls of plain tincture of iron; pour the iron on the hartshorn, and a thick, dark precipitate, like brick dust, will at once be seen in the mixed liquors; stir gently with a broom splint and then strain through a fine handkerchief over a cup. The liquid which runs through can be thrown away and the reddish jelly like powder which remains should be treated to about half a pint of tepid water poured gently on the powder in order to strain out any excess of either liquid. A teaspoonful of the powder so prepared can be given every five minutes—it forms what is known as per-oxide of iron which is a strong antidote for poisoning by arsenic. The above remedies are generally to be found in nearly every household, and the antidote can be prepared in a few moments time. In addition to the above the white of eggs, cream or flour and water should be given.

FIGHTING INSECTS.—Bulletin No. 9 of the Massachusetts Experiment Station, gives the following as the best means of destroying the many insects that make havoc among the crops of the farm and garden:

Cabbage Flea.—The first insect of importance that appears is the small black flea or jumping beetle that attacks the cabbage, radish, turnip, etc. Dusting with Paris green mixed with one hundred times its weight of plaster has proved an effectual remedy. Apply when the plants are wet and after every rain.

The Cut Worm, of which there are several species including the army worm, works only during the night and may be destroyed by the same remedy as above. We advise a trial of pyrethrum powder mixed with five times its bulk of plaster as being more safe, although we have no positive proof that it will be effectual.

The Striped Squash Bug which has been so abundant for the past two seasons, is best kept in check by plaster and Paris green. For the family garden the safest and most satisfactory way is to make bottomless boxes, twelve inches square and six or eight inches deep, and covered with mosquito netting; one of these placed over each hill until the plants have become tough and hard is a sure protection.

The Potato Beetle.—Paris green extended with plaster, flour or water is the only cheap and easily applied remedy known at present, but great care must be exercised in its use, and especially in the place where the package is kept, that it may not get upon the food of animals.

The Cabbage Worm, the larva of the common white butterfly, may be easily destroyed. Hand picking, if begun before the first brood has passed into the perfect state, is effectual. Pyrethrum powder mixed with five times its bulk of plaster and dusted into the center of the leaves with sulphur bellows is certain destruction to every one of them. The application of insecticides in liquids to the cabbage has not been satisfactory on account of the peculiar structure of the leaf surface which allows the water to roll off in drops and not adhere to any part of it. Paris green is unsafe to use after the leaves have become over four inches in diameter.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching. The accuracy of the account is legally attested by J. O. Doeberger, East Master, University of Chicago, and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by the renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secretive works extant, from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50c. Paper, 25c; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, due guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that William Morgan murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75c; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35c; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40c.

College Secret Societies. Their aims and character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Contains the opinion of many prominent college presidents and secretaries, and an account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. A full and complete exposition of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, King, and the Ritual of the Knights Templar, Knights of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $0.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50c; $4.00 per dozen.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a La Mode. By Rev. Dr. J. W. H. In this is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to accept a reverend Freemason and their very able defense presented by Wm. C. Cook, in which the clergy are shown that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Knights Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, King, and the Ritual of the Knights Templar, Knights of Malta. General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," delivered to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837 at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who read and proved that Modern Masonry is identical to private life—and doubtless because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp. 75c.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian), a seceding Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why no order should be received of the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Adoptive Masonry, by Thomas W. Morgan, comprising the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, and the degree of the Benevolent Degree. 50 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing remarks on various points in the character of a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

Prof. J. G. Garson, D. D., on Secret Societies. A most convincing argument against the lodge from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern, and COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES. Composed of the two pamphlets combined in this title, bound together in cloth, $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Narratives and Arguments, showing the conflict of secret societies with the Constitution and laws of the Union and of the State of St. Francis Semple. The fact that secret societies interfere with the execution and pervert the administration of law is here clearly proved. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

History Nat'l Christian Association. Its origin, objects, what it has done and aims to do, and the best means to accomplish the end sought; the Articles of Incorporation, Constitution and By-Laws of the Association. 25c each; per dozen, $2.50.

Rituals and Secrets Illustrated. Composed of "Temple of Honor Illustrated," "Adoptive Masonry Illustrated," "United Sons of Industry Illustrated," and "Secret Societies Illustrated." $1.00 each; per dozen, $9.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, comprising and Rebekah (adies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the order, and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This set corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodge. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an excellent and carefully prepared work of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christ and Error," paper cover, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the author.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies. By Rev. J. Sarver, pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leominster, Mass. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty to disaffiliate Odd-fellows, Freemasons, Knights of Pythias, and other secret societies, as shown by their confessed character, found in their own publications. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the Templars of Honor and Commandery, comprising the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. A complete exposition of the Subordinate Temple, and the degrees of Love, Purity and Fidelity, by a Templar of Fidelity and Past Worthy Chief Templar. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor of the Grand Lodge of Ohio, comprising three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, counter-signs, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Dow, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. As prepared by seven committees of citizens appointed to investigate the fate of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, for no other offense than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife; and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the charges against the Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Lodge of Illinois. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the Grand Lodge of Illinois, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring Keith to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge; his bold reply to the charges against him, and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

A Masonic Conspiracy, Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of the State. Edited by the account of a Masonic molder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Lonisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disaffiliate secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75c.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder C. W. Wilson, of Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. Blanchard, before the Pittsburgh Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

Holden With Cords. OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in story of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by E. E. Flanagan, Author of "Little Egypt," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story, carefully true to life because, mainly a narration of historical facts. In cloth $1.00; paper $0.50. In Secrecy vs. the Family, State and Church. In reply to a Masonic oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Waltham, Ohio. An able sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen 50c.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear array of the objections to Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50c.

Freemasonry at a Glance Illustrated every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. Paper cover, 25 cents each. Single copy, six cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

The Supreme Court of the United States on Monday affirmed the validity of the "drive-wheel" patent. The suit was to enforce the payment of royalty to the patentee.

Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland, accompanied by Col. Lamont and wife, left Washington on Thursday evening for ten days' recreation in the Adirondacks.

Michael Train, aged 60, a messenger in the Treasury Department at Washington, toppled over the balusters in that building Tuesday, and falling sixty feet was instantly killed.

LEGISLATIVE.

The Irish editor, O'Brien, was presented to New York legislators in the Assembly Chamber at Albany Thursday and in his speech said American sympathy greatly encouraged the advocates and promoters of the Irish cause.

The Vedder liquor-tax bill passed the New York Legislature Thursday. It is expected that it will be vetoed by the Governor.

The Michigan Senate passed a very stringent bill affecting "bucket shops," practically wiping them out. It provides for a fine of $500 for the first offense in grain gambling, and imprisonment for subsequent offenses. The owner of the building occupied comes in so far as the penalties are concerned.

Mr. Lamont, the Prohibitionist member of the Illinois house, has secured the passage of a bill "To suppress selling, lending, giving away or showing to any minor or child any paper or publication principally devoted to illustrating or describing immoral deeds."

CHICAGO.

Attorney General Garland will direct Mr. Ewing, United States District Attorney at Chicago, to bring suit against the Illinois Central and Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroads to determine the rights of the United States in the Lake Front question.

After three weeks of hard work a jury was secured in what is known as the "boodler" cases in this city and the examination of witnesses began. The trial is against the wardens of the county hospital, insane asylum and poor house, several county commissioners and tradesmen who have for years been robbing the county treasury.

The builders' strike is not yet broken, but many men have gone to work under police guard.

Twenty-five thousand people attended the monster barbecue of the National Butcher's Association Thursday at Cheltenham Beach.

The first car-load of fresh California fruit for this season left San Francisco for Chicago May 18. It was loaded with 1,300 boxes of cherries and 400 boxes of apricots. The California Fruit Union will ship a carload daily to Chicago throughout the season.

COUNTRY.

It is reported that chinch bugs have destroyed the barley crop in the Waunakee (Wis.) district.

On Friday night, while the fast train west on the Pennsylvania Railroad was nearing Horseshoe Bend, the wheel of a car on a freight train going east burst, and the train crashed into two passenger coaches, killing instantly four men and injuring many others, four of them fatally.

Flames broke out at 1:30 Friday morning in the Belt Line horse-car stables, New York, between Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth streets. The building was entirely destroyed. It contained 1,400 horses and nearly all the cars of the company. The next block composed of tenements caught fire in an hour and was blazing fiercely. The streets in the vicinity for blocks away were filled with frightened tenants, fleeing from the flames. The tenement houses were thickly peopled. Every floor had from four to five families. All were poor people who will lose all their property. Seventy-five dwellings, mostly frame tenements inhabited by poor people, a soap factory and a brewery are among the dwellings burned. Thirteen hundred horses perished, and an aged woman died from fright and shock. The loss is placed at $1,325,000, the insurance not exceeding $500,000.

A scheme is being perfected for the organization of the Wyoming, Colorado, Eastern Utah, Western Nebraska, Southern Montana and Southern Dakota cattlemen into one gigantic corporation which will have control of $15,000,000 worth of stock and grazing lands. Capitalists of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, London and Edinburgh are interested in the project.

Frank Boynton, an old soldier living near Portland, Me., killed himself to prevent going before the Grand Jury as a witness against a neighbor accused of selling hard cider.

Mrs. Jenness Miller, the dress reformer, of Washington, delivered an address before the students of Vassar College the other day, and the girls agreed to wear a costume without corsets, to be designed by Mrs. Miller.

The business portion of Detray, a Detroit (Mich.) suburb, was destroyed by fire Monday morning, the overturning of a lamp by a cat causing the conflagration.

The village of Hawthorne, Wis., eighteen miles south of Superior, has been destroyed by the forest fires.

The motion for a new trial for Schwartz and Watts, convicted of killing Express Messenger Nichols, was overruled Monday at Morris, Ill., and the judge sentenced the men to life imprisonment. Notice of an appeal to the Supreme Court was given.

At Jamestown, Dak., a stock company has been formed to bore for natural gas. The projectors are wealthy and confident of finding a good well.

Pablo Crispire's saw mill in Canon Largo, New Mexico, was the scene of a terrible explosion resulting in the entire destruction of the property and instantly killing six men.

Forest fires are still burning in Northern Wisconsin, west of Hurley. A house containing four tons of powder at the Odanah mine blew up Saturday.

The largest gas well at Marion, Ind., is beyond the control of its owners, and 13,000,000 feet a day is being wasted.

Peach growers of Wilmington, Del., are excited over the ravages of rosebugs, which are swarming by millions over the trees and destroying the peaches.

FOREIGN.

A dispatch from Paris states that M. Herbet, the French ambassador to Germany, on his recent visit to Paris brought an autograph letter from the Emperor William to President Grevy, in which the Emperor expressed the hope that the lives of neither might be saddened by the horrors of another war.

A dispatch from Odessa, Russia, last week states that while the Czar and Czarina were driving in an open carriage from the ball given by members of the nobility at Novo Tcherkassk, a shot was fired at them from a crowd on the street. A great uproar followed. The man who fired the shot was so maltreated by the people that he was insensible when the police secured him. The culprit had in his possession a bottle of poison, a revolver and a dagger.

The Opera Comique, the oldest theatre in Paris, took fire Tuesday evening and was soon wrapped in flames. Fourteen persons who jumped from windows are dead. Forty-three were injured. It is probable that many were crushed to death in the galleries, but this is not assured by the dispatches.

Advices from Panama of the 16th inst. say that in one of the largest, longest and deepest cut high up above the prospective canal work, water has been struck. The amount of earth and rock taken out of the section referred to cost millions of dollars. All the work represented by these millions is to-day valueless as the water has washed from the side of the mountain more than sufficient to fill all the cuts.

Chief Officer Gay of the Bark McLeod of St. John, N. B., from Buenos Ayres, tells a frightful story of death from the cholera in that portion of the Argentine Republic. He says that while the vessel was lying in the harbor of Buenos Ayres the people of that city and the suburbs were dying off like sheep and the disease seemed to spread like wildfire.

London advices state that the utterances of Mr. Gladstone during his visit to Wales are awaited with the keenest interest. It is said he is preparing a declaration of principles on the church disestablishment question. The Liberal leaders are in complete ignorance as to the future of the party beyond its uncompromising opposition to coercion and support of home rule, and as they have become restive Mr. Gladstone has determined to advance disestablishment of the church in Wales and Scotland.

From Paris the dispatches announce that M. Rouvier has formed a cabinet, from which General Boulanger has been excluded, M. Sausier having accepted the portfolio as Minister of War. The three Republican groups of the Chamber of Deputies have unanimously approved their president's action in opposing General Boulanger.

Lord Lansdowne will be invited to participate in the Queen's jubilee celebration at Montreal on June 21 but an officer of the St. Patrick's Society says the Governor General will be rotten-egged if he shows his face there.

A terrible colliery explosion took place in the Udston coal pit at Blantyre, Scotland, last Saturday. Some 220 men were entombed in the pit. Next day forty bodies were recovered. Many of the corpses are unrecognizable, limbs having been blown off, and the bodies horribly charred. Queen Victoria has sent a dispatch expressing sympathy with the families of the dead miners. Distressing scenes were witnessed at the pit as the bodies were brought up. There is no hope that the others in the mine can be saved.

THE SECRET ORDERS

OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 45c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Helffenstein. Paper covers, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

THE ANNUAL BUSINESS MEETING.

Notices of the N. C. A. annual meeting have been sent to each corporate member, and a number have written in reply. Several have not been heard from, but we hope to hear from each either by letter or in person at the annual business meeting. The past has been a year of progress and the future should record still greater advances. The fields were never more inviting or calls more urgent than at the present. The South and the North have become interested and may be cultivated with every prospect of success. What is needed to make the future a grand success is:

1. The blessing of God.
2. Wise and well-considered plans of work.
3. Consecrated men and means to carry out those plans.

"In a multitude of counselors there is safety," and the anti-lodge movement needs all the wisdom in council that God has given to those upon whom he has laid the responsibility of this great work. Let all the friends make this meeting a subject of prayer, and every one who possibly can attend on the 16th inst., at 10 o'clock A. M., at 221 W. Madison St., Chicago. J. P. STODDARD, Sec'y.

Our English neighbors are not indifferent to the relation of their eminent men to Freemasonry, though for various reasons we might suspect them to be so. After the tragic end of General Gordon's last Khartoum expedition inquiries were raised in some English papers whether the lost hero was a Freemason. The reason for such inquiry is left to conjecture: whether the lodge wished to claim him, as is its arrogant custom, or whether Christian people were anxious to rid his name of any taint of connection with a secret brotherhood which deemed itself honored with such a man as the Prince of Wales for its head. The inquiry was not answered until a member of the National Liberal Club in London wrote to the Freemason of that city: "I have the authority of Sir Henry Gordon to state that his brother, the late General Sir C. G. Gordon, was not a Mason." The Masonic prints confess that they would have been only too glad to have owned that remarkable man as one of their for-sworn members, but none the less do Christians rejoice in this additional evidence of the incompatibility of the Christian life with the lodge. It is to us impossible to conceive how a man of Gordon's remarkable faith and singular devotion to the Christian life could have for a moment endured the follies and blasphemy and heathenism of Freemasonry.

ENOCH HONEYWELL.

In the great Sabbath-school convention here last week a resolution was introduced asking that in the publications of the International body the word "Sabbath" be used instead of "Sunday." It is to be regretted that this suggestion was not favorably acted upon. The use of the Scriptural term would be a silent but potent educator among the forty-five million children and youth of America against the almost overwhelming secular tendencies of the day.

One of the most exciting debates of the Presbyterian General Assembly meeting in Omaha arose on the report of the committee on temperance. The Assembly has for several years had a standing committee on temperance which has raised funds, published tracts and accumulated a debt. A debt may be sometimes a blessing, for while it remained the Assembly would have something to do with the temperance reform. The report, however, was for the continuance of the standing committee, the payment of the debt, and the suppression of one of the tracts, and closed with a resolution. The author of the tract, Dr. I. M. Hays, defended his offspring vigorously and the battle joined. An attempt to repudiate the debt signally failed; Dr. Hays came off victor with his tract nailed to the foretop; and into the resolution was injected so much prohibition that we fear our brother of the Interior will want his vacation two months in advance this year and will drop the W. C. T. U. forever. It reads:

Resolved, That this Assembly reiterates and emphasizes the deliverance of the former Assemblies with reference to the sin of intemperance, the unpardonable evil and wrong of the liquor traffic, the use of intoxicating drink as a beverage, and the duty of all members of our churches to encourage and promote the cause of temperance in every legitimate way and especially by the power of personal influence and example, and by the strong arm of the civil law.

The General Assembly clinched the nail so well driven in the evening of the same day. A West Virginia pastor entered complaint against the Synod of Pennsylvania for endorsing last fall the proposed constitutional amendment and urging the people to vote for it. This was taking part in politics and a violation of the church standards. The complaint was referred to a committee who vainly endeavored to have him drop his ridiculous charges; but they were finally compelled to satisfy his humor to refer to the Assembly. Imagine his astonishment when the body refused to trouble itself with his matter and threw it one side. The Assembly also reaffirmed its former recommendation of the use of unfmented wine at the communion table.

A DYING MAN'S APPEAL.

WRITTEN AS A FINAL TESTIMONY BY ENOCH HONEYWELL AND READ AT HIS FUNERAL.

This appeal is made to the God-given conscience of friends, neighbors, and our nation, asking and urging them to take a bold, Christ-like stand against that common wickedness of fraternizing with mammoth crimes and fashionable sins, because, and only because, such acts are perpetrated either by popular men in high places, or else by sly men while hidden in secret places to evade the penalties of civil law.

I, Enoch Honeywell, now living at Altay, New York, am that dying man; and, knowing that my time and service is nearly ended, I herein report progress, giving a transcript of my past doings and of my unpopular sentiments,—unpopular because my life has been a stereotyped protest against that kind of public sentiment that can fellowship such crimes. Consequently, I have been as unpopular as those who 1800 years ago refused to join the deluded multitude in worshipping the "great Diana" of Ephesus.

I believe, as Christ has told us, that we shall be "judged according to the deeds done in the body," not according to the rulings of a depraved public opinion, whether such rulings be in church or state.

I go, hoping to be accepted by Christ, for his pardon is free; but free only on condition of obedience to his laws. But our submission to him must, I believe, be unconditional. I believe that repentance, if true, will be coupled with works meet for repentance. I write this paper (with the advice of two good preachers) to be read at my funeral, hoping it will help to set Gospel law above that of a blind popularity.

Here, then, is the record of some of the events and phases of my sojourn on this little earth.

I began life in Westchester county, New York. After four years we moved to Delaware county, where we lived twelve years, then again in 1805 moved to Cayuga county. In June (believe 1806) I saw the last total eclipse of the sun. When twenty-seven years old, I made a tour from Cincinnati, Ohio, by river and sea, to New York, which, with the facilities then existing, took 106 days. While on the Ohio river a Kentuckian going to market with a cargo of slaves came into our boat, and said he had just worn out three handfuls of withed-whips on the back of one of his women! "And," said he, "I made the blood and mutton fly nicely." Would not that brute give worlds, if he had them, to change places in the Judgment Day with that mangled slave? But his traffic in human flesh was then legal. Then one man could whip and sell another man's wife according to law, and public opinion sustained him in it. Now, we charter secret dens of conspirators all over the Nation according to law; and we make drunkards according to law; and the unthinking multitudes sustain both by their votes. Verily, the harvest is ripe, and the laborers are few.

On this tour, while at sea, we entered the Torrid Zone; thence on our way to New York we saw and felt the awful sublimity of an ocean storm. Constant lightning and dashing waves made ocean and sky (though in the dead hour of night) seem a general chaos of surging fire, while our ship was leaping and plunging in its liquid waves. But an unseen hand has protected me through storms and dangers these many long years, and is not yet withdrawn; and Christ says to the true Christian, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end."

At the age of forty-six I had made (in my own shop) about 4,000 spinning wheel heads by water power, in Bedford, New York, and 12,000 chairs by horse power in Scipio, Cayuga county, New York.

At about the age of twenty-one I began, with other and stronger patriots, to battle with popular sins in high places, and I have been an ice-breaker ever since. We at that time showed the cowardice of dueling, the waste and robbery of lotteries, the low breeding exhibited by gambling, swearing and betting, and the nauseous and demoralizing follies of smoking and grog-drinking. But our severest persecution during the last age was while contesting Masonry from 1826 to 1836, for Masonry and slavery seemed to be the two strongest pillars that ever helped to support Satan's throne in the earth, while Satan's co-laborers defended those two systems to the best of their abilities.

During the last fifty years I have spent much time and money in helping to defend both the late slaves in the South, and the hunted victims wanted for filling sly dens in the North. And I hope the hundreds of thousands of advisory and well-attested tracts that I have sent out to our young men will continue to do God's service when the hand that wrote them shall lie mouldering in the peaceful grave. I hope to yet look back from another world and see all diletterious secretisms purged from both church and state. If we pray for God's kingdom to come, and for his will to be done in the earth, we must, if consistent, pray and work also to remove all stumbling blocks and masked batteries that beset the way, however popular those blocks and painted devices may be in the eyes of our modern Pharisees. I think if God's laws had never been disobeyed, sorrow and suffering could never have found a foothold on the earth.

When giant sins of hoary age are stalking abroad in high places, and their ring-leaders are kidnapping thousands of our innocent young men, and swearing them to life-long servitude to wicked and irresponsible masters, then the Christian, seeing this, can have no shadow of right to dig and bury his "talent" in the earth, while thousands are being led into snares and traps for want of the light and guidance that his talent ought to give. Popular churches fellowshiped slavery till reformers had changed public sentiment; they then fell in with our hard-earned reformation. To-day oath-bound secretists rule half the churches, and will continue to do so till bold reformers drive them out.

I appeal to the conscience, and ask with due respect, is it right for professing Christians to be time-servers, standing half way between Lord and Lucifer, ready to side with whichever party seems for the time being to be most popular? Is it right to affiliate with a system that ignores Christ by dating their records A. L. instead of A. D.? Is it right to bow submission to a fraternity whose well-known policy is to hold the nation in abeyance to its mandates and secure most of our lucrative offices? Is it right to obey its every order, "given, handed, sent, or thrown" on penalty of having," etc., (see Masonic oaths)? Is it right to discard your preacher if he dare to preach against such popular sins as his employers are guilty of?

The healing influences of working Christians, not of neutral ones, but of such as dare strike at sin in high places, has abolished a law made in Washington City, which sold indulgences to Armfield and his partners for $400 a year, to buy, sell and traffic in men, women and children—all human beings, and without a shadow of crime charged against them! Yes, this wanton crime was authorized and legalized by our Judases then at Washington, who were a little smarter than their prototype; he got only thirty pieces of silver, but our Judases covenanted with Armfield for four hundred. Thus our nation assumed the guilt of traffic in human flesh and bones, and, like Babylon, in "slaves and souls of men." All this was done while the two joint partners, Masonry and slavery, were holding the nation by the throat.

Brethren and fellow citizens, I ask you, in whom do such crimes originate? You are the voters. Your delegates make laws in perfect accord with the spirit of their constituents. If you sent such sinners to make your laws, then "Thou art the man." If you continue to vote for secretists and their advocates, then such treason to God and his laws will be sure to follow. Such wicked influences have emboldened Southern secret hordes to wantonly murder (as Gerrit Smith has shown) about four thousand of our good citizens since the rebel war closed. If our laws are paralyzed by the mystic brothers of those murderers, is it at all strange that such assassins still stalk abroad unpunished?

But now, since we have suffered a fearful retribution for our traffic in human flesh, and have abolished it, you doubtless see and realize its fiendish wickedness. So, too, when you stop chartering secret conclaves to clutch at the helm of our nation, you will then see, as others now see, that such chartering was also a demonic act, worthy to be set as a gem in the Arch Traitor's crown, as proof of his rule in high places. Henry Wilson and other bold Abolitionists, who broke ice fifty years ago and are now called home, are today eulogized by those who then hated them. Such are the nobility of the nation and the salt of the earth. Christ says, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is heaven, the same is my brother, my sister and mother." Who will despise such relationship as this? And all may have it by working for it.

"Dare to do right; dare to be true!"
Cannot Omnipotence carry you through!
City, and mansion and throne all in sight,
Cannot you dare to be true, and do right?

True Christian influence through bold workers has cancelled our State laws that once authorized lottery gambling, and that lashed even white men thirty-nine blows on the naked back by six constables,—a savagism which I have seen inflicted in Schenectady, N. Y., in obedience to law. Public fashion in India once burned live widows to ashes. In other places it has eaten human flesh. In our own country, too, we once hung innocent women because fools said they were witches. Well, Satan is yet abroad in the earth, and reformers have a great work, and an up-hill one, before them. A chartered source of corruption, falsely called free masonry, is still rampant in Washington City, with a constant tendency to worry and warp our legislation. Our own State, too, like other States, not only charts secret lodges, but, through its license boards, sells indulgences for making drunkards. I refer you to our statute books for proof. These abominable absurdities, though now dandled like Delila in Samson's lap and protected by power still stronger than his, must and will, in obedience to Gospel law, be exterminated from our statute books. And God's bold reformers will, in obedience to the same law, effect that downfall and reap the honors, and when called home, will doubtless hear the heavenly plaudits, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." As long as oath-bound clansmen are fellowshiped in your churches, so long Ku Klux, White Leagues and other banditti will doubtless remain a blight and a curse to both church and State. It was popularity and sin in Pharisaical synagogues that stoned Stephen and scourged Paul, bound Peter in a dungeon with two chains, and even crucified Christ, all of whom were then on the unpopular side. But heaven's gates, we believe, were thrown wide open to receive them the instant they could be spared from earth.

Now, my friends, have I not shown you that some of our own popular sins are but little behind those of India or the Fiji Islands. I go to another world leaving this one to my successors, praying that they may protect themselves by exterminating every vile institution in the land, and then live happy in a bold but humble obedience to Gospel law.

Friends, neighbors and relatives, I have now by this reading given you my last advice and my dying protest against affiliating with popular sins. I have commended my soul to Him who gave it; and to you, I have now given MY LAST FAREWELL.

TESTIMONY AGAINST MASONRY IN MEXICO.

LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY OF THE AMERICAN BOARD.

LA BARCA, Mexico, May 21, 1887.

DEAR BROTHER:—I cannot tell you how surprised and gratified we were, two days since, on finding in a recent number of El Abogado Cristiano (the Christian Advocate of our Methodist brethren in Mexico) a paper on "The Relation which Ministers of the Gospel ought to sustain toward Masonry." This paper or address is one which was presented before the last Methodist Conference in Guanajuato. Its author, Rev. C. A. Gamboa, takes good ground. He finds Masonry incompatible with the duties of the Christian minister. The editor of El Abogado, Rev. John W. Butler, makes mention of the article, calling attention to the subject as one of the highest importance.

It is certain that not all Protestant ministers in Mexico are free from the lodge. It is of great importance that such differences of opinion as are therefore sure to be developed be not permitted to break the unity of Christian brotherhood among us, standing face to face with the great work of giving the pure Gospel to a nation who, in the name of the Gospel, have been scattered and peeled, deceived and degraded for centuries. All the more is this voice from one of the native ministers a most welcome voice. I have written Mr. Butler asking for his address.

Rome's attitude toward Masonry probably has the effect to incline a certain class of men toward the order. There is need that the abundant arguments against it be stated from a different standpoint. Your recent extract from the Chicago Times on Masonry in Mexico is to me very informing; and if, as appears, it is written by an insider, it is the more valuable. It affords, by the way, a striking comment on Masonic unity and brotherhood. Something further in the same line exists, so I am told, in Guadalupe. Two lodges exist simply because of class and social non-affiliation, if I am rightly informed. I think both of these must be of the variety spoken of in the above-mentioned article as purely Mexican.

We notice that a famous Brooklyn pastor is giving aid and comfort to the lodges. At this distance some of his logic looks mixed. First, he knows the orders are good because some of his friends are members and they would certainly come out and denounce them if bad. Second, if any of these friends should see it to be their duty to leave their orders and condemn them, he would be obliged to put them in the catalogue with such men as Finney and others of that stamp!

A calumny often hurled promiscuously against all Protestants here is that they are Masons. That will be corrected in time.

The rock is hard here, harder than that of which we read in Scottish story that the workman could at night put in his hat all he had been able to chip off during the day. We know of nothing harder than the human heart led astray and willing to be astray. Yet there are divine promises abundant and we know they are sure; and there are also some encouragements even here. Your brother,

HENRY M. BISSELL.

MORAL HEROES.—IV.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

It would be a difficult task to find any more worthy deserving the appellation of moral heroes than the three Englishmen who came over here in the early part of the anti-slavery struggle,

CAPTAIN CHAS. STEWART, HON. GEO. THOMPSON AND MR. JOHN SCOVIL.

And few men were more unlike in their organic make-up. It was a sight never to be forgotten to see the flood of tears, almost in streams, flowing down the cheeks of Captain Stewart, as in tones of tenderest love he plead with, and implored his audiences to unite for the overthrow of slavery; while Mr. Thompson came down upon the vast audiences, that came to listen to his indescribable eloquence, with avalanche after avalanche of the most awful denunciation and unanswerable logic, and holding opposers by anecdotes that at times caused the house to roar like thunder. I expect never to hear his like again. Mr. Scovil was Secretary of the British and Foreign Anti-slavery Society, and came over for personal labor and council. Brave men were they and worthy of the world's admiration.

I have thus far written with one exception of those whom I knew, and with most of them I was intimately acquainted. The years of labor and sympathy and companionship with these remarkable men, for moral and intellectual growth, were invaluable. The social wealth thus secured was good pay for the ostracism and divers persecutions incident to a reformer's life—and the Lord knows there was a plenty of it.

HON. MYRON HOLLEY

has a splendid monument erected by his friends in Mount Hope, Rochester, New York. It was my privilege to hear Gerrit Smith's oration at the unveiling of that monument, which was devoted largely to a rehearsal of his remarkable life. When Mr. Holley was prominently before the people of the State of New York, I was in the West. My knowledge of him is, therefore, too limited to enable me to say more than that the members of the first Abolition party regarded him as its chief founder and defender. His reasoning powers were said to be of a high order. He was evidently a great and good man, and deserves a large place among moral heroes. Among the scores of likenesses of reformers I have not one more pleasant to look upon than Myron Holley.

I seem to hear a hundred men calling after me, and saying "Don't forget me." These are Rev. David Plumb, John Thomas, Rev. Abraham Prime, Rev. Samuel Ward and Henry Hiland Garnet. All these as true as steel and strong as granite, who did a world of anti-slavery work, as editors and lecturers. Alongside of these were Isaac T. Hopper, Rev. Asa Wing, Asa B. and Wm. R. Smith, and Rev. G. W. Pennington and a hundred others of equal zeal. The State of Connecticut gave to the anti-slavery cause fewer, but not less worthy moral heroes. At the head of these, perhaps, should stand the Hon.

Elihu Burrit, of world-wide fame, Hon. Francis Gillet, Hon. A. T. Williams and the three Burleighs.

In the Green Mountain State were Gov. Slade, as pure as his native mountain air; and a little earlier in history Judge Harrington, who demanded a "bill of sale from the Almighty" before he would return a fugitive slave to his claimant.

The Pine Tree State gave a prominent place in our ranks to the Fessendens, Gen. Neal Dow, Austin Willey, each with a reputation that is national.

Later in the conflict the Granite State gave to our cause the indomitable John P. Hale. On the floor of the United States Senate I witnessed a passage at arms between Mr. Hale and General Cass, out of which the General came "hors du combat."

For the number of her great and strong men, Massachusetts stands hard by the Empire State; and among the greatest of heroes stand Charles Sumner and Wendell Phillips.

In his study in Boston I had a conversation with Mr. Sumner, in which he brought himself down to my capacity with an ease, grace and familiarity that exalted him far above all my former conceptions. There was revealed in him a love and gentleness and purity that dwell only in a soul that has been baptized with the Spirit of the Lord Jesus. Among the rare books that covered his table lay a Bible in the forefront. From that book Mr. Sumner had received that higher education without which he never could have been the well-nigh peerless man that he was. It was the Christ-like in him, in his speeches against slavery in the United States Senate, that roused the devil in his would-be murderers. At his best Daniel Webster received only the admiration of the American people; but Charles Sumner won such love from the people that thousands would have gladly borne in themselves the deadly blows that fell on him from the bludgeon of Brooks. His like this century will not see again. A great sin must needs have a great sacrifice and the offering must be of innocence.

MASONRY IN FRANCE.

ITS POWER IN POLITICS AND ITS DISGUSTING RITES.

The following is sent from Paris to one of the New York dailies of May 7. We print it entire, though by no means endorsing the commendatory notices of the lodge in this country:

Considerable feeling exists at the present moment among the Freemasons of France against the President or Grand Master of the Grand Orient, M. Colfavru, and steps are on foot for his possible deposition. The cause of this feeling lies in an official communication to the Grand Master from M. Levaillant, the Minister of the Interior, asking him to keep an eye on the various lodges and to issue orders prohibiting them from meddling with politics any longer, the same being by M. Colfavru embodied at once in a circular bearing date the 28th of May and transmitted to the 55 Masters of the lodges at Paris. The document caused a vast amount of indignation, which culminated in the Master of Progress Lodge (one of the most important in Paris) taking the initiative and summoning a special meeting of the 55 "Venerables" or Masters in order to discuss not only the objectionable circular, but also the attitude to be assumed by the lodges in the Paris municipal elections. Of course this was an act of direct defiance against M. Colfavru, and the latter, availing himself of the absolute powers intrusted to him as Grand Master of the Grand Orient of France, lost no time in issuing the most positive commands prohibiting any member of the craft from attending the meeting. Mindful of their vows of obedience, the "Venerables" obeyed and the meeting did not take place; but the conduct of the Grand Master and the government has aroused much indignation. Agitation on the subject is very strong, not only in Paris but in the provinces, and when the fact is taken into consideration that more than half the members of the Chamber of Deputies are Freemasons, a crisis of some importance may be considered imminent.

If the Secretary of the Interior at Washington or the Secretary of the Home Department in London were to address any such official communication to the Grand Masters either of American or British Freemasons it would be received with blank amazement, for the lodges in Great Britain and the United States have no more idea of interfering with politics than the man in the moon. In France, however, this is entirely different. All religious character has been removed from the order and M. Colfavru describes Freemasonry as the bitterest and most dreaded enemy of the church. "Le clericalisme, voila l'enemi" is the device of almost every lodge in the country. M. Colfavru also pointed out in the recent speech that Masonry was the most formidable opponent of monarchy, and had contributed more than anything else to bring about the overthrow of the empire and the establishment of the republic. In fact, French Masonry might be called a distinctly advanced radical institution, and some years ago much talk was caused by the issue of an edict from the Grand Lodge of Great Britain proclaiming the separation of French from British Masonry and forbidding English craftsmen to visit French lodges. After having been a considerable factor in the creation of the present form of government, French Masons do not understand why they should suddenly and arbitrarily be debarred from any further participation in politics; and they are not likely to surrender the power which they have obtained without a struggle. Government officials in very large numbers in France, and especially prominent politicians, are Freemasons. In the recently published memoirs of M. Mace, the famous chief of the detective police, the author asserts that frequently when the police were on the track of criminals a delegate from the Grand Master of the Freemasons has presented himself in the private office of the Juge d'Instruction to whom the matter was confided, and, having named his Master, has induced the magistrate to throw the compromising documents into the fire, so as to prevent any prominent Masonic dignitary from being convicted. It is said to be in large part owing to this influence that no steps have ever been taken to prosecute the late Minister of Finance, M. Tirard, who when in office was chairman of the gold mining company which possessed neither mines nor gold, and was shown to have issued $500,000 worth of stock after the directors had been informed at a board meeting that there were absolutely no assets. Other cases of this character could be named to show the immense power of Masons in France. Gambetta, Ferry, and many other Republican statesmen have owed much to Masonry and as stated above the majority of the Chamber of Deputies belong to the craft. It is somewhat curious that M. Colfavru, the President of the Grand Orient of France, is a mere salaried employe in the railway department of Baron Alphonse de Rothschild's office. The post which he holds is that of Inspector-General of the Northern Railway, for which he receives $20,000 per annum. Besides this M. Colfavru is on the Board of Directors of the Panama Canal enterprise.

A curious book has recently been published at Paris by M. Leo Taxil, who formerly held a high grade in Masonry, but who has now forsaken the craft, owing to reasons of a political nature. The work gives a detailed description of the constitution, rules and rites of French Masonry, and it is certainly interesting, whatever be the facts. From the account of the initiation ceremonies at the lodge of the Grand Orient of France one learns that there is a considerable amount of clap-trap connected with it which appears incredible and contemptible to an American or British member of the fraternity. "The postulant," says this author, "after being conducted through a labyrinth of passages, is finally shut up in a narrow little closet and is ordered to draw up his last will and testament. The walls of the cell are black and adorned with skeletons, death's-heads and cross-bones. There is no window, and a gas-light gives a dim light. The furniture consists of a table and a stool. On the former are placed a skull and cross-bones. Suddenly the gaslight is extinguished, and a sliding panel opening in the wall reveals a cavern lighted with sepulchral lamps. A decapitated head lying on blood-stained napkins meets the gaze, and a voice sounding from the wall against which the candidate leans exclaims in awe-inspiring tones that the head is that of a perjured brother who had disclosed the secrets of the order. The means employed for this trick are very simple. The block on which the head appears to rest is hollow and conceals the body of the performer, who holds his eyes shut and his mouth slightly open. The sepulchral lamps are the result of camphorated spirits mingled with coarse salt, which, burning with a greenish light, give a cadaverous appearance to the head. The awful tones of the voice are obtained by talking down a speaking tube. Some of the panels in the wall are of ground glass, behind which a magic lantern is introduced, showing moving spectres gradually increasing in size and apparently starting forward to devour the postulant, or masked men of life size who appear to be stabbing an individual bound hand and foot with cords.

"At length, when the opening ceremonies are terminated, the Master directs that the postulant be summoned. The latter before leaving his cell is stripped of every vestige of clothing, a cord is tied round his waist and a mask put over his face so as to blindfold him completely. Thus attired, he is conducted to the door of the hall where the lodge is in session, and after knocking three times is admitted and placed between two pillars at one end of the room, the point of a sword being held so as to slightly prick his breast. After a long kind of catechism has been gone through with, and the postulant has expressed his readiness to submit to the terrible trials to which he is about to be exposed, the president gives an order to plunge him into the cavern. Immediately two muscular brethren seize him and fling him backward into a frame covered by several sheets of stout paper, which is held in an inclined position. Of course the paper gives way and the candidate falls at full length on a mattress placed on the other side. At the same moment the door is banged to, and an iron ring shaken up and down a notched iron bar makes a sound as of an enormous lock being turned several times. The candidate is then subjected to a further catechism, sitting between the two pillars on a stool bristling with nails and resting on uneven feet. While in the act of taking the oaths the 'cup of oaths,' fatal to perjurers, is handed to him. The cup is divided into two compartments, which turn on a pivot. The one contains water, the other an exceedingly bitter concoction. At the moment when he commences the formula of the oath he is given some of the water to taste, and at the words, 'If ever I break my oath,' the upper part of the cup is turned imperceptibly round so that the bitter drink is brought to his lips.

"He is then started off on what is called the first journey, which is a weary perambulation of the lodge from east to west, varied by a series of childish farces. First the candidate is made to walk very slowly, and then he is dragged along hurriedly. Suddenly he is stopped and told to duck his head because of a vault, and then he is warned that there are obstacles to be crossed, and is made to jump. Next he is told that there are steps to be mounted, and that he must lift his right foot, and as there is nothing of the kind he naturally stumbles. He is taken along planks on rollers which give way beneath him. He is forced to climb other planks like saws, which suddenly throw him into space. But the most absurd trial is that of the endless ladder. It is like a treadmill, up which the candidate climbs wearily, like a squirrel in a cage, without ever getting any further. One of the brethren, seated quietly at his side, holds his hand, drops it, and nudges his arm as though he were following him, thus completing the illusion. When the candidate is thoroughly exhausted a small platform is fitted to the top of the steps, which he is at length allowed to reach. A number of brethren surround him waving large fans, and a voice exclaims: 'We are now 1,500 feet above the sea. Throw yourself into space.' While the unfortunate victim hesitates he is pushed from behind and falls a distance of about six feet onto a mattress.

"Meanwhile noises such as thunder, hail, wind, etc., are produced by machines with which the lodge is provided for the purpose; and the din is increased by frightful shrieking, howling, and crying on all sides. Finally the disheveled and perspiring candidate is dragged to the West Post, where he receives a strong shock from a galvanic battery, while at the same time one of the brethren strikes him violently on the chest with his mallet. After being questioned as to his readiness to shed his blood in defense of the order, his arm is pricked with a lancet, a few drops of tepid water from a narrow-necked bottle fall onto the patient's flesh, and the remainder is poured noisily into a basin; so as to delude him into the belief that his blood is flowing. The arm is then bound up in a sling. The president then asks him on which part of the body he prefers to be branded with the hieroglyphical seal of the lodge. The 'Masonic seal' trick is done in different ways. The ritual of the Grand Orient of France says that one of the brethren is to rub with a dry rag the part indicated of the postulant's body and then quickly apply a piece of ice. But the usual way is to put the warm end of a just-extinguished wax candle or of a slightly heated wineglass on the spot. Each one of these methods gives the candidate the impression of having been branded with a hot iron. The mask is then removed from the postulant's face and the president salutes him with the triple fraternal kiss, first on the right cheek, then on the left, and lastly on the mouth. After this the candidate is invested with his apron and a pair of gloves."

The remainder of the ceremonies are similar to those customary in American and English lodges, and need not be referred to here. The above description is sufficient to show the immense difference which exists between the grand institution of Freemasonry in the United States or Great Britain and that of France. The childish and contemptible tricks practiced in the French lodges are more worthy of figuring in some farcical history than in the rites and ceremonies of the greatest benevolent institution in the world.

RUN BY RINGS.

An eminent statesman, Disraeli, said that this world was managed by secret societies and organizations. This is doubtless true. Cliques, lodges, rings, corporations, syndicates, sectarian societies, labor unions, with all their various machinery of manipulation, intimidation, speculation, excommunication, robbery, murder, strikes, boycotts, and everything of the kind, doubtless exercise a controlling power over many of the affairs of this world. But because the world is thus managed, is no good reason why Christians, who "are not of the world," should manage or be managed in the same way.

Some good men take part in these movements to accomplish good ends. But they are trying to fight the devil with fire, and he can stand more of that than they can, and they are pretty sure to be defeated in the struggle. He knows the ground better than they do, and has more secret plots and plans than they, and will give them odds and still defeat them.

Christians have a better path open before them; the path of openness, truth, sincerity, righteousness and peace. The world lieth in the wicked one, and all its plans and contrivances and promises are uncertain and disappointing. He who looks to God and him alone, can be independent of worldly complications and will stand when these have fallen to rise no more. What honest men want, is not secret plotting but open testimony. If half the time spent in secret cabals were spent in the open denunciation of wrongs, it would do more good. If you know things are wrong, out with it and tell the truth. This is better than dark-lantern tactics, which place the control of the many in the hands of the few, and often cause evils greater than those they cure.—Common People.

PRESS COMMENT.

Dr. John Hall not long ago in a sermon remarked that four-fifths of the crimes committed in New York City were perpetrated by Roman Catholics. And yet these devotees of Rome do not make up one-half of the city's population. This fact,—if it be a fact, and no doubt it is—is a sad commentary on the moral and religious training given to the people by Rome's official dignitaries. Evidently humanity needs something better than Roman Catholicism.—Associate Presbyterian.

While at Chambersburg, Pa., Rev. J. M. Bishop asked us to visit him, and said he would show us Wm. Morgan. We went and saw, not the veritable Morgan, but his statue. It is a bronzed statue three feet high, said to look like Wm. Morgan who was murdered in 1826 by the Freemasons for revealing the secrets of the order. It was made by the company that made the Morgan monument which stands at Batavia, N. Y. It is said that they were offered $150 for this statue, but refused to take it. They afterward presented it to Rev. J. M. Bishop, and it now stands in his home.—Rev. Wm. Dillon in Christian Conservator.

In China, where moon-worship largely prevails during the festival of Yuo-Ping, which is held annually during the eighth month, incense is burned in the temples, cakes are made like the moon, and at full moon the people spread out obligations and make prostrations to the planet. These cakes are moon cakes and veritable offerings to the Queen of Heaven, who represents the female principle in Chinese theology. If we turn now to Jeremiah, 7 18, and read there, "The women knead dough to make cakes to the Queen of Heaven, and to pour out drink offerings unto other gods," and remember that, according to Rashi, these cakes of the Hebrews had the image of the god or goddess stamped upon them, we are in view of a fact of much interest. The interest becomes greater when we learn that in parts of Lancashire there exists a precisely similar custom of making cakes in honor of the Queen of Heaven. From these facts, the discovery of two buns, each marked with a cross, in Herculaneum, and other evidences, we are driven to the conclusion that the "hoit crots buns" of Christian England are in reality but a relic of moon-worship.—All the Year Round.

While the Knights of Labor are running their course to disintegration and extinction by the monstrous tyranny of their master-workmen and walking delegates, another labor mission is coming into active life. The oppression of women in factories and shops is in many places quite as severe as that which called out Hood's "Song of the Shirt." Indifference to the rights and wrongs of working women exists in persons and classes from whom one would expect better things. Women, girls and children are underpaid, overworked and defrauded out of their slender wages by a system of fines. So far nothing has been done to mitigate these wrongs but to publish their existence and condemn them. They will be taken in hand in a more thorough and effective manner. We shall have organizations of Christian women to look after the interests of working girls. This should not be permitted to fall into the hands of women who love display before the public, and who would only use it for the purpose of further notoriety. It should be a quiet, unobtrusive, and yet determined movement among prudent, unselfish, Christian women.—Interior.

District Assembly 49, of this city, insists on re-enacting the farce of the tail wagging the dog, and claims the right of being heard and felt in the management (or mismanagement) of the Knights of Labor organization, as a whole, throughout the country. It doesn't quite claim the earth, but only the right to manage it. Even this, however, has met with objectors, and one of them is from within its own ranks. Mr. Matthew Barr was for a long time one of its leaders, but becoming tired of the spirit manifested by the Assembly at large, revolted and withdrew. He gives his reason in words which, coming from such a source, are pregnant with meaning. He declares the Assembly to be a tyranny more galling than any its members have ever experienced from employers. He adds: "Have they (the working-men) been dominated so long by arrogant, domineering, ambitious men that they are no longer able to defend their rights—men who openly declare that they are above the constitution, that they are above the law."

The principle underlying the Knights of Labor organization, viz.: mutual aid in honorably strengthening and protecting the interests of laboring men, is worthy of all praise; but there are two essentials to this end—intelligence and mutual forbearance for the general good. The Knights of Labor do not give any evidence of the possession of either of these essentials. Hence the constant "bubble, bubble, toil and trouble" within the ranks.—Christian Nation.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

AMERICA'S OBLIGATIONS TO IRELAND.

General Benjamin F. Butler, in an address delivered at the banquet at the Parker House in honor of William O'Brien, M. P., Irish editor and agitator, said that the American people were under special obligations to assist the Irish in breaking the British yoke, for during the revolution that oppressed race had rendered us exceptional service. The following characteristic sentence from the old general was greeted by applause: "As we are built up by men of every land filled with oppression and wrong, so we are bound by true sympathy and by reason of our claims in favor of the equality of men to sympathize, not sentimentally, but actually and fully with any people who are struggling for their freedom." The great lawyer also quoted much history not generally well known to corroborate his statements that the Irish had rendered the United States incalculable aid in its wars, and declared that the Herald's editor was deficient in the history of his country for criticizing his (Butler's) synonymous statements on a previous occasion.

The enemies of Mr. Butler, as they have always done, when he espouses any political idea, will doubtless charge him with "having an axe to grind." What better opportunity to secure Irish good-will, which means Irish votes, then to endorse a cause nearest their hearts—Irish national independence?

Whatever Mr. Butler's intentions might have been, his words uttered on this occasion teemed with sound sense and true sympathy which none can gainsay, and in spite of any possible selfish aspirations on the speaker's part, will have tremendous weight because of their own intrinsic value. In closing his remarks, Mr. Butler said: "Have I not proved my case by facts that are beyond dispute? Knowing these facts, who shall say that the grandsons of those who fought the Revolution do not owe a debt of gratitude to Irishmen? I acknowledge my part of the debt and will pay it."

In delivering the speech the General dwelt upon each point just as he would have done had he stood in a court of justice instead of a company of 300 of Boston's most illustrious citizens. Every point was driven in clean to the head with the hammer of actual fact, and firmly clinched by date and incontrovertible testimony.

The visit of Mr. O'Brien to this city has been a sort of nine day's wonder. The agitator, without doubt, is an able man and a true friend to his country. Boston, or at least a part of it, has been as deeply agitated as was Canada, the expression only being different. The friends of Mr. O'Brien seem to have gone to as great extreme in one way, as did his enemies at Toronto in another. On his arrival here, he was hustled upon the stage of the Boston Theatre, where, although completely exhausted by his journey and Canadian experience, he delivered a lengthy and interesting discourse, which was prefaced by an eloquent introduction by the gifted editor of the Boston Pilot, the Irish-American poet and lecturer, John Boyle O'Reilly.

Mr. O'Reilly is an escaped Australian convict, and author of "Moondyne," a tale of Australian penal life. In spite of the effort on the part of the Catholic church to suppress the publication of this book, it has been set afloat on the sea of Irish literature, a veritable gunboat against British oppression. Mr. O'Reilly is a man of sterling good sense. In reply to a question put to the Pilot by the Herald in regard to what course it would pursue in regard to a certain bull of the Holy Father concerning Fenianism, he said that the Pilot would use its own judgment.

Among other eminent guests and speakers present at the banquet were Hon. Alanson W. Beard, Ex-Mayor Prince, President Capen of Tufts' College, and Col. Taylor, editor of the Boston Globe.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Between A. D. 1095 and 1270, there were seven crusades in Europe. Their object was to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the hands of the infidel. Perhaps 3,000,000 souls, including 80,000 children, were sacrificed in this wild enterprise. The first crusade, after losing many armies by battle, famine and disease, entered Jerusalem four years after the "Holy War" had been proclaimed. This crusade was preached by Peter the Hermit. In his burning zeal he traveled through Europe until the people were all a flame of fire. The Pope, Urban I., took it up. Two councils were held. At the second in Clermont, France, the Pope made a great oration. "The pent-up emotions of the crowd burst forth and cries of Deus vult (God wills it) rose simultaneously from the whole audience." The Crusade was decreed and Deus vult was made the war-cry by the order of the Pope.

The National Reform Association is preaching another crusade. It has for its object rescuing this government from the hands of the enemies of the King of kings, and placing it in the hands of his friends. The effect of the Eastern Crusade was to break the night of the Dark Ages which rested upon Europe, and open up the way for the introduction of Eastern civilization. The effect of this Western Crusade will be the overthrow of the kingdom of Satan and the establishment of the kingdom of truth and righteousness. The liquor traffic will be abolished, secret societies will be disbanded, our land will have her Sabbaths, our princes shall be peace and our exactors righteousness. "Thou shalt be called Hepzibah and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee and thy land shall be married."

Last Sabbath I preached in the Avondale Presbyterian church of which Rev. Geo. C. Heckman, D.D., has been pastor for eight years. They are repairing their church. The men have subscribed $1,000 and the ladies are raising an equal amount. They have already secured $600 and expected to raise the balance by a fete held on the grounds of Mr. W. F. West yesterday.

The interest in Decoration Day was not so great as formerly. As the war of the Rebellion diminishes in importance the approaching moral conflict increases. When the slave system had murdered Lovejoy and Brown the bugle sounded and the war began which crushed it. The liquor traffic has murdered Haddock, Northrup and Gambrell and the bugle is sounding for the war which will destroy the drink system. Absolute prohibition is the divine remedy. Men may apply the nostrums of license and tax, but they are only the veriest quackery.

"When some one was enlarging to Coleridge," says McCosh, "on the tendency of some scheme which was expected to regenerate the world, the poet flung up into the air the down of a thistle which grew by the roadside, and went on to say, 'The tendency of that thistle is toward China; but I know with assured certainty that it will never get there—nay, it is more than probable that after sundry eddyings and gyrations up and down, and backwards and forwards, it will be found somewhere near the place in which it grew.' Such has ever been the issue of those boasted schemes of human wisdom which have professed to change the heart of man. Human nature is in this respect like the salt sea; the sun is daily evaporating its waters, but does not drink up one particle of that saline ingredient; if men will drink of its bitter waters, they sicken, and madden and die; all the rivers that run into it have not changed its saltness. It is thus with that malignant nature which we inherit and propagate, all human means have failed to purify it, and it stimulates to madness, disease, and death."

God has given us his law. In it alone there is peace. "Of law, there can be no less acknowledged," writes the renowned Hooper, "than that her seat is in the bosom of God; her voice, the harmony of the world; all things in heaven and earth do her homage, the very least as feeling her care, and the greatest as not exempted from her power; both angels and creatures of whatever condition, though each in different sort and manner, admiring her as the mother of their peace and joy."

Let me close with this practical application of the law as interpreted by Shakespeare in the advice of a mother to her son:

"Love all, trust few,
Do wrong to none; be able for thine enemy,
Rather in power, than use; and keep thy friend
Under thy own life's key; be check'd for silence,
But never tax'd for speech."

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

JACKSON, Mich., May 31st, 1887.

Crops of all kinds were suffering for rain, but yesterday was a time of refreshing for the thirsty earth. Rain began falling in the morning at Ypsilanti and continued at intervals until evening. Grave decoration was somewhat interfered with, as the rain is reported quite general, but benefits to the living were far more than an equivalent.

My brief stop with Bro. E. J. Derbyshire was in every way pleasant, and I shall long cherish the hospitality and kindness of his home among happy memories. His life-companion has gone home before him and the presence of wife, mother, sister, and friend is greatly missed in their spacious home. If Bro. Derbyshire could dispose of his 120-acre farm, he would visit Wheaton to look after better educational and social advantages for his three children.

OWASSO JUNCTION.—Jackson has a temperance hotel. It is near the Central depot. Not a pretentious or attractive-looking building, but seems to be nicely kept at moderate prices. Calling at 11 p. m. I remarked to the landlord, "You advertise my principles, and I have come to test your accommodations."

"Thank you," said he; "if all who talk temperance were as practical as you are we could give better accommodations; but most, even of the noted advocates of the cause, who stop here put up at hotels where liquor is sold openly." I apprehend that this is a true statement that applies not to Jackson only but to many other cities. If so it is a grievous error that cannot be too soon corrected. It is a sin and a shame for temperance people to pay their money in support of "gilded gateways" which "outwardly indeed appear beautiful," but are in fact "sink-holes of iniquity," where Satan "holds high carnival" among debauched victims of lust and rum, curtained behind the thin gauze of respectability. Is it not high time for temperance people to become practical at home at the polls and when they may chance to be traveling? I know from fifteen years' experience that a traveling man is sometimes compelled to eat bread where liquor is sold, but it is an exception to the general rule even now, and may be made more and more so if temperance people will take the same pains to assert their principles when journeying as at home. Self-respect and the safety of the public demand that temperance people should patronize those who hold and live their principles.

St. Louis is a live little town and seems improved in some respects since I first visited it on the 24th of November last. It has, however, the twin curse of lodge and saloon to contend with, and it was after much inquiry and an hour's search that I found a temperance boarding place at the "Park House." No one, not even the city marshal, seemed to know that there was any place in St. Louis where comfortable accommodations could be had without supporting the infernal traffic in rum. Some said, "You cannot find such a place and it could not live here," an assertion which Mr. Andrews of the "Park House" is proving false, a fact which some of his well-dressed neighbors seem not to have found out.

I met here an old friend, Mrs. Farout, formerly of Newville, Ind., also a gentleman from Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, who is acquainted with Rev. D. Yant, Joseph Kohlar and many others whom I knew. This gentleman had unfortunately gone down into the mystic cavern as far as the Knight Templar degree but had not one word to say in favor of the orders. I have distributed tracts and talked with individuals but have held no public meetings. As I am here on business for the Association I have had little time to look after the lecture work. Several have expressed a desire to hear something on the subject and I have no doubt that with a little time a meeting could be arranged. For the present, however, I must trust to the blessing of God on the few tracts I can distribute before leaving on an early train.

JUNE 2ND.—It has been raining here in the vicinity of Lansing all this forenoon. I met on the train an old time M. E. minister, but still hale and hearty for work. He was of course opposed to the lodge and a radical prohibitionist. Referring to the recent constitutional amendment election, he remarked, "We were counted, not voted, out." Bro. Wood, minister in Friends' church near Ypsilanti, is of the same opinion, but the friends are undaunted and determined to give no quarters. Hearing a discussion on the proposal to appropriate $60,000 for Normal School buildings in Ypsilanti, I remarked that I was surprised to find any opposition to an educational enterprise in a State that could afford to pay the rebel Pike and his Masonic crew $10,000 for laying the corner stone of their Capitol. Only one replied, assenting to what I said, and the discussion ended abruptly. The Masonic solons of Michigan don't seem very proud of their "brother" Albert Pike, either at Pea Ridge in scalping Union soldiers or at the dedication of their State house; but Albert and his crew got the money all the same and the people of Michigan had to pay it.

J. P. STODDARD.

BRETHREN HINMAN AND COLE IN PHILADELPHIA.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am now two weeks in Philadelphia, and have been kept quite busy all the time, except Saturdays. On Thursday, the 19th inst., Bro. Hinman and myself attended the annual conference of the A. M. E. Zion Church, and I had then the opportunity of addressing about 300 ministers and delegates, on "the necessity of a reformation in our present system of religion and civilization, for the elevation of the Negro race." Though the simple truths which I laid before them appeared as a strange and impracticable theory to many, yet the more spiritual and thoughtful "pondered the words in their hearts," and found that they are Scriptural, notwithstanding their opposition to "flesh and blood," or worldly wealth and glory.

Rev. Dr. Tanner handed me a Masonic paper, published by colored Masons in Philadelphia, and my attention was drawn to an article in which Mr. Douglass denies that the white lodges recognize either Negro Masons, or Knight Templars, and quoted that the constitution of Knight Templars affirms that "No one shall be a Knight Templar except he be a male of the white race," so "every Negro Mason must be regarded as a clandestine Mason." I told some of the brethren with whom I had conversation on this point, that it will be contrary to reason if Freemasonry should recognize the black man as his brother, and my authority for believing so is because Freemasonry and kindred societies deny the fatherhood of God. The name of Christ is not used in the lodges. God the Son is not acknowledged by them. On account of his name and in order to exclude him from their society, the Word of God has been mutilated, and Christ cut out from the Scriptures.

Now, God is no more a father without Christ, than a woman is a mother without a child. The cause which dispersed mankind on the face of the earth and made the white an enemy of the black, and an Indian a stranger to the Spaniard, is the sin of the first Adam. It is in the second Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ (whom the Masons reject) that both Jews and Greeks, bond or free, white or black, become one. We cannot be "children, heirs," and heirs of God, if we refuse to be joint heirs with Christ. (Rom. 8: 17.) When Christ is acknowledged truly, God is a father and man is a brother. In many instances, I have discovered that Christianity in this country is inferior to Mohammedanism. You believe in the Trinity and fatherhood of God; the Mohammedans in Africa do not. My Mohammedan fathers think it blasphemous to apply the term Father to God. Their doctrine can only admit of his Absolute Sovereignty, rabi'l a lamina, King of the whole creation, Lord of all worlds, before whom they prostrate and rub their faces on the earth. But though they do not believe in God as Father, and Christ as Son, yet they believe in man as brother, which nominal Christianity has in great degree openly denied in past years in America. If we were to ask Christ to decide, I have no doubt that he would in this commend the Mohammedans rather than false Christians. "For if ye love not man whom ye see, how can ye love God whom ye cannot see?"

I have so many invitations to attend preachers' meetings, churches, and associations, that it is not possible for me to answer all the calls. I addressed the A. M. E. preachers' meeting here on Monday, the 23d. There were twenty-three ministers present. I addressed the assembly of the Reformed Presbyterian church on Thursday, May 26. By invitation of Rev. J. H. Leiper I delivered a prepared address to the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, on "The Needs of Africa, and the Failures of False Christianity," on May 17. Bro. Leiper recommends that I should print and circulate this address, and I promised to do so as soon as I can have 200 subscribers at 25 cents each. I am glad to say that I had thirty-two handed in only yesterday, and hope to have many more. I lectured on the evening of the same day to a crowded house in Allen church; preached there on Sabbath morning the 29th, and at Camden in the Mesopotamia Methodist church in the evening.

Yesterday evening Bro. Hinman and myself lectured in Rev. T. P. Stevenson's church. We had a good audience of both white and colored. My effort was to prove, especially to the colored people, that an oath-bound, secret society is not a subject of private opinion. I believe that every man has a right to follow the dictates of his conscience; but private opinion or secret actions must be arrested when they tamper with the question of morality and truth. Heathenism and Mormonism are practiced by the dictates of conscience, so-called. Thunder worship is private opinion, and if secret, oath-bound societies must be tolerated because they are private opinions, we need no more missionaries in the world. I need your earnest prayer. Yours in Christ,

J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

FROM THE IOWA AGENT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I went to Vinton, Benton county, and visited several of the ministers who reside there, secured some subscriptions to the Iowa Christian Association, and took some subscriptions to the Cynosure. I went six miles into the country and visited the pastor of a New School Covenanter church, and arranged with him to preach in his church on the religion of Freemasonry, on the following Sabbath, which I accordingly did. The same week I lectured at a United Brethren church twelve miles from Vinton.

I then went to Raymond, where I arranged to lecture at some future time. I went into the country where there are a few United Presbyterians and New School Covenanters and Wesleyan Methodists, and took some subscriptions to the work and for the Cynosure, and talked up the matter of lectures at some future time.

I then came to Masonville, Delaware county, where I preached in the Baptist church, and arranged to lecture in the Wesleyan Methodist church the following Monday night, but was hindered from lecturing by the rain. To-night I have another appointment to lecture and then I will go to Buchanan county.

Let continued prayer be offered for the success of the Iowa reform work. Brethren, pray for me.

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

PEACE! PEACE! WHEN THERE IS NONE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A religious journal was once asked about the propriety of joining some secret society and answered in the evasive style of Talma, which excuses or justifies when there are some "good men" in them! Now I ask if this good-man argument does not equally require and justify the reading of a certain passage in the New Testament thus: "Hold fellowship with the fruitful works of darkness, and don't reprove them?"

If the inspired pages abound with warnings against "false teachers and false Christs," and with exhortations to watchfulness and self-denial, how shall we regard religious Balsams that do not and will not say a word against the Nicolaitans and Jezebels that get into the churches and often control them?

Great evils require great works of faith and labors of love. John Brown is now one of the brightest stars in our firmament. Haddock, another, is destined to shine brighter as the day closes over the grave of saloonery. Are there more martyrs required to enthroned our Lord and Master over all the masters and lodgeries and false teachers of anti-Christ? They cry out, "Let us alone," but must they not be cast out and find their fine with the swine in the deep? Yours truly, A SUBSCRIBER.

A FAITHFUL PASTOR COMMENDED.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been a constant reader of your valuable paper since the first of the year, and have seen but little in it from this part of our State. Secret societies abound in this town in full force; their object seems to be to get control of the churches here. All good brother Masons can join our church here without much questioning in regard to belief.

I see by the Cynosure of May 12 that Rev. Geo. R. Milton, late of Hastings, Neb., has accepted a call to Elgin, Ill. Bro. Milton was pastor here at Pawnee City for one year. He is a son-in-law of Rev. C. C. Foote of Detroit, and like him is unsparing in his blows against sin; and I will say to the brethren at Elgin, you will find in Bro. Milton a man who hews to the line, and lives as he preaches,—an earnest, humble follower of Christ. Sin to him in any form is "that abominable thing that the Lord hateth," and he will rebuke it. He was the means here of doing much good, although he was bitterly opposed by the elders of our church, three of whom were secret society and tobacco worshippers. But, thank God, through his efforts and unsparing blows against their sins we have other elders in their place.

I am glad of the stand so many are taking in the Cynosure. To me, the greatest enemy the church of Christ has to-day is Masonry; and its twin brother is tobacco. Our youth are corrupted more to-day by professed Christians using tobacco than they are by their using whisky.

May God bless the efforts of the Cynosure.

REMINDERS OF THE FREE MISSION BAPTISTS.

BROTHER EDITOR:—Permit me to say that through the kindness of somebody, perhaps brother Peter Howe, I am indebted for the reading of your paper. I find much in the paper I like, and now and then something that does not please me so well. But as it opens out upon secret oath-bound organizations and heartily goes in for prohibition it is a grand auxiliary in the work of reform. Thanks to the friend who causes it to visit me. I hail with delight every Christian agency aiding in our work of social, church, and political reform and should be especially glad had we an out-spoken religious paper as against all oathbound societies. My people, the Baptists, once had such an organ, the American Baptist, and with such a man at its head as brother N. Brown it became a power for good. I know of no Baptist paper open to the discussion of Masonry, Odd-fellowship and other secret societies. For years, that is from the organization of the Free Mission Society, 1843, to its dissolution, I was with it, and nearly or quite all of its supporters were anti-secret and radical temperance men.

Permit me to invite any Baptist who wishes and will work for thorough reform to write me at once giving me their ideas and wishes in this direction. Address me at Hoopestown, Vermillion Co., Ill.

REV. A. KENYON.

WEST DES MOINES UNITED BRETHREN CONVENTION.

DEKALB, Iowa.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—A convention was held in West Des Moines conference of the U. B. church, by Halleck Floyd and others, for the purpose of arousing the brethren to a sense of the duty we owe to God in doing what we can to keep the church on her foundation of separation from the world and worldly institutions. The meeting was harmonious. Such a unity of purpose prevailed as only occurs in the presence of the Spirit of Christ. We know of no department of God's army having a harder struggle with the lodge power than the United Brethren. It proves to my mind that a goodly number of them are brethren united in Christ. When the fundamental principles of a church of Christ become movable then that church cannot be compared to the house of God, because his house and its foundation are not movable; but a tent is. "I would rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of wickedness."

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XII.—June 19, 1887.—The Commandments.—Exodus 20: 12-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.—Matt. 22:39.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Our Duty to our Neighbors. vs. 12-17. The command to honor our parents follows naturally after that part of the Decalogue which teaches us our duty to God. A tender, loving, wise parent is God's greatest earthly gift to man or woman. It is under this symbol that he has chosen to reveal himself to us, and where there is no reverence for him, and no respect paid to his laws, we shall look in vain for filial duty. Our American children and youth are showing a sad tendency, sad because it seems to be on the increase, to forget the sixth commandment. Our national life is not conducive to reverence. We have not, as in Europe, the conservative influence of ancient institutions. We are taught to question old authorities and old forms of belief, and often to follow blindly in the wake of new guides, for no better reason than the novelty of their theories. But these are only surface causes. The real root of the matter lies deeper. A nation that forgets to honor God will forget to honor parents. National impiety is sure to write itself on the broken hearts of fathers and mothers mourning for ungrateful and disobedient children. In the Sermon on the Mount our Lord has taught us that obedience to the spirit of these commands is what God required; that all unjust anger is forbidden by the sixth, all unchaste thought by the seventh, all overreaching of our neighbors by the eighth, and so on. God was not revealing any new truth to the Jews. They knew these things were wrong before. The heathen nations knew them to be wrong. The moral code was written on the conscience of man in Eden, but as the race grew corrupt, and false systems of religious belief began to take the place of the true, their sense of moral duty grew distorted. They put darkness for light and light for darkness. This is the effect of all false religions—to make void the commandments of God. And here again Masonry affords the most striking illustration of this tendency. Its oaths are murderous, invoking death in the most terrible form on all traitors. In the higher degrees the duty of taking the life of one who has revealed its secrets is plainly taught. The murder of Morgan was openly defended even by ministers of the Gospel. Other secret orders are open to the same charge. The ritual of the United Sons of Industry teaches it, as also the oaths of the Knights of Pythias. Masonry's treatment of the seventh commandment ought to be enough to open the eyes of every man who honors his mother or sister. And every Christian man, above all, every Christian minister, ought to resent as an insult an oath which binds him to respect the chastity of all near female relatives of Masons but none others. The eighth commandment fares no better. He is required to bind himself not to defraud a brother Mason to the value of a cent, while left free to steal from other men as much as he chooses. It is in itself the most gigantic fraud ever perpetrated on man, and the stream cannot rise higher than its source. The most it can do is to seem moral, but the Word of God is a sharp sword piercing its filthy hypocrisy through and through.

2. Why God's Commands are given us. vs. 18-21. "God is come to prove you," etc. Instead of leaving us like the beasts that perish God has endowed us with a spiritual nature and given us his Word to try us, to prove whether we will walk in his ways or not. We are on probation. They who keep his commandments alone "have a right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

FROM PELICUET'S NOTES.

The Fifth Commandment, "Honor." In the heart and in the life. The word expresses far more than obey. The duties of a child to its parents should all spring from a feeling of profound reverence and affection, such as leads not merely to cold, formal obedience, but to every possible manifestation of love and zeal. The right of the father to command, and the obligation of the son to obey, may cease when the latter has attained the station, and assumed for himself the cares and responsibilities of manhood; but his obligation to honor the earthly authors of his existence and guardians of his childhood must continue while he lives. Considered in every possible light, the word of the text is most happily chosen.

Sixth Commandment. This command forbids (1) murder. (2) Whatever is injurious to our lives, as gluttony, intemperance, dissipation, unhealthy fashions, badly-ventilated rooms, and uncleanness. (3) Whatever injures the lives of others, as selling intoxicating liquors and adulterated food, over-working those in our employ.

A great English authority declares that all deaths over 17 in 1,000 are preventible, and all over that is murder caused by carelessness in spreading disease, by bad drains, by poor ventilation, and many other causes. (4) Anger and hate are forbidden (see Matt. 5: 21-25), as the spirit which causes murder.—P.

Seventh Commandment. We are forbidden, then, by this command, all the things which tend to the evil forbidden: (1) All evil, sensual thoughts. (2) Theaters, which arouse sensual feelings, and bring into low company. (3) Dancing. Looking (4) at obscene pictures, which are exposed for sale at most news stands. (5) Bad, low reading. Read what Dr. Holland says: "Of boys' books there are many that never could have been written by men of conscience; and there are periodicals, prepared exclusively for boys, which it is a shame to write, a sin to publish and sell, and a curse to read. Comparatively few of our people know what base, criminal, dirty things are prepared by tens of thousands for American boys, and scattered and sold all over the land. They are passed from hand to hand, and either openly or covertly read by hundreds of thousands of American boys, who in future disorderly behavior and crime, will certainly profit by the lessons which they teach." (6) Lewd stories and jokes. (7) The making, printing, selling any of these degrading things. (8) Patronizing booksellers and news-stands where they are sold.—P. Conclusion: (1) Beware of beginnings; (2) give this passion no allowance in your thought; (3) be watchful against the least temptation; (4) avoid bad associates; (5) avoid every incentive to vice in dress, in fashion; (6) attend to the words of wisdom; (7) give your hearts to Christ.—W. Warren.

The Eighth Commandment. This commandment is broken (1) by taking what does not belong to us; (2) by taking advantage of others' ignorance, to defraud them; (3) by false returns to the assessors of taxes, by trying to escape custom-house duties; (4) by putting false labels and false measures to goods made and sold; (5) by giving too small wages to those we employ; (6) by not earning the wages we receive and as we agree; (7) by beating down those that sell, so as not to give a fair profit on the goods we buy; (8) by charging exorbitant prices; (9) by gambling, raffling at fairs, taking shares in lotteries; (10) by all business which injures the life and property of others, as selling intoxicating liquors, obscene picture-papers, etc., or renting buildings for their sale; (11) obtaining the advantages of libraries, churches, papers, without doing our part toward their support, in so far as we are able. Note (1) no one can afford to be dishonest. It never pays in the end. 2. Be careful of the beginnings of dishonesty,—the smallest taint. 3. Restore what may have been gained dishonestly. There is no true repentance of this sin without restitution, where it is possible. 4. A pure conscience is worth more than all the world. A man was once asked why he was so very particular to give good measure,—over-god,—and he replied, "God has given me but one journey through this world; and when I am gone, I cannot return to correct mistakes." Plato illustrates what is truly an honest man, by the story of Gyges's ring, which made the wearer invisible. He that would be honest, even when he could be dishonest without being found out, was a truly honest man.

The Ninth Commandment. This commandment is broken: 1. By slanders, and by those who listen to their slanders. These speak evil of their neighbors when they do not know that the evil is true, and also when it is not necessary that the evil be told. 2. By those who insinuate evil against others. 3. Hypocrites, who try to appear what they are not, like the veiled prophet of Khorrassan in "Lalla Rookh." 4. Those who act lies, put lying labels on their goods, put the best things on the top of the basket or barrel. 5. Those who are careless about speaking the truth. 6. Gossipers who retail scandal, who report only the bad, and not the good, about persons. It has been said, that if every person had a trumpet like the one in Hood's "Tale of a Trumpet," by which people heard not the words but the thoughts of others, there would be few friends left in the world. 7. Those who misrepresent other people, churches, sects, or parties, whether intentionally or carelessly, not having taken all the pains possible to learn the truth. 8. Those who hold half truths about men, or God, or religion, and pass them off as the whole. 9. Those who impute false and unworthy motives to others. 10. Those who put false names to things; bad names on good things, or good names on bad things; as calling strict Christians, puritanical; uprightness, stiffness; virtue, prudishness; or, calling dishonesties, business transactions; slanders, the blunt telling the truth; impoliteness, open-heartedness; carousing, pleasure.

The Tenth Commandment. "Thou shalt not covet." This is the only one of the Commandments which treats solely of sins of the mind and heart; and in so doing it strikes at the very root of all sin, for every sin is born of desire (Mark 7: 21, 22; Jas. 1: 14, 15), and there would be no sin if this commandment were perfectly kept (Rom 7: 7).—Todd. The Commandments begin with the heart and end with the heart. Both strike at the very fountains and sources of sin. 1. Covetousness is not a mere desire for more; for that desire, in some form, is ever appealed to in the Bible, and is the root of all civilization and progress. 2. Covetousness is the overstrong desire for more, uncontrolled by reason, or conscience, or the Word of God,—a desire that is willing to gain for itself (a) at the expense of others, (b) at the expense of higher and better things. It is not to desire a house, but to desire it so as to deprive our neighbor of it, or to gain it by wrong-doing or neglect of duty. All true gains, all true increase, are such as benefit both parties and the community in general.

—In the State of Michigan during the past seven years 183 secret beneficiary societies have been organized. Of these only thirty-two still live. Many silly people have thus been swindled out of money they could ill afford to lose. The Insurance Commissioner of Massachusetts recommended that such societies be prohibited by law.

IN BRIEF.

The fog which hangs over London is estimated to contain about fifty tons of solid carbon and 250 tons of carbon in the form of hydro-carbon and carbonic oxide gases. Calculated upon the cost of the coal which is wasted, the fog costs London nearly 4,500,000 pounds per annum.

"Why," asked the teacher, "did Payne write 'There is no place like home'?" "Because," replied the smart, bad boy, "it was the truth. He had no home, and, of course, there was no place like a place that wasn't anywhere." And the teacher started to mark him zero, but stopped and started to thinking and thinking, and finally told him that was correct, and marked him perfect.

The sewage of London, amounting to nearly 200,000,000 gallons a day, is carried by the great sewers twelve miles to huge storage reservoirs at Barking and Crossness, on opposite sides of the Thames, where it is treated with one grain per gallon of sodium manganate and a few grains of chloride of lime. After precipitation of the solid matter, the effluent is discharged into the river at ebb tide, in a clean and odorless (yet far from wholesome) condition.

The purchases of pine lands in northern and central Louisiana still continues. A single firm, representing leading lumber interests in Grand Rapids, Michigan, has just bought 30,000 acres more of government pine land in Natchitoches parish, making its total holdings there 290,000 acres, all bought within the last two years. In the extreme southwest corner of Louisiana lies what is claimed to be the largest producing farm in the world. It contains 1,500,000 acres of land, and is operated by a syndicate of Northern capitalists. All the cultivating, ditching, etc., is done by steam power. The Southern Pacific railroad runs for thirty-six miles through the farm. Three steamboats are running on the water of the same estate; as also an ice house, bank, shipyard, and rice mill belong to the same.

Bessie Miles, aged 8 years, a daughter of a blacksmith living near Harrod's Creek, Ky., was on Saturday night, May 21st, the victim of a cruel joke which caused the loss of her reason. On the night in question the little girl's mother took her to the residence of Mrs. Hermon Grandt, where a private spiritual seance was being held. The girl was very much frightened and frequently begged her mother to go home. The company laughed at her, and finally a son of Mrs. Grandt, in a spirit of mischief, crawled behind the girl's chair and gave utterance to a dismal groan. The poor girl fell from her chair in convulsions. Everybody was thoroughly frightened and the girl's mother was nearly distracted with grief. There was no physician near, but everything that could be thought of was done. The child remained unconscious until Dr. Rubby, of this city, arrived there, at 4 o'clock yesterday. Then she opened her eyes, but there was a wild, unnatural light in them, and the doctor thinks her reason has been dethroned. The shock was also so great to her nervous system that she may not recover.

BY OSCAR F. LUMBY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumby's book, "National Suicide and its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept his doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield—

Even his fallings lean to virtue's side.

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumby is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

SECRET SOCIETIES Condemned

BY THE PRESS.

United Presbyterian, Pittsburgh:—Secret societies are not suited to American society, nor indeed to any society.

The Armory:—Surely the presence of a multitude of secret combinations bodes little good to the church of Christ.

Wesleyan Methodist:—Never say again that Freemasonry has no secrets. It has secrets, dark as ever revealed in the midnight caves of professional banditti, or stalked the deck of a pirate craft.

The Watchman, Boston:—Garrison fought the battle of free speech in behalf of Abolition; Pierpont waged it on the question of temperance; Colver fought it against secret societies.

Christian Standard, Cincinnati:—We know of no good work for God or humanity to the success of which secrecy is essential; and we see dangers in secret associations which every Christian should avoid.

Catholic Review, New York:—It is becoming apparent that secret, oath-bound societies are, in principle, un-American; are contrary to the whole spirit and meaning of our institutions, and are therefore dangerous to the Republic.

Baptist Weekly, New York:—There is no union which men can form, making an inner circle of self-interest and tyrannically dictating to those without it, which is not the grossest violation of every true principle of human brotherhood.

Evangelical Repository:—We charge against these organizations: first, that they contain a system of religion; and, secondly, they are devised and built up after the traditions of men, after the rudiments of this world, and not after Christ.

The New York Witness:—Any society which demands from its members a loyalty superior to their loyalty to the general interests and well-being of the community in which they live, such as the church of Rome, the Nihilists, the Mormons and the Freemasons, is dangerous to the well being of the state and should be shunned by all good men.

Journal, Indianapolis, 1880:—The Democrats are attempting to carry this State by secret societies. They hope to overcome a popular uprising by midnight meetings and by grips and passwords. . . . The loyal men of Indiana will spurn their midnight methods. A State which numbers two millions of people cannot be governed by grips and passwords.

Times, Chicago, Aug. 22, 1880:—Secret societies are dangerous because young men, and others who are not for the moment fully mindful of their public duties, may be led by persuasion, under the peculiar solemnity and impressiveness of an initiation which unseats their judgment, to take oaths which are inconsistent with their duties toward the state and society, and which they may regret, in moments of reflection, that they have taken.

Public Ledger, Philadelphia:—Notwithstanding the presence of thousands of otherwise innocent men in the Masonic lodge, it is well understood that a ring within a ring runs the order, and the order in turn runs such innocent societies as the Good Templars, Red Men and nearly or quite all the so-called secret beneficiary societies. . . . The danger arising from such conspiracies is not imaginary but real. If the truth were known we are suffering from nothing so much as from this evil. And the worst of all is that good men who have gone into the various secret lodges are being used for ends of which they little dream.

The Advance, Chicago:—A Masonic writer in the New York Herald is quoted as saying that Masonry is "an effort to bring all mankind to a common religion; to harmonize the mysteries of Christianity, Judaism and paganism; for the most scholarly Masons hold that there is only one religion, and that religion is the worship of deity under the image of the sun." If the above is a correct enunciation of Masonic doctrine, the less Christians have to do with it the better. Indeed, it would seem to be equally inconsistent for the honest Jew to be identified with these sun-worshippers. . . . The inference is fair that Masonry and Christianity do not harmonize.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE-WORRY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish Swedish and Synodical Conferences

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

New Ruhama Cong. Hamilton, Miss.

The Christian Cynosure.

J. BLANCHARD.

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1887.

The Cynosure editor desires to be modest, yet desires to do good while he may. Of the much he has written, two discourses are intended to be fundamental, the one in the politics, the other in the religion of the lodge. Joseph Cook said of the Washington speech: "It is the strongest writing I have ever seen on that subject." The religion of the lodge is attempted in last week's Cynosure in the "Congress" address. Will our readers turn back and re-read that speech, and say whether they think that labored speech should be sent to every theological student in the seminaries of the United States? And how many will help our publisher send it?

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IN KANSAS.—Senator Ingalls voted in the U. S. Senate against woman suffrage. This Senator has managed to secure for himself the vote of prohibitionists, while in practice he is opposed to prohibition; and now he is seeking to capture the woman suffrage voters while opposed to giving women the ballot. In short, he "runs with the hare" when hares are in the majority and yet belongs and barks with the hound.

He lately gave a characteristic speech at Abilene, Kansas, which is sharply and well answered by our friend Mr. C. B. Knight, the prominent Prohibitionist late from Massachusetts, who we hoped would have settled in Illinois. But while seeming to condemn woman suffrage as forbidden by the "limitations of sex placed by God and not by man," he took care to tell his audience that none but a fool would oppose woman suffrage and he "was quite sure he was not a fool," though he might, he said, be "a demagogue," which was the nearest approach to honesty in his speech. And he gains the votes of reformers by seeming to yield to them against his convictions.

ENOCH HONEYWELL.

A VOICE CALLING FROM ETERNITY.

If Napoleon could arouse the martial valor of his troops by summoning the invisible witnesses of centuries from the summit of the Pyramids, the readers of this number may catch a holier inspiration from the testimony of three generations, which speak to us in the noble face of Enoch Honeywell, and in the memorable address written to be read over his dead body to relatives and friends.

The life of this remarkable American had reached nearly to the century line. He was born in 1788, the year of the adoption of the Constitution, and after many years of travel and pioneer life in the West and South in those early days, he settled about 1837 in Altay, New York, where he lived till his death in February last. In 1830 he was converted under the preaching of the renowned Elder Jacob Knapp, whose powerful assaults upon popular sins, the lodge among the rest, are perhaps yet remembered by living men. Enoch Honeywell was a reformer by nature, and the rousing appeals of Elder Knapp found no more interested listener than he. He stood up to be counted with voters for James G. Birney, though he had to stand alone.

Similar clear convictions of truth made him an opposer of the lodge as he had been of slavery, and there are few who have supported the reform represented by the National Christian Association whose efforts have been more successful in saving our young men from the secret worship of the lodge. Tracts written by him were circulated at his own expense by the hundred thousand; and now with a heavenly vision he, like his Master, sees the result of this travail of his soul and rejoices in it.

The Cynosure respectfully begs the Christian Statesman, Christian Instructor, United Presbyterian, Wesleyan Methodist, Free Methodist, Christian Worker and our own papers to insert if possible and call the attention of their readers to the remarkable post mortem address of Mr. Honeywell. Seldom, if ever, has there before been an instance of a man writing an address to his countrymen and neighbors to be read at his funeral. If the great denominational papers would give this extraordinary address to their readers they would do more to enlighten, bless and save our country than by years of printing the platitudes which they give to fill up their columns and consume the time of their readers.

God individualizes men. Satan packs them and swears them into masses. Mr. Honeywell was a plain, simple mechanic, individualized, taken by the Spirit of God out from the race of mankind and made him like one of the old prophets a waymark and guide to eternity for his less-favored countrymen. If Dr. Talmage could be induced to read this necrologic article of Mr. Honeywell (such is our good opinion of the man) he would repent of his strange sermon on secret societies. We need not commend Mr. Honeywell's message, which sounds to us like the voice of the angel calling to John in Patmos.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS' REUNION.

The two Grand Lodges healed the division which took place eleven years ago, last week, in Saratoga. The old lodge reports "about" 300,000 members and 100,000 juveniles; the other lodge about 200,000. The actual number in the older lodge, of which Finch is the head, is 287,212, in its Bands of Hope and Juvenile Temples 50,739. The split of 1876 was upon a great principle—the admission of colored members. The English lodges were led by Joseph Malins in the disruption, the American by Colonel Hickman of Kentucky. The union has been made by conceding the infamous principle of caste and negrophobia. Malins and his members, for the glory of the lodge sell out the black man, and turn him over to the saloon and Satan so far as Good Templar salvation is concerned. "The experiment," said Malins, "of attempting to bring the white and colored races of the South together in Good Templar work, which the English seceders attempted, has not been successful." Such is the price of this union. Under God it will be a blessing to the black man, but no thanks to the Judas-like lodge.

In 1884 the Good Templars cut but a sorry figure in the general election. So far as our knowledge extended the great mass of Good Templar voters went with the old parties, which license liquor. In the village of Wheaton, the seat of Wheaton College, we heard years ago the chief Templar of the local lodge advocate licensing the sale of liquors to secure the German vote! His speech was objected to, and his lodge sustained him!

We confess to some amazement and much regret at reading in the papers, that the Good Templars' convention received "a tastefully worded greeting from Miss Frances E. Willard as president of the W. C. T. U." The Saratoga Methodist pastor, Rev. S. V. Leach, evidently a Mason, in his opening discourse, called God "The Almighty Architect," and addressed the convention thus:

"Good Templars! very beautiful and impressive are the historical associations that entangle the name you bear. Your title carries us back over seven centuries, to a period when Europe was young." * * * "when we beheld 800,000 soldiers engaging in the first crusade." * * * "They created two orders of knighthood, one of which is to bear your honored name, Templars."

Now Miss Willard is well read, and so knows that the Knight Templars lauded by this pastor were military monks who lived in a house at Jerusalem, near the Temple, which gave them their name; that professing to protect pilgrims on the road to Palestine, they spread over Europe; that under vows of poverty, by pious twaddle as poor "fellow soldiers of Christ," they absorbed fabulous wealth; that under vows of chastity—like all camps and convents of men—they practiced the loathsome and disgusting vices named by Paul, Rom. 1st; and that, under cover of their sworn secrecy, they plotted treason against the governments; and by their dashing regalia, they "led captive silly women," and destroyed the peace of families; till all Europe, Catholic and Protestant, spewed them out; and the industrious masses so turned popular sentiment against them, that Cervantes, by a single book (Don Quixotte) buried their very name under popular detestation and contempt.

Now it is not wonderful that J. N. Stearns, a Mason of seven degrees, who has sworn to conceal all crimes of Freemasons, and shelter and protect them, "whether they be right or wrong," should laud Leach's sermon as, "The ablest sermon ever preached on the work of the order in this country;" or that a Masonic Methodist preacher should preach a sermon so full of false history and gasconade, "handling the Word of God deceitfully;" and perverting the holy text addressed to Christians, "Ye are the temple of God," into a shallow compliment to Good Templars, composed of all sorts of people.

But what are we to think? Miss Willard is an Anti-mason and the child of Anti-masons. She has once at least expressed her abhorrence of Masonic oaths in print. We must think that her zeal in behalf of temperance blinds her to the vile system of "Templary," which this weak clergyman lauds from its sham beginning to its revival in these last days. Can it be that Miss Willard is ignorant that the Knights Templar of this present time are the open, shameless patrons of liquor-drinking, swelling the saloon receipts to fabulous amounts wherever their conclaves have met? Does she not know that their "fifth libation" is a veritable "cup of devils" taken from the mysteries of Eleusis, against which Paul warns Christians (1 Cor. 10:21)? And that their baptism of infants is not Christian but heathen—that is, diabolical—by their own authority? (See Mackey's Cyclopaedia, Art. Baptism.)

Can it be that Miss Willard is dazzled by the crowds which are infected by this epidemic of secretism. But in this same sermon of the Saratoga Methodist pastor he states that "when Europe was young" and, of course, less populous than now, three hundred thousand were drawn into the first crusade by a single monk endorsed by the Pope, and that for the weak folly of rescuing Christ's sepulchre! As Orange lodges and as Know Nothings in our day were the devil's methods of disgracing Protestantism, and staving off reform, so this Good Templarism is a devil's version of the temperance reform. It will spoil the movement. Its very name of Templars is the name of failure. In Daniel Webster's words, "It is wrong in the principle of its formation," "a just source of jealousy and alarm." And Mr. Finch, who aspires to be the Peter the Hermit of this spurious crusade of temperance lodgism—which leaped upon the reform in 1855, after fifty years toil and prayer had made the cause popular—this new Peter now calls on his lodges to pray, though he knows that every one of them has dropped the Christian and imposes a deist's creed at its door!

But why assail men who are willing to vote for prohibition? We answer: Because their proceedings are secret, which dishonors Christ. Because they meet with open organizations to plan and then retire behind tyrod doors to plot! Because of their bark-mill round of mock-solemn ceremonies; their garish, un-American regalia; great, swelling, unchristian titles, and, above all, their "brotherhood" with unbelievers and their organized deism. We do not object to their voting for prohibition; but we object to taking the despotic Knights of Labor by the hand and endorsing the spawn of monks of the twelfth century and yet giving them no word of Christian advice to enlighten their darkness and save Miss Willard's good from being "evil spoken of." We hope the devoted women who form the W. C. T. U. will protest against being turned into a Rebekah lodge of temperance by a policy like that of the eloquent Aaron, because "the people are set on (the) mischief" of secret ceremonies and garish parades.

FRENCH MASONRY.

Dr. Samuel Johnson used to say: "There is one human nature, and another nature of Frenchmen," and his words became a proverb. Will the readers of the Cynosure carefully ponder the article on French Masonry taken from a New York daily, written by its Paris correspondent, dated Paris, May 7th. If the writer were not a Frenchman his story and revelations of Masonry in Paris would exceed belief. But the revelations he gives tally exactly with Bishop Warburton's exhibit of the Eleusinian Mysteries. See MacKnight on the Epistles, Comment on Ephesians, where "these eminently Masonic institutions" (Mackey) are laid bare.

Masonry is a false religion, and false religion resembles and caricatures the true. Lodge horrors are Satan's convictions of sin, or compassing Sinai. Raising Hiram, Osiris, Myhras, or Bacchus, is the devil's substitute for faith in Christ. And "the shock of entrance" is the new birth; and the jovial greetings, and jollifications which follow, are Satan's counterfeit "joys of salvation." All these resemble true religion as a brothel resembles a family, and whoredom marriage: an illustration which runs through the whole Bible. And the course of terrorizing through darkness ending in light, which the candidate or postulant is put through, is identical, in its nature and moral effect, and was and is the same, whether done in Eleusis, London, Paris, or the United States. The Apple-tree Tavern, the Grand Orient, and an Odd-fellows' lodge, or college secret society, all work by the self-same rule—to infuse terror, to lead into and through a horror of darkness into light; and the whole thing is a devil's substitute for "experiencing religion." There are not ten Masons, Odd-fellows or even Good Templars, unless, perhaps, those who go into the lodge for "buncombe" or for what they can make by it, and despise the whole thing, who do not feel that they have had a spiritual experience, after being put through initiation, or a degree. And there is something in that experience which makes them despise Christians as bigoted papists despise Protestants. As soon as the Mormon or Mason candidate yields himself into the hands of others, to be stripped, blinded, led, guided and brought through into a mystic brotherhood, he puts himself into an attitude of receptivity for spirit possession, or influence, and they get it.

If the Protestant ministers of the United States understood this; if even Masons themselves understood it, lodgeism would be dropped as a child drops its toy-box when she sees worms or snakes in it. But through the ignorance of the clergy, owing to the silence of the press, the pulpits of the United States are retreats and hiding places of devils. Open the Bible, and Christ and his apostle alarm, and even shock us by their warning to "be sober," "vigilant;" to "watch," "resist" and "flee" from demons. But the American pulpit, as a general thing, is as innocent of such warnings as the Andover Review, which is too busy with "Post-mortem Probation" to worry people with Scripture warnings this side of death. Hence the frivolity of Masonry is its screen. But read, READ! READ! the article on French Masonry, and then say, what but devils could induce multitudes of capable men to submit to such degradation?

—The semi-centennial of the founding of Knox College occurs Thursday of this week, and the editor of the Cynosure, who was president of that institution for about twelve years previous to 1860 will be among the guests of the occasion. Dr. J. E. Roy of this city and Hon. S. V. White of New York the speakers of the occasion.

—The Ohio agent, Bro. W. B. Stoddard, came in from a well-worked field last Thursday, to spend a short vacation in this city and Wheaton. His weekly reports in these columns have given much encouragement to friends of the reform in every other State as well as Ohio. A summary of his work for the year is promised for next week.

—"The secrecy question is the great question before the church to-day. Take that away and the controversy would almost cease." Thus writes Bishop Weaver in the last Telescope. True, and such a confession six or nine years ago, met fairly, in the spirit of Christ would have saved the Brethren church from threatened disruption. But instead of meeting the main question the effort has been to confuse the minds of honest people and confound that issue with questions of popularity in cities, revisions of constitution and discipline, until ruin impends.

—The Christian Worker of this city prints the Congress address of Pres. C. A. Blanchard last week, on the Secret Orders and the Labor Question. Editor Pritchard in a note warmly commends it to the Friends, and calls attention to the fearful responsibility resting upon Christians who encourage by "word or fellowship" these orders. The indifference of others he also deprecates in faithful terms. "It is time we opened our eyes, looked upon this monster, and went forth to battle against him." His suggestion that an address on this subject, by way of instruction, be given by some competent speaker in all the yearly meetings, is an excellent one which we pray may be widely approved and acted upon by the Friends.

—As noted in Bro. Cole's letter, he had the privilege of addressing the United Presbyterian General Assembly in Philadelphia. The Christian Instructor notices his remarks thus: "An African, the son of a Mohammedan priest of high order, a convert to Christianity, a man of great learning, of a skin as dark as that of the darkest negro, addressing our General Assembly was a novelty of no small interest. The address was full of good, practical Christian sense. He earnestly presented the inconsistency of Christians sending missionaries and rum and tobacco in the same ships to the heathens, or the Mohammedans of Africa. He had been through all the degrees of [African] Masonry, and knows what Masonry is. An American minister and missionary is a chaplain of a Masonic lodge in Africa; this lodge is composed of heathens, and he is simply a refined heathen. The impression of Mr. Cole's address upon the Assembly was exceedingly creditable to its author." The moderator, Dr. M. M. Gibson, replied in a happy manner to Bro. Cole and the representatives from other ecclesiastical bodies.

—A letter to the Living Way from Dorseyville, Louisiana, a point on the Mississippi a little below Baton Rouge and Plaquemine, tells of great activity both for and against the lodges. If the zeal of the colored brethren for Christ was everywhere imitated we should soon see an end of lodgery. The letter says: "The colored people of this parish are well canvassed in the interest of secret societies, notwithstanding Bros. B. Dorsey, A. L. Reese, A. Hubbs, and myself preach against secretism and uphold it on every side; but Satan has his agents here too. Rev. L. V. Collins (Baptist) of Black Hawk, La., Concordia Parish, has been in Plaquemine and vicinity some five or six weeks in the interest of secret lodges. He is Deputy Grand Master for the State of the Independent Order of Jacobs and he is a Grand Master in the Universal Brotherhood. He succeeded during his stay in planting in the St. Matthew Baptist church, Plaquemine, both an order of Jacobs and Universal Brotherhood. Bro. Hubbs tells me that they have been anxiously striving to get his church, but he greets them with a firm nay."

FROM THE CHINESE MISSIONS.

We noticed last fall the visit of Rev. M. C. Wilcox of the American Methodist Mission at Foochow, China, of his devotion to his work, and sympathy for the reform urged in these columns. His promise to write for our readers he begins to fulfill below, in an entertaining account of the Christian work in this part of China:

Foochow, China, Apr. 15, 1887.

Just a month and a half ago we arrived here. It is needless, however, to say I have been busy, and for that matter that is what I am in China for, and in the world for.

We had a most delightful reception here, being met at Pagoda Anchorage, the head of navigation, twelve miles below Foochow, by a number of missionaries; and at the Foochow landing by a large number of students and others. The next day the ladies of the M. E. Mission gave us a grand reception from 3 to 5 p. m. The U. S. Consul, the Vice-Consul, about twenty-five missionaries, and nearly 200 native Christians, preachers and students, called on us. The friends all say this was the finest reception ever given to missionaries returning to Foochow. So we certainly ought to be satisfied and grateful.

Soon after our arrival the mission appointed me president of the Anglo-Chinese College, an institution which has been running six years. Four years are devoted to preparatory work, so we have our Freshman and Sophomore classes already. The latter is just about beginning spherical trigonometry and have other studies of about the same grade of advancement as in most of our American colleges. We have sixty-three students, quite a number of whom are faithful Christians; and the number of this class is steadily increasing. Christian influence, even among the students, is paramount. We have a Young Men's Christian Association, which includes nearly all the Christian students. Under its auspices student prayer meetings are held, together with an English service every Sunday afternoon, at which the sermon is by a missionary. This institution is exerting an ever-widening influence and the good it has already accomplished cannot be estimated.

There is more than usual at present to encourage us in our work here. Conversions are becoming more and more frequent, as the class of those whose heads have been enlightened as to the nature of the Gospel truth increases. A few weeks ago ten persons were received to full membership in one of our churches, and nearly every week several are received on probation. Last Sunday at another church I administered sacrament and baptized two. On the Hok Chiang district, southeast from this (Foochow) district, there have recently been about 100 conversions. The other missions here (the American Board and the Church of England) also seem to be enjoying increased prosperity.

You have doubtless seen references recently to rail-road building in China. I am happy to state that one is actually being constructed in the island of Formosa, which belongs to this (Fuhkien) province. This is being built by Messrs. Russell & Co., an American firm doing business in China. Another railroad to be built from Lutai to Taku and from Taku to Tientsin, in North China, has been sanctioned and estimates have been submitted by a French, as well as by an American company. The construction of other lines will doubtless follow as fast as Chinese superstition will permit. But the more railroads we have, the more missionaries we shall need, as it has time and again been demonstrated that the introduction of Western institutions without Christianity is a curse to a people rather than a blessing.

"THE NEEDS OF AFRICA, AND FAILURES OF FALSE CHRISTIANITY," is the title of an address delivered by J. Augustus Cole, of Western Soudan, Africa, before the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian church, Philadelphia, May 27, 1887, to be published when subscriptions for 200 copies, or more, at 25 cts. each, are received. Please forward your name to the Cynosure office, stating the number of copies desired.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting of the National Christian Association is fixed by by-law No. 4 on the third Thursday in June of each year. Corporate members and all friends of the N. C. A. will notice that this occurs on June 16, 1887, and be prompt in attendance for the transaction of the annual business at 10 o'clock A. M., at the Carpenter Building, No. 221 West Madison street Chicago.

H. H. GEORGE, President.
W. I. PHILLIPS, Rec. Sec'y.

A CARD.

Will the friends of reform, in Iowa, who have subscribed to pay to the Treasurer of the Iowa Christian Association, James Harvey, of Pleasant Plain, Jefferson Co., Iowa, to meet the expenses of the State Reform work, please to send their subscriptions as soon as possible, as there is pressing need of funds to meet the expenses.

The subscriptions taken last summer and fall commenced the 15th of July, 1886, and will be due in full in a month and a half. Please send in your subscriptions as fast as you can, that there may be funds to meet the expenses of the work. It is so hard to make brick where there is no straw. Donations are earnestly solicited from those who have not given subscriptions. Let not the "sinews of war" be lacking. C. F. HAWLEY, State Agent.

EDUCATIONAL.

—Miss S. A. Farley, who has been for several weeks in Chicago raising funds to purchase a building for the New Iberia, Louisiana, school, has received a pledge of the last $500 from Mr. Peter Howe of Wenona, Ill. The Cynosure again commends this enterprise to liberal Christians as worthy their generous support.

—The alumni of the University of Paris numbered nearly 11,000 last year. Of these, 3,786 were studying law, and 3,696 were studying medicine, while only 35 were studying theology. The female students numbered 167.

—Jonas G. Clark, of Worcester, Mass., who recently presented $1,000,000 to that city for the founding of a university, has made a further gift of $500,000 worth of real estate, books and works of art, and $500,000 in cash for the establishment of professorships.

—The commencement exercises of the Wasioja Seminary, Minnesota, take place this week, opening with a sermon on Sabbath, June 5th, by Rev. J. A. Richards, of Fort Scott, Kansas. Examinations, alumni, and trustee meetings, and exercises of the graduating class occupy three days of the week. In connection with the latter on Wednesday evening Miss Mary P. Paine, the preceptress, will give an address.

—The college year at Gates College, Neligh, Neb., closes the 17th inst. Through the self-sacrificing efforts and perseverance of the president and financial secretary, Rev. M. L. Holt, the institution will complete its sixth year out of debt and with good hope of erecting a ladies' dormitory next year. The institution is well patronized by the churches of a new country, themselves struggling with problems of building and other expenses. It is "holding the fort" for a large and growing section of the State which within a decade will have a vast population. The trustees have begun their work on a good basis, putting secret societies, tobacco, dancing, infidelity, etc., among the prohibitions.

—In Russia there are 32,000 schools, having each an average of 36 scholars. This is one school for 2,300 inhabitants, at a cost of less than a cent a head of the whole population. In Austria, with 37,000,000 of inhabitants, there are 29,000 schools and 3,000,000 scholars. The average number at each school is 104, and the cost per inhabitant is 19 cents. In Italy for 28,000,000 inhabitants there are 47,000 schools, one school for every 600 people, at a cost of 17 cents a head. The average number of pupils at the schools is forty. In Spain there are 3,000,000 scholars, 29,000 schools, giving an average of 56 in each school, and one school for every 600 inhabitants, as in Italy. The number of schools given for England is 58,000, which is one for every 600 inhabitants, with an average attendance of 52 per school, and a cost of 36 cents. The Germans have a school for every 700, giving a total of 60,000 schools, with 100 pupils in each, and 38 cents per inhabitant. France has 71,000 schools, being one for every 500, with 66 in each school. France would, therefore, seem to have more schools than any other European country. These schools cost the country 29 cents per inhabitant.

THE HOME.

THE DESTRUCTION OF SODOM.

The warning was spoken; the righteous had gone;
And the proud ones of Sodom were feasting alone;
All gay was the banquet; the revel was long,
With the pouring of wine and the breathing of song.

'Twas an evening of beauty; the air was perfume,
The earth was all greenness, the trees were all bloom;
And softly the delicate viol was heard,
Like the murmur of love or the notes of a bird.

And beautiful maidens moved down in the dance,
With the magic of motion and sunshine of glance;
And white arms wreathed lightly, and tresses fell free,
As the plumage of bird in some tropical tree.

Where the shrines of soul idols were lighted on high,
And wantonness tempted the lust of the eye;
'Midst rites of obscenity, strange, loathsome, abhorred,
The blasphemer scoffed at the name of the Lord.

Hark! the growl of the thunder, the quaking of earth!
Woe, woe to the worship, and woe to the mirth!
The black sky has opened—there is flame in the air—
The red arm of vengeance is lifted and bare!

Then the shriek of the dying rose wild where the song
And the low tone of love had been whispered along;
For the fierce flames went lightly o'er palace and bower,
Like the red tongues of demons, to blast and devour!

Down, down on the fallen the red ruin rained,
And the reveler sank with his wine-cup undrained;
The foot of the dancer, the music's loved thrill,
And the shout and the laughter grew suddenly still.

The last throb of anguish was fearfully given;
The last eye glared forth in its madness on Heaven!
The last groan of horror rose wildly and vain,
And death brooded over the Pride of the plain.

—John G. Whittier.

A WORD OF EXHORTATION.

BY MRS. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

O brethren, preach the Word. Do not attempt to convert sinners with fine-spun theories out of which the Word is left. You know no instrument can equal the sword which God himself has forged for his Spirit's use in cutting off the dead carcass of sin, which will certainly "drown men in perdition" unless it be separated from them. It is a wonderful discoverer of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Nothing can equal it to produce genuine conviction. Our Saviour prayed, "Sanctify them through thy truth," and then, as though he feared some might misunderstand, he adds, "Thy Word is truth." O, how little sanctification we find among men! What is the trouble? Ah! the pulpits have nearly all laid aside the God-ordained purifier and are trying to build up believers with human reasoning, philosophy and even the old dead theories of mythology. A scientific sermon of the present day is not considered complete unless it contains some of those "cunningly devised fables," told in a lovely manner. The Lord pity us and deliver us from a revival of pagan idolatry! Well would it have been for the world had this abomination been buried so deep as to have never seen a resurrection.

Again, our Saviour said, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Would you see your people free to serve God in holiness and righteousness all the days of their lives? Then give them the clear, bright "Thus saith the Lord." Prove all things. A Christian lady who lost a little boy said, after his death her heart was continually grasping for proofs of the immortality of the soul and of the resurrection of the body. Where will the fundamental doctrines of Christianity soon be if the man of God ceases to bring out of his treasury (which certainly is the Bible) things new and old. Let the weak ones be fed, not with some heathenish goat's milk, or even that of the wolf, which cometh not but for to kill and to steal; but "with the sincere milk of the Word."

Rightly dividing the Word. A sermon was recently preached in a fine church by a noble looking man in goodly apparel having also the gold ring. The only Scripture quotation in that religious lecture was the text, "When I would do good evil is present with me." How discouraged, how drowsy our souls felt as we listened to the statement that the Persians once taught that God is a duality, half good and half bad, and though we think the falsity of this doctrine can be proved, there is still much truth in it, since in man is a good and a bad nature. How disheartening to teach souls that they must desire to be free from sin, but cannot be thus free. O brother, raise the Gospel standard high. Tell the people, "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness," if you would have high types of Christianity. Tell them, "the Spirit witnesseth with our spirit that we are born of God." Delve into this mine of religious wealth to prove everything that is good and pure and true, and to disprove all that is bad. Do not fear; the good old book is always on the right side.

FAITH.

How shall I, in the simplest, briefest way, tell a soul what it is to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ so as to be saved? To get at the very heart of this subject, let us suppose that you are at the bedside of a dying sinner, whose only hope of salvation lies in your being able to tell him at once, in the simplest words, how to perform the saving act of faith. Many a person is told to believe who is not conscious of not believing, and who has no appreciation of the difference between belief and faith. How may the matter be so put before an inquiring soul as to help to the immediate appropriation of saving grace? Time may not be left for the study of the Word of God, or for anything but the briefest prayer. How shall this last moment be improved to the saving of a soul?

Faith differs from belief, because it is an act of trusting. Belief is the assent of mind to a fact or truth put before us in the form of a proposition or statement, as though I say: "Christ died for sinners." Faith is the consent of the whole mind, heart, conscience, and will to the fact or truth of the Christian religion, as represented in the person of Christ. Hence we read, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." That little word on carries the idea that such a way of believing brings me near the person of Christ, and makes me not only accept what he says, but lean on him; resting not only on his words, but on his work for me. Here is not only believing, but trusting.

Faith differs from belief because it is an act of taking. God not only puts before me a truth to be believed, but a personal Saviour to be taken to myself. Faith is that by which I apprehend, and then appropriate—first perceive and then receive him. I see Christ to be my possible Saviour, and take him to be my actual Saviour. How do I take him? By giving myself, the only way in which one person can take another. So a lone orphan takes one who offers to be a father; so a wife takes a husband; so a soldier takes a general, or a subject a king; by giving ourselves away to another, we take another to ourselves. No act can be simpler; and, in fact, it is its simplicity at which we stumble.

Faith thus differs from belief, because, in this trusting and taking of Jesus, it becomes a tie of union. It makes me one with Jesus, and him one with me forever. I lose my life in him, my will is his will. I look at this world and the world to come through his eyes and become part of his body, a member obeying him as my head.

To guide a soul to Christ we must first, then, get clearly in mind that the central thing about faith is this act of trusting, taking, trying, to Christ. A child in years or in mind can understand this. Let every dying sinner lay his hand in mine, as Christ's messenger to him, and say: "Lord Jesus, I trust thee, I take thee, as my Saviour and Lord; I give myself wholly to thee forever."—Rev. A. T. Pierson, D.D.

"WHO TELLS HIM?"

One of the mysteries which puzzle the unconverted is, "How does the minister know all about me?"

Said one man who had hid behind a bed curtain in a private house, while hearing, for the first time, King S. Hastings preach, "He told me everything I had done, public or private, for the last three months."

Of course he was in a rage with the neighbors about telling on him; but the fact was the preacher never was there before, and came in late after meeting had commenced; nevertheless the hidden sinner was searched out, and never found peace till he had turned to God and confessed his sins and his wanderings.

A heathen woman once said to a Christian Indian named Esther, "I often go to your meetings, and always hear something. One Sunday lately the minister exactly described the state of my heart. Indeed, I fully thought he would soon say, 'There sits a woman who is just what I have said.' Do tell me how the minister knows, and who it is that tells him?"

"Oh, yes," said Esther, "I will tell you. The minister preaches the pure word of God, and that word speaks to our hearts. If we are willing to listen to it, God works in our hearts by his Spirit, and shows us that it is spoken to us. Then we see and hear what is our real state; and every one thinks, 'That is spoken to me!'"

The Word of God is no dead book, it is living and powerful, and is the voice of the living Spirit of God, which reads the hearts and the lives of all men.

Let us thank God for a Gospel that searches hearts, and let us pray that ministers who know all about their hearers may be greatly multiplied.—Armory.

NOT LOST ON THE AIR.

A very entertaining incident occurred in the early ministerial life of Mr. Spurgeon, and which he verified to the person who made it public. Thirty years ago or more he was invited to preach in the vast Crystal Palace at Sydenham. Would his voice fill the immense area? Resolving to test it, he went in the morning to the palace, and thinking for a passage of Scripture to repeat, this, as he reached the stage, came to mind: "It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." Pronouncing the words he felt sure that he would be heard, and then repeated the verse in a softer tone.

More than a quarter of a century later, Mr. Spurgeon's brother, who is also a pastor, was called to the bedside of a man, an artisan, who was near his end. "Are you ready?" asked the pastor. "O, yes," answered the dying man with assurance. "Can you tell me how you obtained the salvation of your soul?" "It is very simple," said the artisan, his face radiant with joy. "I am a plumber by trade. Some years ago I was working under the dome of the Crystal Palace, and thought myself entirely alone. I was without God and without hope. All at once I heard a voice coming from heaven which said: 'It is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.' By the meaning of these words I was convinced of sin; Jesus Christ appeared to me as my Saviour; I accepted him in my heart as such at the same moment, and I have served him ever since." God honors his Word. Suppose Mr. Spurgeon had used a secular sentence to try his voice. What surprises await the faithful when results are known.—Christian Treasury.

THE REASON WHY.

O happy birds among the boughs,
And silvers, tinkling brook below!
Why are you glad,
Though skies look sad?
'Ah! would you, would you know?'"
A pleasant song to me replied;
'For some one else we sing,
And that is why the woodlands wide
With rapture 'round us ring!'"
O daisies crowding all the fields,
And twinkling grass, and buds that grow!
Each clime you greet
With smiles so sweet!
'And why—ah! would you know?'"
Their beauty to my heart replied;
'For some one else we live;
And nothing in the world so wide
Is sweeter than to give!'"

—St. Nicholas.

HORTICULTURE FOR THE GIRLS.

Most of the girls I know have a very useless smattering of what they call botany; and it is worth about as much as the terrible music they store up in the way of education. Those who really make flowers grow, and get into sympathy with Nature, may take a morning walk with us. A girl sat on my porch, the other day, and said: "All this is nice, but it is dreadfully lonely in the country."

I said to her: "You should form more acquaintances."

"Where are they, pray?" she answered. "Neighbors scattered about, to be sure; and yet I want a crowd all the time, and things lively."

"That moon, for instance," I said. "You never were acquainted with the moon, or with the trees, or the flowers."

"Nonsense. They can't talk. And they are dead, anyhow, or only sort of alive."

"Sure enough," I said, "how lonesome you must be! Never knew a tree was alive, and had thoughts, and worked out mathematical problems. Well, there's the spider, and the fly, and the birds; and they are all splendid acquaintances. There's a spider now on your dress."

With a little shriek, the lonely girl ran into the house, and told me she preferred boys to spiders and moons.

Now, you and I don't care for these nonsensical misses, what we mean by horticulture is getting right well acquainted with life and living creatures; and when we cultivate trees and flowers, it is cultivating acquaintance, as the saying is. Now, let us begin with our very dear friend, the pear tree. Here it stands at the door, and it is dropping the most lovely calling cards, printed in gold. Tennyson is acquainted with it, and they are very dear friends. He says:

"Oh! sound to rout the brood of cares!
The sweep of scythe in the morning dew,
The gust that round the garden flew
And tumbled half the mellowing pears."

"But I don't want to bother about pear trees. It's the flowers I like."

"But, Julia, there never was a handsomer bouquet than a pear tree in blossom. And, as it is our object not to have a lot of strangers on our lawns, we must be polite to pears and apples and elms and all the rest. Besides, a pear tree is only one kind of a rose bush; that is, pears and roses are cousins; they go back to the same ancestry. Somewhere, a long ways back, the changes in form began, and a slowly movement led to a tree, and another to a bush."

"Just as some long-ago break cut off one way to man and the other way to an ape? That's what my teacher says, anyhow."

"Well, very much that way. So now, the dear, graceful Miss Baltimore Bell puts her arms around Mr. Pear Tree, and calls him 'coz.' The pear has acquired a power to give us a soft, juicy pulp around its seed; the rose has a dry, hairy berry, that we cannot eat at all, and that very few things eat. But there are several more cousins around. Let us look at the family in a group. Here we have, all in sight, roses, apples, pears, cherries, plums, quinces, straw berries, raspberries, blackberries and our nice little apricot. Isn't that a fine family, and all very close relations. I think it is the most practical business house in the world; and yet it is very fond of show. It is the Vanderbilt stock, rich beyond comparison."

"Well, I never thought of it in that light before. So a pear is only a rose and a rose is only a pear? And you think they are sort of interested in each other?"

"Yes; there is such a thing as friendship among trees. These cousins are all fond of each other, and like very much the same treatment, and eat the same foods; and, if you would get on well with them, you must show them the same favors."

"How long has it taken for the rose and pear to get to be so much alike?"

"Oh! a great deal longer than it has taken the English to get to be unlike the Hindus or the Persians."

"And will the pear still go on changing?"

"Yes; we have records of the pear before Jesus's time; and it seems to have only been fit for cooking. The Sheldon pear is about as good as anything yet produced; and that, as well as all our fine kinds, were not known one hundred years ago. So we may be sure the pear will go on changing, and not only give us different fruit, but different leaves and wood, till there are other cousins as different as the raspberry and the quince, or the apple and the rose."

"What a queer world it will be by and by."

"It is queer now; but, when you come to get acquainted with it, as I want you to do, and mean to help you, you will not say it is so queer as it is delightful. But just to-day we will study the pear alone. Perhaps you can tell me the difference between the apple and pear trees by their leaves?"

"No, sir. I cannot."

"Well, here they are. The apple on one side is rough, and on the other is smooth, and the pear on both sides is nicely polished. The tree is more erect than the apple, and the blossoms are pure white, while the apple has gained a richer color. The pear is the more rustic, wild, untamed, of the two; and not, by a good ways, as far along in its civilization. You see it has thorns, when raised from seed, and the apple seedling has got quite beyond that. The population of the pear tree also is very different from that of an apple. It has fewer insect friends, and more vegetable parasites. The apple tree is wonderfully loved by moths and bugs; and their friendship is often the ruin of the fruit, and even the tree. Here is one almost bored to death with the grub of the Chrysobothus. But the pear is much more likely to be killed by minute vegetable friends that feed on and ruin it."

"They cannot be very good friends," said Julia. "I should say they were enemies."

"Only from our standpoint. We don't like to have our orchards blighted."

Pears trees often live to be several hundred years old; but apple trees generally do not survive one century. You see right before you some of the oldest apple trees in New York State. They were planted by the missionary to the Oneida Indians nearly one hundred years ago. But near Monroe, in Michigan, are pear trees that are over two hundred years old.

"The delicious fruit that makes the pear such a favorite does not date back of the middle of the last century; but there were very excellent apples a long while before that. So you may think of the pear as a wild girl, half-tamed, and ready any minute to leave school and take to the woods."

"Now, I want you to see the provisions made by the pear for travelling. It doesn't ride in coaches, nor in steam cars; but it has for all that a way of travelling. The fruit is a bribe that it uses to get animals to carry it. Horses and cows, as well as birds, cannot digest the seeds; so, when they have eaten the fruit, they will drop the seeds in their manure about the lots, and new trees will thus be started. Birds and squirrels will carry seeds far over the hills, and plant them in open places in the woods. But, in the same way, we are bribed to take great pains to start large nurseries of pear trees. So, to-day, the pear has travelled into every land, and is everywhere a great pet."

"The cousins of the family are also well provided with coaches. Strawberries run themselves. Birds carry the raspberries. The rose has a dry, bitter, repulsive berry that nothing likes to eat; so it drops quietly down, and waits till its blossoms bewitch nice girls, and all sorts of lovers of nice things, and, for the blossoms' sake, the rose-bush gets carried all over the world."

"Why didn't the rose have nice fruit as well as all the rest of the family?"

"That is hard to answer; only we are sure those changes take place which are most favorable to the life and increase of any variety at the time the changes go on. The rose works mostly on the defensive and protective plan. It has provided thorns to prevent itself from being eaten; and then, while sure of safety, it quietly runs its roots along and sends up a shoot at a distance. All of the family used to trust a good deal to this method of increase, and they have not given it up, except in a few cases, nor altogether in any. The vast spread of the family, you see, is thus provided for with great certainty. No others offer such bribes to birds and beasts. Nor can any other so well defend themselves against browsing herbivora. Even the goat and donkey can only nibble at the rose and wild pears. Nor is there another family better able to spread on the spot by suckering."

"But one more thing I want you to note: That the pear and its relatives are always found in company with fruit-eating birds. If you should go West beyond settlements, you would find no robins and no cat-birds, and those other birds that are quite particular about their dessert. Some birds will eat wild thorn-apples and wild cherries; but the robins will not, except very hungry. They live only where men plant for them choice varieties."

"Yes! And then they eat nearly everything."

"Well, then we must plant more."

"Not a member of the family appeared on the earth till fruit eating birds appeared; and that was, geologically, in very recent times. And the better varieties appear only with dainty birds and daintier man."

"Do you think this kind of improvement will go on?"

"Undoubtedly; and men will grow daintier; and daintier birds will be developed. I would not eat a Bonchretien pear if you would hire me; but thirty years ago the Bonchretien was considered very good eating."

"So, now, you have given me a lesson in horticulture, and it is not a bit like those you gave the boys."

"Do you feel better acquainted with the trees and their cousins, now?"

"Oh! yes! And I—why I shall always see them and think of them as somebody, now."

"Yes, and you will begin to see that one can have a great deal of company in the country, even in the woods. The first thing to becoming a horticulturist is love of the land and the things that grow out of it. It is a poor person who only sees something to eat in a garden. And loving land is the sure road to strength of character. Our greatest people, men and women, are passionate land-lovers. Daniel Webster thought of his farm as of a very dear friend. No race ever became powerful against land-loving races. Our forefathers were called the land cultivators. If a girl wishes a natural and a sweet and strong character, she should be a horticulturist."—E. P. Powell in The Independent.

—Missionary Richards writes from the Banza Manteke mission on the upper Congo: "This is no longer a heathen country. The poison-giving, the throat cutting, the demoniac yells, the diabolical dance and witchcraft are things of the past here. Of the 1,000 converts, 870 are grown people."

TEMPERANCE.

THE GREAT EVIL.

"Woe unto him who giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him and maketh him drunken also." This is a positive and terrible malediction against the liquor dealer. It strikes a withering blow against all the rum mills in the land. And this "woe" soon or later will come upon the persistent vender of the liquor poisons of the day. "Woe unto him." Wherefore? Because "he that soweth to the wind shall reap the whirlwind." Yea, let all such surely know that the wrath of God will be revealed against, and will inevitably overtake them and reward them among all the evil doers upon whom he will pour the vials of his sore indignation. Alas for such when God ariseth in his just retribution to cut off from among the living the ungodly and persistent transgressor of his divine law! "For our God is a consuming fire." He will not be mocked forever. "Vengeance is mine; I will repay, saith the Lord." And the reward of the wicked will be blasting, mildew, and woe and banishment from his presence forever.

Then write this impressive and thrilling truth as with a pen of iron "in letters of living light:"

"On the liquor store,
Write it on the prison door;
Write it on the gin shop fine;
Write, aye, write this truthful line:
Where there's drink, there's woe!"

You can as well, and with as much emphasis, write it also upon the entrance of every workhouse where convicts are incarcerated. Yea, alas, you may go also to the homes of the dead and inscribe woe upon the tombstone of every drunkard who has died a victim to rum. This shall be their sad and warning epitaph to the living, behold the multitudes of the slain, for they are legion! Alas for humanity, for you can even emblazon this fearful "woe" upon the gallows, where all may behold it and take timely warning. Oh, inscribe it in bold capitals on every mansion, cot and hall as a beacon warning against this wrecking stone upon which thousands are drifting to unutterable ruin and woe! Oh, woe full of terror and unwritten agony to him who maketh his fellow drunken, and thus kills the body and damns the soul!

I. N. KANAGA.

Newark, N. J., 1887.

WHY WORK IS SCARCER.

I reside in a manufacturing town of 25,000 inhabitants. The articles manufactured range from heavy machinery for all sorts of purposes to the smallest articles in daily use. The presence of a large class of laboring men with families to clothe and feed makes a large trade in articles necessary in a household—as food, clothing, furniture, books and works of art. Besides these branches of industry, we have another which is carried on, on a large scale. We have nearly two hundred establishments whose business is drunkard-making.

During the two or three years past our manufacturing establishments have felt the pressure of the hard times, and been obliged to curtail their business, and so we have had more or less unemployed men in our community. Many of these men thus thrown out of employment are men who use neither intoxicants nor tobacco, but all the same, loss of employment has brought their families to want. So far as their own habits are concerned, they have not suffered from the rum traffic. Nevertheless, I think it can be shown that their loss of employment has been caused by this traffic.

These two hundred saloons can not be run on an average income of less than ten dollars per day, to pay for rent, wages, stock and give a living profit to the proprietors. This takes $2,000 per day out of the pockets of our 25,000 citizens, or (as Sunday is not a day of rest for saloon men) $730,000 per annum. Now, if this sum were not spent in saloons, what would be done with it? It is fair to assume that at least half of it would be spent for things that would give comfort and enjoyment in the homes of our city—food, clothing, furniture, ornaments for the home or the person, literature, etc.,—in short, for just those manufactured articles of which there is now a surplus in our warehouses, and in consequence of which surplus production has to be diminished and laborers thrown out of employment. Stop the stream that flows into the till of the saloon and turn it into the warehouses aforesaid, and thus empty them of their surplus, and at once there would be a call for more producers, and every unemployed man would have the opportunity to earn wages for the support of his family.

If every laboring man were a "teetotaler," provided only the money squandered for drink were the same as now, the effect of this enormous waste on the laboring man in depriving him of employment would be the same as now. The plain fact is, that what is wasted for drink is not spent, as it would be largely, for useful articles whose manufacture gives employment to the laboring class. Thus it is the laboring class that suffers most in consequence of the rum traffic.—N. S. Burton, in Boston Watchman.

HOW THEY GOT RICH.

"You see that man just crossing the street?" remarked a Chicago man to a New Yorker, whom he was towing around to see the sights. "Well, that man sold popcorn in this city for twenty-two years, and he is worth $150,000."

"Did he make it selling popcorn?"

"Oh, no. He made his pile buying lake front lots."

Pretty soon the guide called his attention to a man standing in the door of a bank, and added, "That man opened the first Bible-house west of New York city. Thirty years ago he was rat poor. To-day he runs that bank."

"Did he make his money selling Bibles?"

"Oh, no. He bought prairie land and held on to it."

In the course of ten minutes a big building was pointed out as belonging to a man who reached Chicago nineteen years ago with only fifty cents in his pocket. He opened a night-school and now reveled in his wealth.

"Did he make it all teaching school?" asked the New Yorker.

"Oh, no. He went into the dray business as soon as he had money enough to buy a horse."

After several more like cases he had referred to, the visitor asked: "Have you one single man in Chicago who has made money in the business he first started into?"

"Have we? Let's see. Let's see. Yes, we have. I know a man on State street who went into the whisky business twenty years ago, has stuck right to it, and is worth $100,000. If he had only been sharp enough to turn round after ten years and open an undertaker's shop and bury his customers he'd now be a millionaire.—Wall Street News.

The New York Observer remarks that the Roman Catholic priests of Worcester, Mass., who recently took their congregations to task for engaging so largely in the liquor traffic, may be credited with the recognition of a fact which has been patent for many years to every one, outside of the Roman Catholic church. One of them said he noticed with shame that out of the thirty-one applications for liquor licenses within the limits of his parish, twenty-nine came from members of his congregation. We presume that this proportion will hold good in all the parishes in our large cities. Rum and Romanism are everywhere very closely allied.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Byron Gunner of New Iberia, Louisiana, writes that it seems to be the will of God that there should be special effort for salvation among his people. He is, therefore, expecting soon to begin a series of meetings. In the community about, licentiousness, Sabbath-breaking, intemperance and profanity abound, and he earnestly beseeches the prayers of Christian people in behalf of the effort he is to make. New Iberia has about 4,000 population, yet there are twenty-five places where liquor is sold by license. The Lord's day is the favorite time for all kinds of wicked amusements, and the effect upon the moral character of the young men is most deplorable. Let every one heed the request of our brother, "I pray for us."

—Mr. Charles Herald, who has for some years been associated with the work at Moody church in this city, and who has been wonderfully successful in his work in Pennsylvania this past year, has begun a series of meetings at the Tabernacle church, corner of Indiana and Morgan streets, Chicago. The interest has steadily grown until Friday night, when the church was packed with an attentive audience. A large number remained to the after-meeting, and numbers rose for prayer. Mr. Herald makes a great deal of the singing, and generally sings one or two solos before he preaches. The prospects are good for a great work on the West side.

—Philip Moses, of Melbourne, a minister of high standing in the Congregational church, has resigned his pastorate and taken up the temperance work, and is the first native Australian to do so. Mr. Moses will make an extended tour of England and America next year.

—The graduating exercises of Oberlin Theological Seminary took place Friday afternoon in the Second Congregational church, Oberlin. Four of the twelve members were ordained in the evening, two of whom will go to foreign fields of labor, Rev. C. A. Clark going to Japan and Professor King, of Oberlin College, to Natal, South Africa.

—The Lutheran Synod which closed its session at Fort Wayne, Ind., on the 16th inst., adopted resolutions condemning the methods adopted by the Knights of Labor for accomplishing their purposes, and warning members of the German Lutheran church against joining the order.

—One hundred and ten students at Oberlin College have pledged themselves to go as foreign missionaries; 400 young men in colleges under the care of the Presbyterian church offer themselves for the same work, and 80 young ladies in Wellesley College have offered themselves for similar service.

—Mrs. Kendall, a young widow who studied at Vassar, is about to follow the example of Dr. and Mrs. Scudder in going as a missionary to Japan at her own charges. She will be accompanied by Miss Mary Poole, a daughter of the well-known librarian in Chicago, and a Wellesley student, whose personal friends relieve the American Board of all her expenses for board and travel.

—Dr. G. F. Pentecost closed his series of meetings which had continued three and a half weeks at Montpelier, Vt., May 18. More than a hundred conversions have occurred. Dr. Pentecost goes home to New Jersey for a season of rest.

—The Hon. Bradford L. Prince, a prominent public man of Long Island, has given up his private business for a year to present the claims of the Building Fund Commission of the Episcopal church.

—A committee of Baltimore clergymen have sent a document to President Cleveland urging him to consider the propriety of a change in the army regulations that will secure to the United States soldiers the privilege of a better observance of Sunday and protect them against excessive duties on that day.

—The great debt of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has been removed. Its receipts for the year were $780,000, or $35,000 more than last year; $248,000 were from the Women's Boards.

—The statement was made by the Rev. W. W. Everts, in an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of New York, that fully 300 educated young colored men and women were ready to devote themselves to mission work in Africa if there were means to send them.

—The Gospel of St. Mark, the first issued in Japan, was issued in 1872, the whole New Testament in 1880, and an edition of the entire Scriptures in the native character will soon be published. The National Bible Society of Scotland has issued an edition of the New Testament in Roman letter which has a large sale.

—The Ladies' Home Missionary Society of the Broadway Tabernacle has sent its annual donation to home missionaries of 21 trunks, in each of which was a new pulpit suit for the missionary, a shawl for his wife, and a library of 20 new and useful books. The estimated cash value of these gifts was nearly $4,500.

—Miss May King, M. D., a Chinese young lady who has received a full medical education in this country, and had a number of years of experience in hospital practice, has been appointed a medical missionary, to be connected with the Amoy Mission of the Reformed church.

—Mr. Moody has issued invitations to students of more than one hundred colleges and universities in this country, and to the students of the British universities to meet at his place at Northfield, Mass., from June 30 to July 12, for the study of the Bible and for conference concerning the extension of Christ's kingdom among students.

—Dr. Robert Brown, who has visited Greenland for botanical and geological studies, writes as follows: "Mission stations are now scattered at intervals, and, from being a simple missionary, the Greenland priest has now become the 'parish minister,' for there is not now one professed pagan in all Danish Greenland."

—Forty years ago there were ten Protestant converts in the Province of Canton, China; now there are 4,000. In the Province of Shantung there was not a professing Christian twenty-five years ago; now Protestant Christians meet regularly on the Sabbath for worship in 300 places.

—The great annual meeting of the German Baptists, or Dunker church, has just been held at Ottawa, Kansas. The attendance was not as large as usual, as the meeting is distant from the centers of Dunker population. On the first Sabbath the several pastors of the Protestant churches invited speakers from the conference. The Gospel Messenger comments on this unusual proceeding, and asks if such courtesies are accepted, there is no reason why they should not be extended to ministers outside the denomination.

—There are said to be 27,000 heathen converts now employed as Christian evangelists to their countrymen, 2,500 of whom have been ordained as ministers of the Gospel.

—The British and Foreign Bible Society have issued a Jubilee penny Testament, with Queen Victoria's arms imprinted in gold on the cover, which they propose to distribute in large quantities June 21.

—Of the 500 Chinese now living in Philadelphia, about one-quarter attend Christian Sunday-schools. One of the number is studying for the ministry and expects to return to China as a missionary.

—The Echo de Perse of April 15, a French journal published at Teheran, Persia, contains the following notice of Dr. W. W. Torrence, who graduated at Rush Medical College, Chicago, in 1880, and went to Teheran as a medical missionary in 1881:

"We learn with great pleasure that by imperial firman his Majesty, the Shah, has authorized the American missionaries to establish at Teheran a hospital where, without distinction to creed or race, all seeking relief shall be received for treatment. Dr. Torrence, physician to the mission, has been appointed director of this establishment, which is destined to render great service to our cosmopolitan population. His Imperial Majesty, desiring at the same time to reward the zeal and devotion of Dr. Torrence, who for so many years past has been gratuitously relieving so much suffering and distress, has named him Grand Officer of the Order of the Lion and Sun of Persia."

THE INTERNATIONAL SABBATH SCHOOL CONVENTION.

This great triennial meeting, the fifth in its history, held from Tuesday to Friday inclusive last week in this city. The delegates to this great meeting are chosen on a basis of one representative for every 40,000 of population. These delegates from nearly every part of the Union and Canada were a noble body, the workers of the Christian host. The statistics of their work form a table which millions will study with an inspiration. In the United States 8,034,000 scholars in nearly 100,000 schools; in North America, 8,471,416 scholars and 1,159,438 teachers; in the world 16,000,000 in the Sabbath school.

It was a meeting full of genuine enthusiasm. General C. B. Fiske of New Jersey was chosen temporary chairman in the absence of Governor Colquitt of Georgia, who had been expected to fill that position. William Reynolds of Peoria, our own Illinois worker was chosen permanent chairman, but he divided the honors with Gen. Fiske. The addresses, the discussions, the papers, the reports would fill a volume, for one afternoon two meetings were held, one in Farwell Hall for Primary class teachers.

The resolutions of the convention look to an enlargement of its work, and an effort will be made to hold the next convention in Europe and at least include in its operations all English-speaking people. Good temperance resolutions were also adopted and an effort to make the Sabbath schools tributary to human-inventions in religion by select lessons to apply to so-called church days was very wisely thrown out.

The success of the meeting was largely secured by the earnest and wise labors of some of our Chicago workers, especially the Jacobs brothers, B. F. and W. B., and Prof. E. O. Kexell, who conducted the singing.

LITERATURE.

HOME ATLAS OF THE WORLD: Price $2.00, postage twenty-six cents. John B. Alden, New York.

An enterprising publisher is a public benefactor; and this atlas will commend Mr. Alden in a thousand homes. It contains 96 pages of maps, 11x14 inches in size, well engraved and printed. A full and carefully compared index of over 5,000 important cities, rivers, mountains, etc., indicates their location on the maps and facilitates greatly the use of the atlas. For the excellence of its preparation and handsome binding, it is one of the marvels of cheapness for which American readers are already much indebted to this publisher.

George Kennan, who has recently returned from his Siberian trip for the Century, made a visit to Count Tolstoi, at the urgent request of Siberian State exiles, who wished the novelist and tractarian to know the horrors of their situation. The June number of the Century contains an account of this visit and the circumstances leading to it, told with considerable detail, and showing the Count's striking character and peculiar beliefs, together with his mode of life. His views on the problems of the time as brought out in conversations, are presented. The Mormon and Chinese questions attracted his comment. This paper is a promised fore-runner of a series by the same writer who was sent to Siberia by the Century in 1885-6, for the purpose of investigating the Russian exile system. The cathedral at Peterborough is the subject of the article in the series on English cathedrals. An illustrated paper of popular bearing is the second of Professor W. O. Atwater's articles on food, entitled "How Food Nourishes the Body," and presenting in compact form a large amount of the latest deductions of chemical analysis and other scientific investigation in this department. Incidentally he explodes the idea that fish is especially good for brain food. These practical papers are to be continued in future numbers of the magazine. The special topics in the present part of the Lincoln history are the attack on Charles Sumner by Preston S. Brooks, and the Dred Scott decision of March 6, 1857. These events are rapidly and clearly sketched, and Lincoln's views of the decision recorded in his own words. The portraits include Sumner, Brooks, Henry Wilson, Anson Burlingame, Dred Scott and his wife, Chief Justice Taney, and Associate Justices McLean, Nelson, and Curtis. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps has a story extravagant in fancy and verging so strongly toward blasphemy as to suggest Ingersollism. An editorial ably criticizes General Wolsley's extravagant and prejudiced estimate of R. E. Lee. This paper of the British commander has called out Gen. Sherman also in a very able refutation in the North American Review, and another from Jeff Davis who sharply criticizes the same paper.

Words and Weapons is a treasury for Christian workers. "A Working Church" and "Service in Difficult Places" will be helpful to many such laborers for God. Dr. Picerson's biographical sketch is of August Herman Franke.

The Woman's Magazine, edited by Mrs. Esther T. Housh, Brattleboro, Vt., has an attractive June number, among the contributors appearing Mrs. Jennie F. Willing, the evangelist, and Miss Lucia E. F. Kimball, a prominent W. C. T. U. Worker.

Rose Hartwick Thorpe, author of "Curfew Must not Ring To-night," is president of the Ladies' Prohibitory Club of San Antonio, Texas, organized for aggressive campaign work.

The death is announced of Thomas Spencer Baynes, the well-known professor of logic and one of the editors of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

LODGE NOTES.

Two local assemblies of the Knights of Labor have been formed in New York, with 600 members of Chinese laundrymen, cigar-makers, and opium joint-keepers.

The Knights of Labor Executive Board have revoked the charters of National Carpet Weavers' District Assembly, No. 126, and of eighteen local assemblies, affecting 10,000 workers in New York, Philadelphia, Yonkers, and Amsterdam. Insubordination is assigned as the cause. The leaders among the expelled carpet-weavers will bring legal proceedings against the Executive Board for the purpose of securing a judicial interpretation of the constitution of the order.

The members of the Knights of Labor Executive Board, who have been investigating the strike in the coke regions, have forwarded their report to the General Board. They find that the strike is illegal, and recommend that the members of the Knights of Labor return to work, and also sustain the umpire in his award.

St. Louis is making great preparations for the Grand Army meeting, $100,000 having been subscribed for the expenses. Lucius Fairchild, the head of the order, believes the people of St. Louis will not ask President Cleveland to visit that city at the time of the G. A. R. encampment, as it would only result in attracting a crowd that would discommode the order.

It is stated that the Mobile and Ohio road has drawn the color line in the excursion rates to the meeting of the Knights of Labor in Mobile, August 3. The tickets secure the privilege to a particular class by stamping the ticket "colored," so that none but citizens of the African race will be able to avail themselves of the rate.

A new labor organization has been formed in North Carolina, called the Co-Operative Workers of America. It is the intention of its founders to make it a national institution, and its declaration of principles closely resembles that of the Knights of Labor.

The Masonic fraternity of Missouri is agitated by a degree promulgated by the Grand Master, setting forth that at the meeting of the Grand Lodge in 1832 it was decided that the business of selling liquor is un-Masonic and should not be tolerated. The decree warns all Masons who are in any way connected with the liquor traffic that they are liable to expulsion or suspension. Several men who have been Masons several years, it is stated, have already been suspended, and many more suspensions are to follow. The matter seems not to have been generally known until recently, and only Saturday was the public made aware of this important action. The edict will create a great sensation in Masonic circles all over the country.

Introduction by

REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,

(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints which will help as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A hook that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a hook of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the prevalent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—Western Christian Advocate.

PRESERVING MILK WITHOUT CHEMICALS.

A new German method of preserving milk in its natural state, without any addition to it whatever, is announced in a German scientific journal. The process consists in heating the milk in closed vessels, such as glass bottles, to beyond the boiling-point, so as to expel all air containing germs (which are the cause of milk spoiling) into the vacuum so formed. This is effected in the following manner: The bottles are filled with milk almost to the commencement of the neck, leaving a considerable space between the milk and the cork, which latter is then driven in so far as to allow a space of about half an inch between its upper surface and the top of the neck. A layer of paraffine wax is then run in, and thereon is placed a cork disk, which, by means of a staple closure, is kept from rising. A number of the bottles so filled and prepared are placed in a chamber or vessel that can be hermetically closed and able to withstand an inner pressure of four or five atmospheres. Here steam of about two and a half to three atmospheres' pressure is introduced, having a temperature of about 230 degrees Fahr. This soon raises the temperature of the milk in the bottles to the same degree, which, on expanding, reduces the space between it and the cork, and through the paraffine rendered liquid. Care, however, is taken to see that the reduction of the space is not sufficient to allow of the milk reaching the cork. The chamber is now cooled down, the bottles removed, and when cold, the provisional staples taken off. It will be seen that, by this process, the fermentation-producing air in the chamber being destroyed by the heated steam, the small quantity that re-enters on the cooling and consequent contraction of the milk can do no injury, while an equilibrium is established between the innocuous air in the bottle and the outer atmosphere. The cork itself is also protected from any germs entering it from the outside by the congealed layer of paraffine, a part of which has entered the cork when in a liquid state under the pressure in the chamber. Milk preserved by this method is said to keep fresh for years, and to have exactly the same taste as new milk.

MILK AS AN ODOR ABSORBENT.

Those dairymen who do not believe in the power of milk to rapidly absorb and become contaminated by surrounding noxious smells will do well to try the following simple test, the results of which will, doubtless, immediately convince the most skeptical: Take a wide bowl or soup plate to the cow stable when you go to milk; pour into it a pint of fresh milk, set it on the floor or at the height of a milk stool, so as to expose it fully to the air of the stable, behind and close to the cows. If the day is close and heavy and the milk is cold, and the stable not cleaned out and aired, the result will be surprising. Take it to the house or anywhere away from the stable, and try to drink it.

WORKING AND SALTING BUTTER.—In a paper on this subject Mr. T. O. Curtis says that a few years since dairymen thought it necessary to gather their butter into a solid mass in the churn, and then take it out and work and wash it as long as the water looked milky. Later, some one started the idea of stopping the churn when the butter had gathered into lumps the size of beech-nuts or kernels of corn. In this condition it was mashed in the churn or bowl, with little working until the salt was applied. This was an improvement. Now the more advanced butter makers stop the churn as soon as the butter appears in granules the size of wheat kernels, even as small as mustard seed.

GOING BAREFOOT.—Children who are allowed to go barefooted enjoy almost perfect immunity from the danger of "cold" by accidental chilling of the feet, and they are altogether healthier and happier than those who go about with their feet done up. For the poorer classes of children, "it is incomparably better that they should go barefooted than wear boots that let in the wet, and stockings that are nearly always damp and foul."

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Unofficial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition. Will show the character of Masonic doctrine and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doeburg, Past Master University of No. 194, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over a hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1834. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the "Charge Books." Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, class and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. This Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. "The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments." 307 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 20 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. A complete and accurate exposition of the ritual and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustration of the structure of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 344 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $0.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cts; $4.00 per dozen.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry as a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. L. G. Cook. In which she declares that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Mah-Hab-Bone; comprises the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry at a Glance Bound Together. This volume contains the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, 589 pp. $1.00.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A complete and accurate exposition of the ritual and the ritual of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on ex-Initiates? By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Captain Morgan. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan. "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan;" "Balance of the Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan;" "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan's Times;" and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 304 pages. $1.50.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secrecism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trampled and trampled by the influence of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. The Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work). The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

A warrant has been issued against Phil Armour, the great Chicago packer, for being concerned in a corn plot.

Ex-Vice President Wheeler passed away on Saturday morning, his death being painless and peaceful. His funeral takes place at Watertown, N. Y., on Tuesday.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is conducting a five-days' temperance campaign at Clinton, Ill., and Francis Murphy has just closed a successful two-weeks' meeting at Clinton, Iowa, in which over two thousand signed the pledge.

A rainfall of about a week ended with a cloud burst near Oberlin, Ohio, Sunday afternoon. A small stream, Plump creek, running through the town, in three hours was 20 feet deep and the town flooded, buildings swept away, and the basements of all the business houses filled with water ten feet deep. No loss of life is reported but the damage may reach $20,000.

A dispatch from Little Rock says: The situation in the Choctaw Nation is becoming serious. Half-breeds are leaving the nation in large numbers and crossing into Arkansas for safety. Many Indians are under arms. Warnings have been given to many families, ordering their instant departure from the Choctaw country. A battle between the full-bloods and the half-breeds is imminent.

At Summitville, Ind., natural gas has been discovered at a depth of 900 feet. The drill penetrated Trenton rock but a foot, and the rush of gas indicated that a gusher has been tapped.

William Showers, in jail at Lebanon, Pa., for having murdered the two illegitimate children of his daughter, is now suspected of having killed the latter and also his wife by poison.

The calaboose at Mackinaw, Ill., was burned last night, Edward Lahart, the only prisoner, perishing in the flames. Lahart had been robbed last Wednesday, Ed Short and S. Nichols being imprisoned at Pekin for the crime, and there are suspicions that the Mackinaw calaboose was fired for the purpose of destroying the principal witness against the Pekin suspects.

Professor Charles Siedhoff and his wife Matilda, aged 91 and 92, tiring of their struggle with destitution, committed suicide Tuesday afternoon at Union Hill, N. J., by taking cyanide of potassium.

Four million feet of lumber owned by the United Lumber Company of Buffalo, were burned at Keating Summit, Pa., on Tuesday. The loss is estimated at $350,000.

The bill creating a board of trustees to receive and hold in trust for the State the title to the Lincoln homestead in Springfield, appointing a custodian thereof, and making an appropriation to repair and keep in a state of preservation the residence and relics, passed the Illinois House Thursday.

A letter, signed by Governor Oglesby, sent to the governors of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, and Colorado, asks them to limit their quarantine of cattle to Cook county, and not to the whole State of Illinois.

Captain Jack Hussey, who saved thirty-four persons from drowning, was fatally shot by a policeman at New York Thursday night.

Two hundred head of cattle, affected with pleuro-pneumonia, were killed and the carcasses burned Thursday, on the dairy farm of Edward Brady, in Westchester county, New York. The commissioners awarded Brady $12,000 damage.

A fatal disease among horses, said to have been imported with French stock, is prevalent in Clinton county, Illinois. All the affected animals have been quarantined.

A severe earthquake rocked portions of Northern California and Western Nevada early Friday morning. Fissures formed in the earth, and in some instances plaster fell from walls. The disturbance was heavy at Sacramento and Carson City, and reports are current that the hot springs were dried up.

A terrific rain and thunderstorm at Kansas City, Mo., Friday, flooded the Missouri Pacific Yards, and caused considerable damage throughout the city. Fifteen miles south of Kansas City the passengers on a train became panic-stricken, it being feared the heavy wind would blow the cars from the track.

Miss Jane E. Hall and her sister, of Pennsylvania, have begun suit to recover $4,000,000 from the government. They claim to be lineal descendants of Jacob De Haven, a Frenchman, who during revolutionary times loaned the Colonial Government large sums which have never been repaid.

FOREIGN.

A strong protection movement is developing in Spain. Senators and deputies representing the farming and manufacturing districts, and men of all parties are urging the government to take early steps to pass a law looking to the protection of native industry by the imposition of higher duties on foreign cereals and cattle.

The evictions at Bolyke, Ireland, have begun again, the sheriff having recovered from his illness. The sheriff is protected while doing his work by a force of 600 policemen and troops. At one house, in which the inmates were barricaded, the officers made a hole through the wall with crowbars and removed the furniture. There is great excitement in the district.

A Merve dispatch says that on May 20 the Afghans murdered fourteen Bokharan officials at Kerki, on the Amu Darya, because they refused to incite the inhabitants to resist the Russian advance, and that on the same day a Russian detachment occupied Kerki without opposition.

The breaking of the dyke of the Theiss river, Austria, has resulted in the submerging of fifty miles of the Alfold plain, near Szeged. It is estimated that the damage will reach £1,000,000. Thousands of animals are crowded into a small space, and the people are leaving their homes in boats. The breaking of the dykes was due to their defective construction. It is feared that the market towns of Mako, Szentes and Vasarhely will be flooded, and the inhabitants are prepared to flee at a moment's notice. There are 4,000 men engaged in strengthening the dykes. The water is still rising in the Bega and Nera rivers. The Berzana canal in South Hungary has overflowed its banks to an enormous extent. In Banat there are 300,000 acres inundated.

The Dominion Senate has decided that a divorce obtained in the United States is of no effect in Canada.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says that the Amer of Bokhara has dismissed all the officials of his government found intriguing against Russia. He has informed the government of Turkestan that he and his subjects are impatiently waiting for the great link which will connect their country with Russia and diffuse civilization throughout Central Asia.

At the time of the heavy earthquake, six weeks since, a volcano broke out on the Mexican side of the Sierra Madres, west of Casa Grandes, which, it is reported, still belches forth lava and smoke in vast quantities, the molten mass extending ten miles from the crater of the volcano.

The Paris press comments indicate that in the Left groups there are 150 deputies against Rouvier, the new Premier, therefore he will be unable to increase his Republican majority of 11. Rouvier hopes to effect a retrenchment of sixty to eighty million francs from the estimates of the Ministries of War, Marine, and Public Works. Also a gain of 4,000,000 francs by establishing a revenue police to repress domestic distilling, which is extensively prevalent in Normandy. The success of the scheme is doubtful, as Norman deputies will refuse to support the measure likely to deprive them of their seats.

The German papers rejoice over the prospects of peace which they believe is insured by the new French ministry, and Prince Bismarck is making great efforts to bring about another tripartite alliance between the three emperors, with the view of settling the difficulties and soothing the irritation which exists owing to Russia's treatment of Austria.

Russian advices assert that the Amer of Afghanistan is in a critical position, and the Czar receives Bismarck's advances for a tripartite alliance somewhat coldly, while Austrian news show that the Austrian Cabinet is surprised and indignant over Bismarck's sudden conciliatory policy after having consented to join Austria in common action against the Russian ukraine.

Father Tosti, at Rome, advocates that negotiations for a reconciliation between the Papacy and Italy proceed on the basis of a renunciation by the Pope of all claims to temporal power.

England, it is reported, is quietly but rapidly preparing for a war with Russia in Afghanistan, and has ordered the Khyber Pass to be fortified and the Peshawar Valley railway to be completed as speedily as possible. Indian troops are being massed at the readiest points for an advance from Quetta, and the utmost military activity prevails. The magnitude of the preparations indicate a belief in Lord Dufferin's mind that Russia means to fight for the territory she covets.

The Irish question has assumed another important phase, for while the government is undecided what course to pursue in regard to forcing the coercion bill through, the opponents of the measure have at last succeeded in arriving at an agreement by which they will direct their whole force against the measure. Michael Davitt has counseled resistance by the Irish people of eviction, and the danger of revolt is intensified. Meanwhile Gladstone is in Wales advocating home rule for Ireland, and sympathy with Irishmen in their difficult and arduous contest.

OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. S. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 32c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing the book to the conversion of thousands both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.
Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Hillebrandt. Paper covers, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.
How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

The testimony of our African brother J. Augustus Cole respecting the liquor traffic in Africa is having frequent sad corroborations. The cupidity of European nations, though checked by the establishment of a Congo Free State, is yet grasping at every section of coast line. Germany has lately taken possession of the Cameroons district in West Africa, and a few German missionaries have gone to the new field, but along with them are the following imports from Germany: 1,524,028 litres of rum, 37,800 bottles of gin, 1,588 old muskets, 1,000 cartridges and 56,039 kilograms of tobacco. "These returns are characteristic of the manner in which 'civilization' is introduced from Germany," says the Germania, with a bitter sarcasm.

The United Presbyterian General Assembly was not so much taken up with the organ controversy as to forget Christian reforms, although not all the action was taken on these topics which we believe would have been pleasing to God and for the strengthening of the church. The National Reform Association delegates secured a good endorsement, Sabbath desecration had a strong rebuke, and the temperance cause had this grand and emphatic approval:

1. That all measures of license or tax are wrong in principle and a failure in practice.
2. That we regard this traffic as an evil which can never be removed without political action, and that we request its entire prohibition as the most pressing political question of the times, and that it therefore becomes our duty as Christian citizens, in the careful and prayerful use of the ballot, to meet this question directly.
3. That, thanking God for the growth of public sentiment in favor of the prohibition of this traffic, we resolved that we will still hold our place in the front of the battle "for God and home and native land."

The Synod of the Reformed Presbyterians, meeting at Newburg, New York, had less fear of the lodge and to a sound, strong and wise action on temperance added firm and emphatic resolutions condemning the secret orders. The report on this subject was drawn up by Rev. D. S. Faris of Sparta, Ill., and the series of recommendations with which it closed were discussed separately, and then embodied in a final resolution which was considered in an able review of the subject in an evening meeting to which the public was invited. Such action cannot be too highly commended. When the church conferences shall follow this excellent example, and fearing God only consider in the light of his Word not alone the lodge, but all other popular but morally blasting movements, we shall be near to the times of restitution.

Few are probably aware that when "Bully" Brooks struck Sumner down in the Senate in 1856, that the assault had a representative character in respect to the lodge. Sumner was Freedom's champion, first against African slavery; and next, as his letter to Samuel D. Greene confesses, against English Freemasonry. Preston S. Brooks has never, to our knowledge, been advertised in print as a Mason but the Century prints his portrait in the current number, and upon his well-exposed shirt front is a pin, conspicuously large, and upon the pin the Masonic square-and-compass sign. No Freemason would wear such a badge unless he were in his own account a champion of the order. That great historic tragedy has, therefore, a new meaning revealed in two or three insignificant lines of a portrait—that it was not only slavery, but the lodge which struck a blow at the defender of truth and of the rights of man.

The agitation for the next national campaign is beginning seriously. Not a few associate Mr. Blaine's trip abroad with some scheme for a renomination. Many papers West and South are hoisting a flag for Robert Lincoln, whose recommendations are that he is a son of his father, and in politics is unknown and untied. It is remarkable that no great political leader has for a long time been President. Cleveland has therefore some hope of renomination, but hardly of re-election. There is to be a national convention of the colored race in Indianapolis next month to organize for the next campaign. While this step may be unwise because strengthening a race issue that ought to be dead, it yet shows that the next campaign will be an interesting one. Unless God should in mercy to us smite the nation for its lodge idolatries, and so bring our reform to the front, the prohibition issue will be the only moral question of importance next year. St. John, after the great meeting in Cooper Union last week, said of the Prohibition party: "We expect to put this party politically in 1888 where the Republicans put their party in 1856, and in 1892 we will further repeat history by placing our Abraham Lincoln in the Presidential chair. I feel so confident because neither of the old parties present any issue to the people except such as grow out of sectional and party prejudice resulting from a struggle that has been settled over twenty years." It is a necessary inference that he had not the remotest allusion to John B. Finch, whose Good Templar ambition already anticipates the latter date.

A great majority of the Presbyterians North and South look upon the organic union of the two churches as a duty of pressing moment, but it seems unlikely to be brought about till somebody gets to heaven where all colors are bleached out. It was the great question in the Southern Assembly at St. Louis. Men who accept the will of God revealed in the judgments of war see that union must come, but a few are not across the color line and are never likely to be. They might learn something from the cow that shied at moon-beams coming through a knot-hole and finally jumped over them. If Dr. Smoot and Dr. Palmer of New Orleans, who says that God made the color line and it can never be obliterated; and Dr. Vaughn of Virginia who holds that "We are required by Scripture to stand where we have always stood on the question of slavery, slavery is a curse; but its relations are right," and that God originated the system in the days of Noah,—if these good men would jump at this Chinese wall of a color line they would find it only moonshine, as easy to get over as any county line in the United States. The Interior gathers some scraps of consolation in the refusal of the overture of union from the probability that had it been successful much of the missionary money now used and needed in the Territories would be diverted to the South. If so, the Northern church is not ready either. Its members have money enough for the whole field West and South. When they are ready to pay all obligations of this kind to the Lord, he will see to it that all obstacles to their zeal are removed.

The Kentucky distillers at Louisville last week resolved to stop the manufacture of whisky till a year from next October. Prohibition don't prohibit, "you know;" but it is beginning to. If it can plug this Kentucky vent hole of liquid damnation for a year and a half now, when October 1st, 1888, comes round the plug may have rusted tight. It seems there is more Kentucky whisky made than can be sold. There are now in bond 39,000,000 gallons in the State and 5,000,000 in foreign ports all owned by the same parties; and at the present rate of consumption this amount will last three years. That is, a few years ago the liquor demand was up to a certain limit which these distillers knew very accurately, and manufactured to meet that demand. But so many have stopped drinking that a three-years' supply has accumulated. Let them pile up the barrels of liquid fire, the more there are the bigger the burning at last.

MORAL HEROES.—V.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

Among the great army of anti-slavery orators was there for classical beauty one more elegant than Wendell Phillips? He was indeed the "Golden-mouthed Bostonian." No blade of Damascus bore a keener edge or cut deeper than his. His hatred of slavery, and possibly of the slave-holder, was limited only by his great nature. Had it been possible his hatred would have been more intense and burning. When the great Hungarian General was in this country, those who heard him felt that there was a large reserved force that he did not call into service. Not so Wendell Phillips. In his terrible charges on the slave power he put into requisition all that was in him. And woe to the defender of wrong on whom his blows fell. It was good for the cause of freedom to have such a champion. It is doubtful if there was a slave-holder in all the South that did not know and hate and fear him: and it is doubtful if any other friend of the slave was any more widely known in the North. If the zeal of the bondman's friend flagged, they had but to hear Mr. Phillips for an hour and they would buckle on the armor afresh. He was in himself equal to an armed host, and was an invaluable blessing to the nation in its lapse from its love of liberty. He was one of the heroes to whom a debt of gratitude remains as yet unpaid.

REV. NATHANIEL COLVER AND JOHN G. WHITTIER.

The following incident, given me by George W. Clark, so beautifully links these two reformers of national renown that I place them side by side. Dr. Colver attended an anti-slavery convention at Amesbury, the home of his friend, the Quaker poet, and became so absorbed that he allowed the last train to Boston to pass before he reached the depot. Whereupon the poet invited him to his home.

The next morning being Sabbath, he was invited to attend the Quaker meeting with Whittier. On their way he said, "John, who preaches at thy house to-day?"

The poet replied, "Oh, we do not know; it depends on whether the Spirit moves."

"Well," said Colver, "suppose the Spirit should not move any of your folks to preach, but should move me?"

Whittier replied, "Well, Nathaniel, they might serve thee as they did Beech." (Beech had been imprisoned for disturbing a meeting.)

After an hour's quiet sitting the Friends arose, shook hands and passed out. On their return home

Whittier said to his friend, "Well, Nathaniel, how did thee like the Quaker meeting?"

Colver replied as follows:

"Well, John, since thou a Quaker art,
Go to, I'll tell thee all my heart.
Quite neat and plain thy place I found,
And solemn stillness reigned around.
I took a seat, and down I sat,
And gazed upon a Quaker hat,
While all around, in solemn mood,
I ween, were thinking something good."

"But I still eyed that Quaker hat,
With crown so low, and brim so flat;
I thought him thinking on his God,
When, lo! the hat began to nod!
Then how I longed to use my speech;
I should—hut then I thought of Beech.
I longed his drowsy powers to waken,
But thought it best to save my hacon.
And (would you think me such a chap?)
I gave it up, and—took a nap!"

After leaving Detroit, Dr. Colver was elected a member of the faculty of the Chicago University, where he died after serving as president of a Theological Seminary in Virginia for the education of colored ministers. My first acquaintance with Dr. Colver was in the city of New York, fifty years ago. To my inquiry, "Where did you graduate?" he answered, "Behind a black stump in Vermont."

Pity that stump could not have been placed in the National Museum, for no other stump ever gave the nation so royal a moral standard-bearer. Dr. Colver was associated with me for a little time during his pastorate in Detroit, in care for the refugees of Canada.

I insert here a few remarkable incidents narrated by him, not found in his biography. In the days of his boyhood he was a hunter of wolves. His daring encounters in this hazardous life no doubt nursed that indomitable courage which made him victor over the mobs that he was wont to encounter in his life as a reformer. The lion and the lamb were in him in happy blending. When a crowd of roughs had convened to break up one of his meetings, he went to the ring-leader and said, "You are a working man are you?"

He replied, "Yes."

"Well," said Mr. Colver, "my life is devoted to the interest of the working classes, and I want you to take charge of this meeting and keep order." And he did. That spoiled the mob.

When in the Boston lodge he refused to take the oath of the seventh Masonic degree, "Murder and treason not excepted," he was told he could never leave the lodge until he had taken it. The couchant lion was instantly rampant. He sprang from his knees to his feet and started for the door, where he was stopped by a drawn sword.

"Out of my way," he cried, or I will throw the whole of you out of the window."

When the keeper of St. Helena demanded Napoleon's sword, one look from those flashing eyes caused him to forego the demand. So those Masonic assassins were glad not to encounter the roused lion.

"Now," he said, "I will expose you;" which he also did in three lectures in Tremont Temple, where he was pastor; the crowd in the street being larger than that in the church, and half the police force of the city there for his protection.

When awakened to the sin of taking upon himself the blasphemous oaths already taken, he said his anguish was as great as when first awakened by the Holy Spirit to a sense of his utter sinfulness. And when in the family worship he came to those forty would-be assassins who took an oath that they would neither eat nor drink until they had killed Paul, it flashed upon him that they were morally bound to break that oath, and that there was no escape from the logical inference that he was morally bound to break his Masonic oath which involved murder. The joy that came to him from this discovery was as great as the joy of his first deliverance from the bondage and ruin of sin.

This statement I had from his own lips. Dr. Colver was indeed a great man—the First Baptist church of Detroit has never had his equal.

THE LORD IS THE TRUE GOD, HE IS THE LIVING GOD, AND AN EVERLASTING KING.—Jer. 10: 10. Jeremiah was state prophet, charged with the purity of the state religion. And no definition in mathematics was ever more precise, and no maxim of political economy more profound than the above. Jehovah (Christ) is the TRUE God; all else are false. He is the LIVING God; all else are dead gods. He is everlasting; they are shifting and temporary. The old ones are all gone, and we have a new set and new names. He is an everlasting KING; they are images, goblins, devils. All the old gods of Jeremiah's day are now hid under mongrel, mixed, man-invented worship. And what this great statesman prophet said of the rabble gods of his day is coming true of the rabble secret worships of ours. "The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens." Jer. 10: 11. The Lord hasten it.

LOVE'S SPURRINGS.

BY PASTOR J. F. AVERY.

During the month we have felt the burden of souls, the needs—be to cry aloud and spare not. Death has been busy, and seems to say: "Be instant in season and out of season;" "For ye know not when the Son of Man cometh." But we know of a certainty that the end of time is approaching us individually with a measured certainty, and that as regularly as the clock ticks, and the heart throbs, so surely time is passing.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures."

Since on life's brittle thread hang eternal things, do we not well, David-like, to ask Divine teaching and instruction that we may order our goings aright, and so number our days, and use them with the wisdom that cometh from above, and that we may hear the approval, "Well done, good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful in a few things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Constant are the reminders of life's brevity—the danger of delay. The time to plow and sow, once past, is past recall, and it will effect the harvest. How important to do good, and to do good now, for the night cometh when no man can work; no opportunity to finish tasks in the grave, or alter past mistakes. All must be finished ere we pass this life. Here in the present now we accept or reject the salvation of our Lord which directs the future of our being.

Such awful alternatives should lead all who love the Lord to stir themselves to enter in at the straight gate; and not only to keep the narrow way, but to earnestly endeavor as far as in us lieth to save some by example and precept, warning of the wrath to come, and the way of escape, by looking unto Jesus. Reader, will you not pledge to more conscientious effort in the rescue of the perishing? Tell them none but Jesus can do helpless sinners good. Will you do it for Christ's sake?

GOOD TEMPLARISM.

BY P. F. THURBER.

All secret organizations are contrary to the Bible and the constitution. Yes, all—from Good Templarism to Masonry or the Molly Maguires.

Ministers of the United Brethren, and others who were opposed to Masonry and Odd-fellowship, sometimes say, "O, I don't call the Good Templars a secret society. It is the oath-bound societies that I oppose." What! is not the Christian's promise to the Good Templars or any other order just as binding as if he was sworn? Certainly it is. Christ says, "Let your yea be yea," and if this promise was not obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, and is in accord with the Bible and the constitution, it is binding, just as much as if he had been sworn. But if the promise was obtained by fraud or is not in accord with the constitution or the Bible, it is not binding even if sworn to; and no patriot or Christian should hold a man to such a promise.

Good Templarism is a secret order, and in examining it, for the sake of the argument, we will call it the best secret society in the world, and as such the bulwark of all secret orders. Let us examine it. Those who organize Good Templar lodges tell you it is the "best way to promote the cause of temperance," and if they can get enough temperance people to believe it they organize. The experience and observation of thirty years teaches me that it is not the best way to promote the cause of temperance. The fact is, that most of those who join the lodge, who were not temperance people before, join out of curiosity more than for any other reason, and are no more temperance at heart than they were before; and in a few weeks or months have lost all their transient interest. Temperance people are made, not by going through a ceremony, or taking an obligation, they know not what. It would be just as easy to make a Christian that way; and if the Good Templars are right, the Saviour made a great mistake in not organizing a secret society for the conversion of the world, instead of a church. Temperance preaching, lectures, reading and study are the best means that can be used to make temperance people at heart. So their first position is false; and the folly of the thing is manifest when you see what they spend for charter; rituals, room rent, regalia, janitors and incidentals, and quarterly dues to Grand Lodge. It is the grandest scheme the devil could invent how not to do it.

But the fraud still continues. A person is about to be initiated; is about to trample on the laws of God and man; about to take an obligation to keep secret he knows not what; to obey rules he knows not what; to support a system of whose operations he knows nothing. All of which the Bible forbids. But the candidate is ignorant, he knows not the nature and extent of the obligation, and is naturally watchful and uneasy. To quiet the candidate and put him off his guard an officer of the lodge addresses him like this: "Dear brother, you are now about to take a solemn obligation—one we have all taken, and which I assure you does not conflict with your duty to God or your country." It is now understood by the candidate that his obligation will not conflict with his religion or politics. If he is a Christian, or patriot, he understands that his obligation is in accord with the Bible and the constitution.

Here two falsehoods are told the candidate to prepare him to take his obligation without question; and he takes it. The lodge obtained it by fraud; therefore his pledge is not binding. The Bible (Lev. 5: 4, 5) teaches that such a promise is sin. Therefore it is not binding. Common sense teaches the same. Our Saviour when alone with his disciples taught them, but commanded them to publish his teachings, and declared that in secret he said nothing.

But how about the Constitution, the supreme law of the land. The Constitution of the United States declares that "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press." If Congress cannot do this, can they grant the right to any one else? Certainly not. But all secret societies say: We can do it. We do do it. In Iowa the State constitution says, "The freedom of speech and the press shall be abridged in no manner." Secret societies can not exist a moment without abridging the freedom of speech and of the press. Those who propagate secret societies are traitors to the Constitution. Perhaps they have taken the oath, "I do solemnly swear to support the Constitution of the United States and the State of Iowa," while every obligation they give or take in a secret order abridges the freedom of speech and the press.

Our Good Templar has been initiated. Perhaps the first thing he notices is that the president is called "Worthy Chief," suggestive of Indians; and he has two young ladies to "support" him. Is not one enough? Suggestive of Indians and Mormonism. He don't like it; but can he tell his neighbors what he thinks, or write his thoughts for the papers? No; he is pledged to support the order and he says nothing. After six months' hard work he finds the lodge running down; the money spent to no purpose; the intemperate who joined out of curiosity gone back to their cups; and he says to himself, "It is a humbug, a swindle. I am heartily sick of it;" and perhaps he tells a brother member so; but can he speak and write his thoughts? No; if he is loyal to the lodge he will not do it. That would not be supporting the order. This pledge to support the order abridges his freedom of speech just as much as his pledge to keep their secrets. Let any Good Templar examine the nature and extent of his obligation, and he will see that it abridges his freedom of speech, is contrary to the constitution, and deprives him of an inalienable right. Remember, liberty, as well as life and the pursuit of happiness, is inalienable.

It needs no further argument to prove that secret societies cannot exist without abridging the freedom of speech and press. They are therefore unconstitutional and should be abolished, and laws enacted to fine and imprison every man who gives or takes an obligation abridging the freedom of speech and the press. Here is work! Let petitions be circulated for a law to fine every person who gives or takes an obligation abridging the freedom of speech not less than twenty dollars for every offence; and also a law to abolish secret societies, and to make the sale of charters equivalent to swindling.

There is no despotism at the present day to be compared to the despotism of secret societies, and they are becoming more despotic and lawless. Let the people awake or they will soon be crushed.

How can churches discriminate between secret orders. The same rule that will admit a Good Templar to the church will admit a granger or United Workman or Knight of Labor, Freemason or Oddfellow. Where is the secret order that does not claim a good object? Where is the secret order that has not some good thing about it? Or where is the saloon-keeper, or the robber, or the murderer that has not some good quality? When one of the James boys was killed his mother could only see his good qualities, and believed he had gone to heaven. How foolish then to justify a person or secret society because they have some good about them.

What can a Good Templar say to a saloon-keeper in Iowa? Perhaps he says, "Friend, you are trampling on the laws of Iowa. We want you to close your saloon and stop selling liquor." "Thou hypocrite," says the saloon-keeper, "you are trampling on the Constitution, the supreme law of the land, which you have sworn to support. Our saloons have just as good a right here as your lodges. First cast out the lodges and then talk about saloons."

Perhaps three out of four of all the Good Templars consider the order a failure, as far as promoting the cause of temperance is concerned—a waste of time and money. "I am so sick of it"—how many have I heard say that! Now if those who have quit the lodge and consider it a failure or a waste of time and money, a humbug, or anti-Christian, or unlawful, will lift their voices against it, it will go down—the swindling operation of selling charters, or rather bonds to bind fresh victims, would soon cease; and the deputies (who are generally Masons or Odd-fellows) would find some other way to get a living.

THE GREATEST FOE OF THE CHURCH.

The sad fact stands out boldly like a Rocky Mountain peak against the sky, that most so-called German Lutheran parents shamefully neglect their religious instruction of their children.

The cause for this neglect is principally to be sought in their attitude of indifference towards the Christian religion; and causes for this religious indifference there are many, chief among which I do not hesitate to set down their joining secret societies. If there ever was a harmless looking trap, that trap is the secret society in America. It is at the same time the greatest foe of the church of Christ to-day and the most powerful means employed by Satan in his unceasing endeavor to bring about the apostasy of believers in the Redeemer of sinful man. The bait on this trap is two-fold, consisting in the Holy Bible, which these societies have, and in their toleration of every form of religious worship among their members outside of the lodge.

When an unsuspecting, innocent-minded Christian is told that Freemasons and Odd-fellows and other lodges have the Bible, it makes him inclined to believe that there is no harm in these societies, and it leads him to think of them with more respect and with even a sort of reverence and awe; for surely, he will say, if they have the Word of God, there can be no harm in them, nor in joining them. This is the usual mode of reasoning employed by inexperienced and unsuspecting Christians. But they fall into one serious error and that is this: they think that whatsoever person or society possesses the Bible, that such person or society is necessarily Christian. They are forgetful of the fact, that at times Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light; 2 Cor. 11: 14; that the Jews also have the Bible, at least the Old Testament part of it, and there is not the least sign of Christianity noticeable among them; and that men like Col. R. Ingersoll possess it and even read it, but with the express intention of denying and denouncing it. It is not the mere possession of the Bible, but rather the devout reading and preaching of its contents and the carrying into effect of its precepts, which is a mark of true Christianity, just as it is not the possession of political knowledge, but the right exercise of it for the benefit of the commonwealth, which secures for a statesman the respect of his fellow citizens and endears him to them.

Secret societies have the Bible, but they never use it, unless you would call their ridiculous carrying it about in the streets at the head of a funeral procession using it.

We, however, should prefer to call this by its right name, abuse of the Sacred Scriptures, lying and deceiving by the holy name of God, downright hypocrisy. It is not asserted in these words, that there are no respecters of God's Word to be found among Odd-fellows, Freemasons and the like. There are some few, who, unfortunately, in one manner or other were prevailed upon to join the lodge; but they are in the greatest peril of gradually and imperceptibly making the lodge their church and the devil their god. For, that Satan is the god of the lodges, is manifest; for the use they make of the Bible is all sham and hypocrisy; it is even worse, it is blasphemy and sacrilege, which actions Satan only is capable of, and they that serve him.

Moreover, the fact that these secret, oath-bound societies do not directly interfere with the religious belief of its members, but on the contrary let every member worship God in whatever church or denomination he may choose, this fact is another bait. For if in their statutes they would directly interfere with or forbid the exercise of religious liberty, few Christians could then be induced to make application for membership, and the lodge would, in this event, have little show of respectability. But now you see, or rather don't you see, that my joining the lodge will not prevent me from attending divine services at my church with my family as usual? For don't you see, that the lodge does not ask me to renounce my religious belief? and so on. Oh, yes, this is all very plain, and with equal plainness do we see how you, by joining the lodge, become a participant in the dreadful sin of lying and deceiving by the name of God, and how you sit in the seat with scoffers. But "Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners, nor sitteth in the seat of the scornful," Psa. 1: 1.

This religious toleration and the possession of the Bible constitute the two-fold bait of secret societies, and a very effective bait it is, as sad experience serves to show in other parts of the country as well as here in Denver. No doubt the reader knows of many who were allured by this bait and joined some secret society, and who, if they did not sever their connection with it, in most cases became infidels at heart and made shipwreck of their faith.—Denver Letter in the Lutheran Witness.

THE MATTER OF TITLES.

When this Republic was founded one relic of its old monarchical allegiance was preserved, namely: a use of honorary titles. We no longer had a Majesty to bow to, so we revered an Excellency. There were no Serene Highnesses to whom one could pay court; no Most Nobles and High Mighties and Lordships and Ladyships to compose an aristocracy which should patronize the remainder of the commonwealth, so we lumped our superior beings under the general head of honorables. The use of these titles has generated into abuse, and the principle of giving aristocratic handles to the names of our plebeians is inconsistent with the idea of absolute equality. Jerry McGuff, for instance, gets into the legislature. It will not do to inquire too closely how he does it, but he gets there. He is mixed up in all the deals, the jobs, the swindles that he can get into; he is criminal, unintelligent and incapable; it is at a cost of public honor and public money that he keeps his place. Well, what then? At the end of a year he returns to his ward with money enough to start a liquor saloon, and he is the "Honorable Jerry McGuff" from that time forth. His next door neighbor, his superior mentally and morally, goes to his grave as plain John Smith, known to his friends as John, to his boss as Smith, and is not so much as a "Mister"—a term devoid of present meaning, though a corruption of the "Master" that implied adult condition and capacity in profession or trade. The "Honorables" of New York city, could they be collected and exhibited, would be found to include so many dishonorable people that suspicion would rest on almost any man who should urge its usage for himself. Esquire is another tag appended to the names of many who have not earned it. The Catholic church maintains in this country the monarchical titles of its temporal power. His Eminence and His Grace have an unpleasant sound in the democratic ear. But the acme of titular exploitation is reached in our benefit societies. To read the names of the reception committee at a dance of the Combined Brotherhood of Mutual Honeyfuglers, or of vice-presidents at a twenty-five cent concert given under the auspices of the Protective Beneficial Order of Latchkey Owners, would lead one to suppose that when one of these favored gentlemen landed at Fulton Ferry the twenty-sixth ward would tip up. Solomon in all his glory was never the owner of so many names. It is nothing unusual for a small shopkeeper who is called "Hullo, Schmitzenberger" in the day time, to bloom forth in the night with red and green ribbons and blue rosettes and gold badges on him, clutching a sceptre of power and wielding it over a group of abject initiates who are taught to address him as the Most Sublime and Right Worthy Ruler. How he can endure to continue in the grocery business after a night of such exaltation is not to be thought out. The little dry goods clerk who doesn't dare to ask his landlady for a second plate of hash or his employer for an afternoon off, lords it over sixteen or eighteen subjects on lodge night and is called Supreme Dictator. When one of these societies meets in the evening in a 20x15 temple on the fourth floor above a hardware shop The Past Grand Lord of the Door Knob announces that there are no spies or traitors in the house, the pass-word "Rats" is solemnly whispered by each in turn to The Most Noble Custodian of Secret Significances, the names are called by The Grand Master of the Rolls, The Most Excellent First Solicitor of Dues reports to The Most Exalted and Puissant Autocrat that there is a deficit of $1.73 and that the landlord wants his rent; the lodge authorizes The Most Excellent First Solicitor of Dues to make up the deficit; the Very Noble and Superior Third Assistant Autocrat is called on for some remarks on the rise and growth and beauties of the order; then, if there are no candidates to have fun with, the lodge goes down the street and the Worthies and Excellencies and Supremacies and Exaltednesses and Puissances play poker and drink beer with the common herd with an affecting graciousness. Commonly, the people who consent to wear these names are full grown and possess an average share of wit, yet their parade of titles is exactly akin to the wearing of paper epaulets and wooden swords by children. It is a piece of poor, silly vanity, a delight in empty sound, a tolerance of disparities that is ridiculous. If these names were the invention of little boys or of people of maimed intellects they would be appropriately parented, but they are reputed to come from reasoning men, and custom has sanctioned their perpetuity. Many of these societies are maintained for a worthy purpose and do a great deal of good, but for the chairman, secretary, treasurer, and doorkeeper to give themselves titles bigger than those of Oriental despots is the height of the absurd. Verbal decorations of that sort are so cheap that right thinking men are ashamed to wear them.—Brooklyn Eagle.

HOW THEY WALK IN THE LIGHT.

I was once at a meeting in the basement of a hall in the third story of which was a lodge-room of the Odd-fellows. At intervals during the evening a loud and startling noise proceeded from said room, which caused the building to quiver to the foundation. It sounded as if heavy wheels or rollers were propelled over the floor, intermingled with the stamping of hundreds of feet. Upon inquiry it was said they were initiating members.

The conviction at once forced itself upon the mind that these noises were not made by the children of God, "walking in the light," but were a part of the "unfruitful works of darkness" in which the enemy of souls delights. Another evidence of the unholy nature of the conclaves of these secret orders is that they are held at night, in apartments high up in the buildings, where their performances cannot be seen, nor their words understood by those below. "They will not come to the light because their deeds are evil."

It may do for an apostatized Christianity, which has abandoned the principles taught by the Son of God, to patronize and enter into these secret organizations, but how can his true followers do it?

When the writer was a young man one of the secret orders was under the ban of an indignant, demonstrative, public opinion for having indicted the bloody penalty for the violation of one of its obligations upon a man by the name of Morgan. Then, as probably there are now, many who professed to be preachers of the Gospel were members of those unchristian organizations. Morgan's "revelations," and other corroborative evidence brought to light that they taken upon themselves vows, the violation of which was punishable with a remorseless double death penalty; at the same time that they professed to promulgate the principles taught by him who said, "Swear not at all; but let your communications be, yea, yea, nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil."

Is it possible that Brethren, professing, as they do, to follow Jesus in all his cross-bearing precepts, will take upon themselves the heathenish obligations, and swear the heaven-imprecating oaths by which members are initiated into the secret orders! Would it not be a sad and fatal violation of their solemn baptismal vows in which they promise to "Renounce the sinful maxims and customs of the world, and to live true and faithful to the Lord, by his help, until death?"

The influence of secretism, once in the church, will be hard to eradicate. Brethren, beware of the baneful influence of secretism.—Primitive Christian.

LETTERS FROM BAVARIA.

The earthquake scare in Munich.—Jewish acquaintances.—Models and morals.—The old city of Bamberg.—The old castle in the city of Albrecht Durer.—The Iron Woman and her companions.—Old masters in art and new ones in floriculture.

The talk of war here has apparently passed over for the present. It is not long since there was a great deal of excitement about it. Now the talk is all about earthquakes. Of course you have heard what a terrible one there has been in the south of France. It was predicted by some scientific man, and the same prophet foretells another which is to be worse than the first. I believe, though, it is not to be felt here. There were a great many Americans and English here who were intending to go to Nice to spend the spring. Some had already started and did not dare to stay, and the rest are afraid to go on account of the predictions. Among them are the two Boston girls who were in our studio.

I have only met two German girls so far that I like very well, and neither one of them is a Bavarian. One is Fraulein B—— from North Prussia, and the other, a Miss E——, from North Germany, too. Neither of them are at all like the Munich women. Miss E—— is a Jewess. She cannot speak a word of English and so I get a good practice in German from being with her. I have happened to come among many Jews here, and met two on the steamer. There are only we three left in the studio now, and two are Jewesses. Miss E—— has none of the Jewish characteristics. This people have respectable occupations here, and are not all pawn-brokers and tailors as they are at home. I think if I go to Switzerland this summer it will be with this same young lady. It is entirely out of the question that I should go alone, for it is not considered respectable or even safe. If I go with any Americans whom I may meet they will stop at the most expensive hotels. Besides I could not stop to sketch but would have to go just when they chose.

Since the last time I wrote I have been away from Munich for some time in Bamberg, and afterwards in Nuremberg a few days. Bamberg is nearly north of here, and it takes a little more than five hours to go there by rail. "Nürnberg" is between Bamberg and Munich and about four hours from here. I left Miss E—— Monday early, and stopped two days in Nuremberg where I saw many things about which I have read. Bamberg is a very interesting old city, too, but it is not as large. I saw there things that are not to be seen now in the larger country. Through the middle of the town runs a deep river, and on both sides are very old, quaint houses. I made one little sketch in paint and several in pencil. There is an old castle in Bamberg built in 1400, and armor that was worn by the knights several centuries ago.

The women sit in boats and wash in the river; but the water does not look to me so clean that I would like any washing done there. There is a ferry across the river in one place where a woman does the rowing and gets three-fourths of a cent for a passenger. Except in the best houses the water is all brought from pumps in the squares. The women carry it, in pails two feet or more high, on their backs. The pumps are curious things, and look as though they might have come out of the Ark. Every one in the country says "good-morning" or "good-day" to strangers and all. In Bamberg and the cities around they speak very queer German, not much as it is written in the books, but it is better than the Munich dialect.

In Nuremberg I was in the old castle or "Burg," where all the terrible old instruments and machines are kept with which they used to torture captives and criminals. The castle was built in A. D. 1050, or at least the older part of it was. I saw the "stocks" and the "wheel," the cradle full of iron spikes in which they rocked people to death, and the machine on which they stretched men until all their joints were dislocated, and every other horrible instrument a very demon could invent. The "Eisenjungfrau" (the Iron woman) stands just where it has for centuries. It stands near the top and underneath is an opening with a trap door, said to be a hundred feet deep, through which the bodies fell into a dungeon after being slowly killed by the iron spikes inside the iron woman. I looked down it, but it is perfectly dark and smells horribly. Near by the "Eisenjungfrau" are the stocks in which the condemned criminal sat the night before being put into the woman's arms, and the altar at which he was obliged to say his last prayer, with the same chair before it. They are all as they were when they were used, only that the wooden parts are very much decayed. I wanted to make a sketch of the "Eisenjungfrau," and it was so dark that the old lady who has charge of the tower had to hang a candle around her neck for me to see by. I will copy the sketch and send it home some day. I found some pieces of the old wall of the tower which I am going to bring home; and I have some leaves of the ivy from the "Burg," and two or three from the grave of Albrecht Durer.

I saw the museum, and the house in which Albrecht Durer lived, the old churches, the market, and the famous fountains. In the museum were many pictures by the old German painters, but I did not admire them much. There were a great many curious old clocks, coins, stoves, jewelry and pottery, tapestry, and some beautiful sculpture and fresco painting. Some maps were there made in 1489, before Columbus discovered America, and some made soon after, in 1501. They are very funny affairs. The ocean is full of islands, like raisins in a pudding; America is about as large as England on the same map.

I wished to have stayed two or three weeks in Nuremberg to make sketches there. It is so picturesque and wholly different from what we have any where at home, or in Munich. Munich is a beautiful city, but mostly new and not so interesting, though there are some little villages near into which we can go, that are said to be something like parts of Nuremberg. I have been into "Pinakothek" where one of the collections of paintings by the old masters is kept. One great room is full of only Rubens, and another of Vandyke. Then there are eight by Murillo, some by Raphael, and any number by artists of less fame. The very old German paintings are enough to give a person the nightmare, and the colors would bind an owl. I am going to have permission to copy several little heads from a picture by Rubens and one by Vandyke. I don't know what else. There are so many good ones it is hard to choose between them.

There is one thing I see in the Munich gardens that would amuse you if you could see it. They have large beds of flowers bordered with English ivy, and the central plant—the choice foliage plant as they think—is pieplant! I see it everywhere among the flowers. Our blue myrtle and yellow myrtle grow wild everywhere about Bamberg, and lilies of the valley are wild here. Those little pink and white mountain daisies are everywhere in the grass along with dandelions. They call them "goose-flowers."

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

ANOTHER BOSTON CLERGYMAN FOR CHICAGO.

The pastor of the Warren Avenue Baptist church has received a call from a Chicago society, which, it is reported, he has accepted. Boston will feel the loss of this talented young preacher. If Chicago is as wicked as reported, sparks will certainly fly when this sledge-hammer preacher places his sinners on the anvil. His ringing blows will revivify far beyond the city's precincts. The solid blows which he has struck here have been heard half-way across our continent at least, as the Chicago call indicates.

Dr. Gifford is not only fearless but sincere, and his sincerity is simply the expression of the Spirit with which he is filled. The church that may be fortunate enough in securing him will seldom have empty pews. He is one of the most popular clergymen in this city. His temperance sentiments are of the most radical order. In fact, his temperance vocabulary is a perfect avalanche which no license obstacle can withstand.

In appearance Dr. Gifford is decidedly unpretending. There is nothing of the clerical in dress or figure. Few, indeed, would surmise his vocation outside his pulpit, which is as unostentatious as his person. A simple, well-constructed platform on which there is no desk of any kind. Taking his position at the very edge of the platform, he remains right on that spot, as though riveted there, until the end of his discourse, which is always clear cut and uncompromising.

During the troubles of his brother minister, Rev. W. W. Downs, he has been almost the only Baptist minister in this city willing to give the afflicted man a fair chance. A few days ago he came boldly out and proclaimed his belief in the innocence of the exiled pastor of Bowdoin Square. The manliness of the act, however, has been highly commended. Believing a thing, Mr. Gifford is fearless to say it, and his good judgment is unquestioned. Chicago will, indeed, be fortunate in securing this able man. In some respects it will find in him a second Kittredge, barring the secret society balderdash.

Chicago seems to be decidedly partial to Boston ministers. It took our talented Lorimer, and within a short time the Beecher-like Withrow, and is now about to take one who is their peer in sound sense and eloquence as well as spirituality. To express a candid opinion, Dr. Gifford is far more developed in Christ than either. This is a frank statement, but truth is always frank. The former gentlemen are good, but as the little fellows say, "the other is gooder." To boil down to hard fact, so far as I can notice, Lorimer and Withrow are little missed; on the contrary, Gifford will be missed until called back. During the Moody revival here in 1876, Dr. George F. Pentecost was pastor of the Warren Avenue church. He was succeeded by Mr. Gifford. D. P. MATHEWS.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., June 8, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The lecture of Rev. Geo. P. Hays, D. D., in answer to Dr. Reich, is printed in pamphlet form. Every one interested in Christian evidences should have a copy of it. The title is "The Honest Book; or, The New Testament not a Fraud but Genuine History." Dr. Reich maintained that there is no historical evidence that the Gospels were written before 175 A. D. Dr. Hays replied, "You must give us the evidence that they were not, for Greenleaf says, 'Every document, apparently ancient, coming from the proper repository or custody, and bearing on its face no evident marks of forgery, the law presumes to be genuine, and devolves on the opposing party the burden of proving it to be otherwise.'" The objector said, "There are no original MSS.; we have only copies." Dr. Hays replied, "The same is true of Homer and the other ancient writers. 'Of Homer the earliest manuscript is the second century B. C.; but Homer flourished about the ninth century B. C., and this manuscript is separated from his day by seven centuries. The New Testament manuscripts reach the date of Matthew, Mark and Luke within these, or surpass Homer by four hundred years.'" "Prof. Tuffell gives the date of the earliest manuscript of Horace as the eighth century; the earliest manuscript of Cæsar, Lucretius and Seneca as the ninth century; Pliny, the younger, of the tenth; and Tacitus of the eleventh."

"Now what is the condition of the New Testament manuscripts? Scrivener gives a catalogue of 158 uncials or manuscripts written in capitals, and earlier than the tenth century; and 1605 Cursive, or running hand manuscripts, dating from the tenth to the fifteenth century, or 1763 altogether, which have been carefully examined. The Sinaitic MS. is about 350 A. D., and is claimed to be one of fifty MSS. prepared by Eusebius at the order of Constantine the Great for the churches of his day. This would make it 1400 years old. The Vatican MS. is of about the same date, and has been in the Vatican since 1475 A. D. It is also thus about 1400 years old, and its place in the Vatican library is 400 years old. The Alexandrian MS. is about A. D. 450, and has been in the British collection since 1628. Here, then, are the three oldest, probably, of these 1700 MSS." "King James's version of the New Testament was made from quite inferior MSS. The Revised Version is the result of careful comparison of these 1700 MSS. by the ablest scholars of Britain and America. The insignificant importance of the differences are proofs incontestable and absolute of the faithfulness of these transcribers."

The quotations of the fathers is adduced. Irenæus, Clement, Tertullian and Origen have 8723 quotations from the New Testament. Lord Hailes reproduced all but eleven verses of the New Testament from these quotations. But Irenæus flourished about the middle of the second century, Tertullian at the end, and Origen a little later. These books must have been written before their day. Josephus, Barnabas and Clement are cited as witnesses. Then come the Versions. The Peshito Syriac was certainly made as early as A. D. 150. The old Latin, known as the Itala, was in use in North Africa at an equally early date. The Gothic version of Ulfilas was made as early as the fourth century. The original must have been before these.

The last proof is prophecy. The Saviour predicted the fall of Jerusalem. It did fall in A. D. 70. To-day Jerusalem is dismantled, ruined, unhappy, under the control of the Turk and trampled under the heel of the Gentile. In Rev. 2d and 3d chapters are prophecies respecting seven cities in Asia Minor. Two were to continue and prosper, and Smyrna and Philadelphia are to-day prosperous. Three "were neither to be specially flourishing nor specially destroyed," and these are Thyatira, Pergamos and Sardis, neither little or great. Two were to be obliterated, and Laodicea and Ephesus are to-day in ruins. The sum of the whole is this: "The Roman Catholic Church, with its pope, bishops, clergy and scholars; the Greek Church, with its patriarchs, bishops, clergy and scholars, and the whole circle of Protestant Christendom, in Europe, America and elsewhere, stand together in their conviction that we have in these books and MSS. the genuine documents of these four men—Matthew, Mark, Luke and John."

Last Sabbath I preached, morning and afternoon, in the Plum Street Reformed Presbyterian church. This congregation was organized when the present century was in its teens. These brethren are of the Scotch Covenant stock and sing the Psalms without instruments. They have eighty members, and have been vacant since the death of their pastor, Rev. A. G. Wylie, in December, 1884. Such a congregation is useful in our city to remind the people of the original standard. This city put the Bible out of her public schools and now we are reaping the harvest of murders, blasphemy, licentiousness and drunkenness. In the old mythologies a man who sowed dragon's teeth had a harvest of armed men to spring up. The Scriptures assure us: "If we sow to the wind, we shall reap the whirlwind." John B. Finch said in a Prohibition convention in New York city yesterday: "Licensed prostitution, licensed gambling, licensed beer-selling and no Sunday are the foundation of the despotic governments of Europe. If we sow as they did we shall reap the same crop. American morals are the foundation of American liberty." The question is asked, why cannot such retired politicians as ex-Speaker Keifer, ex-Senator Conkling and ex-Secretary Blaine regain their positions? The taller the tree the more injury it sustains in falling. They that stand high have many blasts to shake them, and if they fall they dash themselves to pieces. J. M. FOSTER.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Washington is left alone among the beauty of its highly cultivated parks. The National Drill is now a thing of the past, and a very bad dream, it is feared, financially; a dream that will assume a painful reality when the promoters of the affair have to make good the reported deficit of $30,000. But there is no authentic statement of the expenses yet presented; indeed, it is not yet possible to have had in all the items of expense and a better showing may be hoped for. The committee are out of pocket, perhaps, the Toledo Cadets have had their just and bitter disappointment assuaged by their brilliant reception at home, and the two home companies, the Washington Light Infantry and the National Rifles, are made forever bitter foes, and so endeth the drill, happily in spite of many things not happy in themselves.

The annual session of the Association of Mechanical Engineers has just been held here. This organization numbers over seven hundred members. All of them are not present at this session, however, but representatives from all parts of the Union are. On Wednesday evening they were given a reception at the beautiful residence of ex-Commissioner Dent.

The count of the cash in the Treasury prior to the transfer of the office of Treasurer from Mr. Jordan to Mr. James W. Hyatt, of Norwalk, Conn., has begun and will continue indefinitely. The National Bank notes, the Legal Tenders and Silver Certificates were counted in two days, but when it comes to silver dollars piled stack upon stack in the vaults it is another matter. If the men who succeeded in forcing the making of a law to purchase two million of silver bullion a month (2,500,000 standard silver dollars) could witness this count they might probably realize the enormity of their offense. Each thousand dollars weigh sixty pounds, and is tied in a separate bag. The bags are passed one by one down a line of from eight to twenty men according to the distance to be traversed from one vault to another; each bag is weighed in the presence of a committee, and piled up again in vaults that have to be braced up by strong beams on the outside to prevent the silver from bursting the walls. Every available space in the Treasury is now occupied by these bags of metal and some idea of the magnitude of the subject may be reached and brought nearer a practicable conception when it is understood that this store is added to each month by fifteen thousand pounds of silver in five thousand bags. Where will it end? When will it stop? Washington will become a second Pompeii, and be buried, not in ashes but in silver.

The fleeting character of Washington life was most sadly exemplified the other day when it was desired to give Sir Edward Thornton, the former minister from Great Britain to the United States, a dinner. Sir Edward was requested to make out a list of those of his former friends here he would like to meet again. He did so, and of all that list, numbering men once active and prominent in political and social life, but one could be found in town. The others, where? Dead or forgotten in the oblivion of some distant small town.

THE TABERNACLE.

THE GRANDEST OF SUMMER MEETINGS AND WHAT IS NEEDED TO COMPLETE THE WORK.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Our tent meeting at Oregon, Ill., was one of the best we have yet held. We had seats in the tent for six hundred, and when no more could get in we took down the side wall of the tent, and not less than two hundred gathered around outside and gave close attention to the lecture on Masonry. All of the preachers, three in number, were present, and came to me after it was over and expressed their approval of the work. Bro. Parmaloe, the pastor of the M. E. church, who ably conducted a union temperance meeting in our tent on Sabbath evening, after listening to the lecture on Masonry, said, "I have learned more to-night about what Masonry is than I ever knew before. I have Finney on Masonry," but never took interest enough in it to read it. You have made the matter clear to every one here."

I seldom have an audience of less than six hundred to listen to my lectures on Masonry, and hope the friends of the Illinois Christian Association will contribute funds and put an efficient man into the field to distribute tracts, sell books, and extend the circulation of the Cynosure. I shall pitch the tent for six nights at Stillman Valley, Ill., commencing Thursday evening, June 16; at Forrester, June 23; Lena, June 30; Nora, July 7; Warren, July 14.

Our work is self-sustaining and I do not ask for contributions, but I believe the friends of the cause should immediately put a man into the field to reap where the seed has been sown.

In reply to the many calls I have for lectures let me say that I have about five thousand pounds of baggage, and we make short moves, as our expenses are ten dollars a day, and cannot well move out of our regular course until after the tent season.

I. R. B. ARNOLD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

COLORED MASONS PLAY A RULE-OR-RUIN GAME.

MEMPHIS, June 6th, 1887.

DEAR OLD CYNOSURE:—It has been some time since I have sent anything to your much read columns, not that I love them any the less, but continued illness in my family has engrossed my time so that I have been compelled to cease writing to many of my individual friends. I believe that many of your readers are interested in me and my work in this part of the country. I enclose to you a slip showing the continued work of the lodgeites in this vicinity. The happenings as stated below occurred at Marion, Ark., only eighteen miles away. Elder Robinson resides in Memphis and goes to his church from here every Friday, and has been doing so for the last twelve years:

WAR IN THE CAMP—THE PLEASANT GROVE BAPTIST CHURCH IN TROUBLE—A SCENE NEVER TO BE FORGOTTEN.

"During the past week the little town of Marion has been the scene of the wildest and very interesting confusion. For several months past there has been impending trouble in the Pleasant Grove Baptist church at this place. On last Sunday it came very near to a point where it might have been serious. It seems that some of the members of the church think and believe that their religious rights have been imposed upon by Elder Robinson, who is the pastor of said church."

Elder Robinson has been preaching against Masonry for the last two years with telling effect.

"The aggrieved members, among whom are Ed. Shivers, F. T. Moore, G. W. Dever, E. T. Jackson, J. S. Smith, Henry Bibb and others, in some way last week secured the keys and took charge of the church; and on Wednesday, the 25th ult., met and elected a set of church officers and passed resolutions giving Elder Robinson notice that his services as pastor of the Pleasant Grove church were no longer desired."

Those aggrieved gentlemen are all Masons. Elder Robinson is an old man quite sixty years of age, and a pioneer in the Baptist cause in that country. He is a Master Mason and an Odd-fellow; he espoused my cause during the days of battle, and now these poor, deluded men of an ill-informed race made this infernal proceeding.

"His friends began at once to try to secure the possession of the church again. They took off the old locks and put on new ones, and when the opposite party made this discovery they at once took off the new ones and returned the old ones to their proper place. At this juncture it seemed that neither party could well keep possession without the probability of trouble; and on Saturday evening Ed. Shivers and others secured a temporary injunction before Judge Lewis [a Mason], restraining Elder Robinson or any of his officers from holding preaching or meetings of any kind in said church. One thing that helped to excite the minds of his friends was the fact that on Friday Elder Robinson was arrested and brought before Esquire Moore upon an affidavit made by Wm. Royster [a Mason], charging him with disturbing religious worship at one of their church meetings some time last December."

Here we see the character of Masonry; this man kept his charge laid up for nearly six months, and then backed by his demoniacal crowd, trumps up his charge.

"On last Sunday, May 29, the party in possession of the church decided to have the regular routine of services and invited Rev. James Tipton of Jericho to preach during the day, and he made the awful mistake to accept—for many of the good thinking and more judicious people thought it entirely wrong to attempt to have religious services under such circumstances, and it was discovered that those of such opinion were right before the day's services were over. Rev. Tipton preached before noon and everything passed off smoothly and in good order. Sunday-school was had as usual, and no apparent change was noticed except that Elder Robinson was not in charge. Such a thing has never been for very near a score of years, except when he was away on business or sickness. But at the close of the evening services is where the real trouble came in, as quite a number of the Robinson faction decided not to leave the church. Wash. Dever and Ed. Shivers made an effort to close the church by first lowering the windows and fastening the blinds, and some of the sisters made it a point to follow in hot pursuit and open them again, and one sister went so far as to strike at Bro. Dever with a six-foot pole, and during this proceeding others were shouting, singing, praying, moaning, groaning, howling, crying, and said they had camped until the war was over. We venture to say that at any time or in any place in this wide world no one has ever witnessed a scene in a church like that in Pleasant Grove last Sunday!

"On Monday morning warrants of arrest were issued for Mrs. Martha West, Mrs. Wm. Neelus and Mrs. Mary Edwards, they having been the most conspicuous in the trouble Sunday evening. They were each fined $2 and cost by Justice Moore, together with good logical advice. John Harrison was fined $20 and cost for trying to run a separate and distinct service while Elder Tipton was in charge Sunday eve. Wash. Dever was also fined $2 and cost for the interest he took in the affair during such wild confusion Sunday afternoon. The case of Elder Robinson and the injunction will be heard to-day [Saturday, June 4, '87].

"The party that took charge of the church Sunday kept possession night and day until Tuesday night when papers were secured before Justice Moore for the purpose of dispersing the crowd, and put in the hands of Mr. York Byers [a Mason], constable, but the people refused to obey the process and another noisy and ridiculous excitement presented itself. Sheriff Werner was then sent for and they then decided to leave, he promising to keep the church closed until the injunction was decided."

Marion is a little town in Crittendon county, Ark., about eighteen miles from Memphis; a ferryboat goes up to the place every two or three hours. The officers of the place are nearly all colored, and all Masons. Elder Robinson is an exemplary man, and an ornament to the community. He has been with the church for nearly twenty-five years, and is a father in the place, highly respected by all until his recent renunciation of the lodge, and his manly course in denouncing them from his pulpit.

I shall try and see him to-morrow and will write you more next week. I am still in the midst of the fray, situated in the midst of the lodge demons yet daring to be true to my convictions. I am contemplating an open exposure soon in our church, and am arranging to organize a clandestine lodge of young people.

The prohibition question is being aggressively agitated and we are growing sanguine of success daily. The Odd-fellows go out gunning (parading) on Friday showing their nice regalia to captivate more of the "silly ninnies." Pray for us.

Yours as ever,

R. N. COUNTEE.

PERSECUTING A SECEDER.

LAKESIDE, Kan., June 2, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There has lately been a Masonic cyclone in this county, and one of Dr. Talma's "confessed perjurers" lies pining in Fort Scott jail. It transpires that in the southern part of this county last winter a Mr. Wm. Trogden, a Mason and a local preacher, became convinced that the further support of Masonry was inimical to the cause of truth and humanity, and resolved that it was his duty to expose it. Accordingly he gave out an appointment that he would show the people of his congregation that Masonry had been truly exposed by Ronayne and others, and to continue to sell Masonic secrets was a fraud.

On the appointed day the lecturer for some cause failed to deliver his address but afterward filled his appointment. Among his hearers was a neighbor and a fellow Mason, a Mr. Albright, whom the lecturer characterized as a "cut-throat" and was sarcastically treated as one of the make-ups of the institution of Hiramites. My informant stated that Mr. Albright was accused by his neighbors of some crookedness, which was directly or indirectly used by the speaker to the detriment of Albright. This was the sum and substance of Trogden's offense, as far as I was able to learn, and was the primal cause for a vexatious lawsuit, which finally culminated in fining Trogden one dollar and costs, and he to stand committed till paid.

I am informed that Mr. T. is seventy-four years old, and refuses to pay his fine because he sincerely believes that it is a case of persecution. Trogden insists that his remarks were Masonically applied to Albright, and that his incarceration in prison is a piece of persecution. Trogden might have assaulted Albright's religion and nothing would have come of it, but his Masonry must not be invaded. This seems to be plain.

This is another instance of the tyranny of the lodge. A recanting and non-affiliating Mason is sincerely to be pitied, as the world and Mr. Talmage believe such to be "self-confessed perjurers." Has it come to this that a Mason can not honorably repent? Mr. Trogden is accused even by his friends of being too severe toward Albright. At the same time his friends fail to see the justice of keeping him in prison, as Trogden was sincere in his denunciations of Masonry, without, perhaps, showing mercy or charity. Whether this case will result in giving impulse to reform or not is one of peculiar hardship to the sufferer, Mr. Trogden, who has the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

FAITH CURE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—There is much excitement on this subject, and much that is said is so absurd as to indicate that the subject is new to most people.

The idea of being healed through the agency of faith not being new to the writer, she thought a few items of her own experience might be profitable to others.

Some years ago I was sick, and at one time nigh unto death; and for a long time I was confined to the couch or bed, and during most of that time I not only struggled but fought against sickness, and the bitter agony accompanying the prospect of being "an invalid for life" cannot be described. The idea that God was sovereign, and could and would do as he pleased, and that I was completely in his power, was at one time so terrible as to well nigh dethrone reason, and the spirit with which I fought God's will was truly Satanic, as Satan is depicted by Milton. But to God's praise I was not left to myself; and it would have been the most lamentable thing that could have been if God had let me have my own way.

After continuing this struggle for years, I, through the tender mercy of the Most High, was brought to be willing to be sick, if such was God's will. Then, to God's praise, I began to recover, and that without remedies. In due time I so far regained my health as to be comfortable and able to work and enjoy life. Since that time I have had my ups and downs, and I never recover while I indulge in a rebellious spirit.

My view is that the invalid Christian must be brought to that higher plane of Christian experience where the true and all pervading desire of his heart is that God's will may be done in all that concerns him, and his love to God be so perfect that he can glory in tribulation if sent by the great Father.

We cannot surround ourselves with sparks of our kindling and succeed, for this work on the heart must be the work of the divine Spirit, and the Spirit is given in answer to prayer, and then when we do attain this higher ground, and only then, are we prepared to receive the blessing of being healed by faith. Let us pray that each afflicted child of God may be able to thus rise, yea, and all others.

In a recent suit between saloon men in Rockford, the testimony of four bar-tenders agreed that the income seldom ran below $50 to $60 a day, and that on circus days and the like it ran up to $100. The Register figures it out that therefore, at the lowest calculation, the 26 saloons of Rockford take in $1,300 daily, or $405,600 a year. These figures agree with those given the Patrol by an ex-bar-tender of Elgin. Apply them to the cities of Elgin and Aurora, and see if you can guess why we have hard times, why there are four men in jail from Aurora alone, accused of murder—why our pauper bills are so large.—Geneva, Ill., Patrol.

TEMPERANCE.

ANNUAL CONVENTION OF THE MICHIGAN W. C. T. U.

PORT HURON, Mich.

The Michigan W. C. T. U. Convention meeting here is larger than of last year, at Manistee! Its membership does not appear discouraged in any degree, over the amendment's defeat. Reports from every quarter of the State indicate large hope, unwavering courage, and steady purpose. These women are loyal to the truth; they stand loyally for prohibition; they declare against everything short of this. It is inspiring to listen to their words of great faith and good cheer.

Perhaps no State W. C. T. U. has been more beset by the friends of expediency, than has this, since the Amendment campaign ended. Michigan politicians, and some good men who would not like to be called such, have been active the past few weeks in pushing devices to save party embarrassment and to hold prohibition in check. These devices look to local option or tax, and are to depend upon present party legislation or future non-partisan achievement—mainly the latter. A Citizen's Union has just been organized for the State, and plans are laid for its local organization in every town.

The sessions are held in a Congregational church, the pastor of which does not approve woman's public service along any line, and is, therefore, absent.

I understand that Rev. Dr. Fairfield gives up his lucrative pastorate in Manistee to take the field for the new non-partisan crusade—which means, of course, that back of it is money, and a degree of staying intention. Is it but another Massachusetts experiment? or a renewal of the Republican National purpose which in Massachusetts took form as the National Non-partisan League? We may feel some curiosity, but I think no concern, as to the outcome. For a little time, perhaps, party growth may be checked by it; and it may thus serve the end of its promoters for 1888. But there will be a lull in all non-partisan movements after next year. They would not be so active now, but for this very partisan movement in which some of us are engaged.

That there are thousands of men as sincere in their non-partisanship as we are in our partisanship I have no doubt. There are many here in Michigan. A conference of such will assemble at Eaton Rapids July 4th, and continue till and including the 6th. After some things reported of that Detroit conference, it is refreshing to read the call put forth for this braver gathering. It says:

"To this conference we invite the one hundred and eighty-five thousand who stood up and were counted for prohibition on that stormy April day, the noble women who prayed, and their heroic sisters who worked at the polls in behalf of our sacred cause, and the brave men in Detroit and elsewhere who, in the exercise of their God-given rights as citizens, were boycotted, and bull-dozed, spit upon and hustled; we ask you to come together under the oaks at Eaton Rapids, and without the fear of party bosses before your eyes, say what shall be done to this brutal and nefarious traffic whose existence is a menace to home, and church and state. Come and voice the indignation of outraged manhood and womanhood so loudly that the politicians will understand that their sop of high license and local option will not lull the aroused conscience of Michigan voters into slumber again, or lead them to acquiesce in the frauds by which they were cheated out of a hard-earned victory. This conference will be non-partisan in the sense that all parties will be represented on its platform and the largest liberty afforded for the expression of honest convictions."

The "sop of local option" was considered in special conference by the women at eight o'clock this morning. Bright things were uttered by those who took part. All the talk ran one way—against. Perhaps Mrs. Boise made the strongest points. The cities, she said, complain that they can not enforce prohibition. They mean that they will not. They number but about one-fifth of our population, yet they furnish half our criminals. The cost of these devolves upon the State at large. The cities are increasing in population two and a-half times faster than the country. Criminals increase in like proportion. How long, at this rate, before the cities would vote down local option even for the country itself?

One of us, being asked his thought about local option, had to admit that he left his old party, fifteen years ago, in large part because it would not adopt local option as promised, but said that now he should feel inclined to leave any party that would take it up. Why? Because

1. Local option theory implies possible license practice, and its endorsement as an alternative which people have a right to adopt.

2. If I admit the right of people anywhere to adopt license, I must admit that everywhere license may be right, or that somewhere people may rightly approve a wrong.

3. If I admit the right of license anywhere, I give up the strongest argument against it, and my reasons for opposing it become those of expediency alone.

4. The entire educational drift of local option is towards expediency, and not towards fixedness of governmental policy founded on wise principles of government.

Mrs. Clara Hoffman, of Missouri, gave a most admirable address last night on "Our Inheritances." It had real grip in it, and the wisest philosophy. It made profound impression. I rejoice that Mrs. Hoffman is coming East this summer. The Bureau will deserve great credit for bringing her before Eastern audiences.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE

TO THE PHILADELPHIA ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE A. M. E. ZION CHURCH, MAY, 1887.

We view with alarm the sad havoc wrought by the evil of intemperance. The ruin and disaster following in its wake can be better understood and appreciated when we realize that more money is spent for strong drink in this great and glorious country of ours, than the aggregate amount paid for churches, mission work, and the support of all our public schools during the same time. From the 600,000 drunkards who infest society, frequent the saloons, and add misery and pauperism to almost as many families, sixty thousand die as the immediate result of the habit, leaving a condition of destitution and ruin to their family survivors, to say nothing of the danger to society which is alike disastrous and appalling.

Ministers and members of the church of God are not entirely free from the influence of the drink habit, as some of them, too, yield sometimes, as victims of the ruinous habit.

But beyond the horizon the radiant heavens of the coming day of total abstinence for the individual, and local option for communities and prohibition for the State, are beginning to shine out so as to emblazon the entire country and stir up a degree of enthusiasm for the temperance cause hardly dreamed of by its advocates a few years ago.

In view of the foregoing considerations, we recommend that the conference be more earnest in their advocacy of the temperance reform, in refusing altogether to yield to the deceitful appetite, and farther, to preach the doctrine of total abstinence by both precept and example.

Resolved, further, that while we question the ultimate triumph of the temperance cause through third party action, we yet believe that all efforts looking to the closing of the saloons through local option or constitutional enactment in a non-partisan way receive our hearty support and co-operation.

Signed,

J. C. DANCY.
J. H. HEATON.
J. W. MANLY.

R. T. Booth, a well-known temperance evangelist, has just concluded a successful mission at Denver. While abroad he secured a million signatures—among them many prominent Englishmen—to the abstinence pledge.

The drink bill of Great Britain the past year stands at $614,528,925 as against $616,349,530 for 1885, being a decrease of $1,820,605 in one year. The enormous sum of twenty-two billion five hundred million dollars has been spent in intoxicating liquors during Victoria's reign. Had not this sum been devoted to the purchase of so much poverty, crime and death, it might have blotted out the national debt five times over, or covered the whole land with beautiful and happy homes.

The drunkard-maker always hates his old and most reliable customers, and is proud of cursing and kicking them out. How we should be surprised to hear a shoemaker slam the door against an old customer, and say: "You villainous old scamp, I have made boots and shoes for you and your family for twenty years and have been paid for them, and here you are after more shoes! Get out and don't let me see your face again." How funny it would look to see a tailor basting an old schoolmate into a gutter, because, after getting his clothes there for over fifteen years, he wants to buy an overcoat. Or a minister assailing an old stand-by because he has been twenty-five years a communicant and elder in the church, and therefore must be unfit company for anybody. Isn't it time for drunkards to be ashamed of the drunkard-makers?—Morning Star.

OBITUARY.

Again we are reminded of the uncertainty of life and the certainty of death in the departure of a friend and co-laborer. Mr. S. E. ORVIS was born in Lewis Co., N. Y., July 11th, 1834, and died May 24th, 1887. At the age of twenty he married Miss Eleanor Campbell at Waukesha, Wis., which place has since been his home. His wife and five of his six children survive him.

When the war broke out, feeling that his country needed his service, he enlisted in the 5th Wisconsin Volunteer regiment, where he served faithfully until compelled to retire by the loss of an arm in the celebrated battle of the Wilderness, May 15th, 1864. Because he maintained his Christian integrity he was often made the butt of ridicule during this long and terrible struggle by men who could have well patterned after his example. Observing during his service the effects of Masonry and liquor, he has ever since opposed them as being foes no less dangerous than the one against which he contended. Some may have considered him erratic, but no one who knew him will accuse him of disobedience to the Saviour's command, "Let your light shine."

He circulated the Cynosure, attended conventions and in many ways manifested a lively interest in the anti-secrecy cause. He was present at the recent "Congress of Churches." Though suffering greatly during his last sickness he died in great triumph, looking forward to the glorious reward reserved for every child of God.

W. B. S.

REV. G. N. A. F. T. DICKSON of London, Ontario, Canada. The number of ministers of the Methodist church of Canada who openly, boldly and unflinchingly oppose the great quackery of the times, secret societies, though steadily increasing is not large. But of those who do one of the most fearless and outspoken has just passed away in the person of the Rev. G. N. A. F. T. Dickson, who was buried in London, Ontario, on the 5th inst. He had for some time been in failing health, and was some time ago put on the superannuation list. Although a merciless foe to the humbug of secretism, he was universally respected and esteemed and was followed to the grave by a large concourse of people, six of his brother ministers of the locality acting as pall-bearers and the Official Board of the Centre Methodist church attended in a body. May the number of ministers who have the courage to oppose the great enemy of the church, as he has done, rapidly increase, for very many who see clearly the antagonism between church and secretism lack the courage to take a firm stand for the right for fear of opposing a few (and few indeed they are) of their members or supporters.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

HON. SOLOMON SOUTHWICK, New York:—Freemasonry must and will be banished from the earth, which has drunk so deeply of the blood of her martyrs.

HON. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, at a Yale alumni address, 1873, reported by the Hartford Courant: "He did good work to-day in speaking against the evil effects of secret societies."

HON. TIMOTHY FULLER:—"In a free country no secret societies can be required for the public good. Purposes which require combination and secrecy are just objects of suspicion."

VICTORY BIRDSEYE, Esq.:—Depend upon it, there is a screw loose somewhere! Organizations for purposes undeniably good, don't burrow under ground. They are willing to stand upright upon their merits before an intelligent community.

DISRAELI, British Premier:—"Secret societies are hurrying the civil governments of the world to the brink of a precipice over which law and order will ultimately fall and perish together."

GEORGE WASHINGTON:—Hon. John C. Spencer, in an address before court denied that George Washington was ever a Royal Arch Mason, and he said he had not attended a lodge for twenty years previous to his death, and that he virtually renounced the institution in his Farewell Address.

GOVERNOR SLADE, of Vermont, writes his conviction of Freemasonry, not merely of its uselessness, "but of its pernicious tendency—of its incompatibility with the genius and spirit of our free institutions, and of the duty of all Masons not excepted, to unite in exterminating it from the country."

HON. WM. M. EVARTS, Yale alumni dinner, 1869:—"Separate inclosures are found necessary, which they call, not separate pens, but 'secret societies.' Until Yale College outlives that folly, it will deprive its graduates of a good part of the education that you and I had the happiness to get there."

PATRICK HENRY, in Virginia debates.—"Give us at least a plausible apology why Congress should keep its proceedings secret.... They may carry on the most wicked and pernicious of schemes under the dark veil of secrecy. The liberties of the people never were and never will be secure when transactions of their rulers may be concealed from them."

JUDGE ENOS T. THROOP, in a sentence pronounced at Canandaigua, N. Y.:—"It is admitted in this case, and stands proved, that Morgan was, by a hypocritical pretense of friendship and charity, and that, too, in the imposing shape of pecuniary relief to a distressed and poverty-bound prisoner, beguiled to intrust himself to one of your number, who seized him as soon as a confederate arrived to his aid, almost at his prison door, and in the night time hurried him into a carriage."

—From N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, Feb. 2, 1827.

HON. JOHN C. SPENCER, Sec'y of State, of War, and of the Treasury:—"In one word, I consider Freemasonry in direct hostility to the Government in all cases where it cannot control it—as demoralizing in its very nature, making bad men and citizens of all who adhere to its obligations—creating injurious distinctions in society—giving privileges and advantages to one set of men over others equally meritorious—exercising a most potent influence upon our elections, by secret, and, I fear, corrupt means, and altogether more dangerous to our country and its government than any standing army, however numerous it possibly could be."

JUDGE PLINY MERRICK, Worcester, Mass.:—"It is true that a Royal Arch companion (to which degree I have been admitted and the highest office of which I have sustained) does swear that he will espouse the cause of a companion when engaged in any difficulty so far as to extricate him from the same whether right or wrong; and that he will keep his secrets inviolable when communicated to him as such, murder and treason not excepted. I know these most odious clauses are part of the obligation of that degree, for I believe that I received that obligation and know that I have so heard it and as high priest of a chapter have so myself administered it to others."

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1887.

The short book of Nehemiah handles the Labor, Lodge, and Sabbath questions under the immediate guidance of God. The religion of the only people on earth who worshiped Christ, their Messiah, had been run down and run out by lodge worshipers. A remnant went back to Palestine and started the Jewish state anew. Nehemiah, their leader, was met, resisted, and threatened by lodge-men, capitalists, slave-holders, and Sabbath-breakers. He triumphed by a marvelous series of revivals of religion, able leadership, courage and statesmanship. As these three questions are now on the anvil of public discussion, we advise every reader of the Cynosure to read carefully the book of Nehemiah. Allowing for the difference between an absolute monarchy and a republic or democracy, that short book contains more religious, financial, political and social wisdom and sense than Henry George's book and all the newspapers, clubs, and "orders" on the topics of the present day.

THE SARATOGA REUNION OF GRAND LODGES.

The split healed in Saratoga occurred eleven years ago. The Grand Lodge at that time provided for two lodges, a black and a white. Malins led the objectors to a dual lodge. Col. Hickman led the color-line lodge.

We have read carefully what is given in The Canada Citizen, New York Voice and Saratoga Engle, and find it difficult to learn what this reunion means in practice. Right propositions were adopted, of which the first two are:

1. "That, as a general rule, there shall be but one Grand Lodge in any State."

2. "That as an exception to the general rule a charter may be issued, or continued, to a Junior Grand Lodge, in order to provide for the successful prosecution of the work of the Order in a jurisdiction where it is necessary temporarily to overcome differences of race or language."

To plain, uninitiated people, this seems to mean: as long as white members object to colored members uniting in the lodges, they may be crowded off into lodges by themselves. This would seem to make an outside tyler necessary, with a board painted by which to exclude all below the standard complexion.

As an excuse for this practical denial of the vaunted "one brotherhood" of mankind, Mr. Malins said: "The attempt to bring the white and colored races in the South together in Good Templar work had not been successful." Voice, June 2, p. 2.) If our understanding is true, the mass of Good Templars at Saratoga were deceived, imposed upon by a Masonic "swash of words"—and their shouting and doxologies over the "one brotherhood" and union of all races was mere scenic display produced by cunning leaders "in secret session." And to-day the Hon. Fred. Douglass and his white lady cannot belong to the same Good Templars lodge "where it is necessary to overcome differences of race by sending Douglass to one and his wife to another.

This color-line, we are assured by a prominent Presbyterian (Dr. R. W. Patterson), is one cause which keeps Northern and Southern Presbyterians from reunion; and we rejoice that such men as McCosh are not willing to purchase reunion by giving up the manhood of the Christian negro to gain it.

But, color-line aside, we object to Good Templarism for the reasons which made Henry Wilson, one of our statesmen philanthropists, move to publish its ritual at the first meeting after his initiation. This he assured us he did, in person, at his house in Natick, Mass. We object to it, because Masonry furnished the patterns, and Masons made it up, and to pretend to condemn Masonry and not Templarism is to make a distinction without a moral difference. We further object to it for the reasons that make Gov. St. John and General Fisk stand aloof from it, and leave it in the hands of such Masons as J. N. Stearns and S. B. Chase. We object to it as the sainted apostles of temperance, Jewett and Gough, who were both initiated, and both quit it in disgust; and Jewett with Dr. Marsh gave their influence against it as a great hindrance to the temperance reform. But above all we object because it is a pin-feathered, false religion, pasting its motto in its lodge-rooms, "Faith, Hope and Charity;" dropping Christ from its Jewish creed at its door, and often appointing swearing boys as chaplains in its local lodges. If this glorious re-union proves a glorious sham, it is what we should expect from the life of its leaders. And though it now sweeps as did the Know Nothing cyclone, which died three years from its birth, it will die like it.

For every brotherhood not planted by God "shall be rooted up!" and this is one of them.

Meanwhile, let us rejoice that God "taketh the wise in their own craftiness." The Know Nothings sunk Dr. Bailey's paper, the National Era, and nearly bankrupted him, because he would not swear their secrets. But that party helped break up the old pro-slavery parties, and hastened the election of Lincoln, and the fall of fetters. So God will use the Templars, who say they have little or no secrets yet cleave like death to what secrets they have, to help forward the great and mighty Prohibition movement.

Let us Americans, then, hold a great mass convention next winter; an American Prohibition Convention; inviting all Prohibitionists who are for open work and fair play; and if the Prohibitionists will put forward a man who has not defiled his garments with the pitch of the lodge-Sodom, let us vote for him, as we voted for St. John in 1884. And by 1892, the swash twaddle of "Templarism," a name exhumed from the world's loathing and contempt, will be shaken from the cause of Prohibition, as the lion shakes dew drops from his mane; and the American Prohibition party will put its Lincoln in the chair of State.

THE KNOX SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

HON. S. V. WHITE AND DR. ROY.—WHAT THEY DIDN'T SAY AND THE SPEECH THE "CYNOSURE" EDITOR DIDN'T MAKE.

[Editorial Correspondence.]

Invited by Dr. Bateman's circular, I went last week to Knox College, Galesburg, Ill., where I spent fifteen years and graduated the first thirteen classes. I met a large crowd in a temporary tabernacle erected by the students, and requested by President Bateman opened the services by prayer, in which I thanked God for the past, present and future of the college.

Hon. S. V. White, who had received from the trustees the honorary L. L. D., gave an exceedingly able speech which is reported much at large by the Chicago dailies. Mr. White has promised the manuscript, which I hope may be given to our readers for the value of the speech itself, but more to acquaint all our readers with the man. He has been a statesman three or four months and went into Congress over the opposition of the Democrats, Prohibitionists and liquor men: the Democrats for party, the Prohibitionists for his Republicanism; and the liquor men for his known life-long total abstinence, and his fearless assertion of his principles. Mr. White is not a reformer. He chooses the party which he believes right and stands by it. The son of a North Carolinian, who was driven North for his mercy to slaves, he earned his first dollar by trapping minks; and as he has accumulated a fortune and now set his face toward politics it will not be strange if he should yet be trapping political minks in the swamps of the Potomac around Washington Monument and the White House. If, in the circumvolutions of fortune's whirl, the Republican party should become disintegrated like the old Whig party, the voters in 1892 will be glad to know of one more statesman who did not climb into Congress by the ladder of the lodge.

Dr. J. K. Roy made a grand speech, fitter to read than hear, which perhaps explains why the press noticed it slightly, or not at all. We should be glad to print the whole of it, long though it was. The information which he condensed into that speech on American schools and colleges is worth the price of a volume.

But both speeches, dealing as they did with colleges, were wanting in one practical important particular. Yale College students have put up $300,000 worth of buildings used only for initiations, hazings, oaths, ceremonies, rowdiness and general deviltry; against which Secretary Evarts protested in a Commencement speech. Knox College sent missionaries to Monmouth and swore in such societies in Monmouth College, against decency, honor and religion. Five such societies existed in Monmouth till their coverings were torn off and their orgies were stamped out by the college senate. Some of those societies swore or pledged young girls to conceal the nightly "proceedings" from their mothers at home. If Mr. White and Dr. Roy were ignorant of these facts, where knowledge is duty ignorance is crime. If they were not ignorant, like Evarts, they should have spoken. For these pests are neither local nor peculiar. Mortimer D. Leggett, in a rowdy initiation at Cornell, was pushed off a bluff at night; fell forty feet down; his neck broke; and when death was darkening his vision he thought the boys were replacing the hoodwink, and cried, "Don't, boys; take it off; do take it off!" His voice grew fainter till silenced by death. At Yale the old New Haven State House was used for such "Greek letter" initiations; in which, to terrify the initiate, they put him in a coffin and shammed to bury him alive beneath in a grave, through a hole cut for the purpose beneath the floor. We have many such interesting histories from a Yale graduate, since a professor in a western university, who had looked on these interesting episodes from a gallery from which Seniors were permitted to view the initiations of Freshmen without sharing them.

I have passed by and viewed six or seven buildings in Amherst built by students' money, drawn from parents or friends, for such interesting purposes. In Hitchcock's "Reminiscences of Amherst College" are letters from nine college presidents of leading colleges, condemning college secret societies as hostile to education, morals and religion; but, like our rebellion, they grew by stealth till faculties were awed and overborne by them. Rev. C. E. Dickenson, now of Marietta, Ohio, has detailed the diabolism of the Amherst fraternities by the hour, and facts might be given to fill many such articles as this, varying in form endlessly, but keeping steady to the universal lodge principle, of leading the initiate through scenic terrors, binding him to secrecy by oaths or pledges, generally interspersed with prayers. Dr. E. E. White of the State Agricultural University, Lafayette, Ind., was driven from his high usefulness and popularity in that institution by these pests and chintz bugs of colleges, backed by Freemasons in the legislature.

Now Mr. White painted to the life the St. Louis strike, but said not a word about the secret oath which compelled those workmen to strike. Both he and Dr. Roy set our slavery war before us in its ghastly proportions, but did not tell us that in the lodge rooms of the South was where the rebellion was hatched and nurtured. Henry George was duly impaled for his stupid theories of land confiscation; but Mr. Powderly's claim, published over his own name, of "Secrecy, Assistance, and Obedience,"—these were omitted. Dr. Roy feelingly depicted the ignorance of the South, but he did not tell us that secret orders were disintegrating the colored churches of the South, starving ministers (if good ones), mothers and children to pamper the myrmidons of the lodges. Now if these gentlemen in the admirable speeches which they gave, had, in a few short sentences, told the crowd that the founders of the college were New York Anti-masons, taught by Seward, Gerrit Smith, Bernard, and the rest, and that their ideas and principles were sound, Scriptural and American, and being true must prevail, the children of that great, intelligent crowd would have canonized their memories, and called down blessings on their heroes.

At the close of the speeches Dr. Bateman called on the writer for remarks, and I would gladly have spoken, nay, intended to speak at the banquet at night, but was providentially called away. That speech may be considered as postponed till next issue of the Cynosure. But just so true as we know that Christ held no secret cabals, nor swore or pledged his disciples to conceal their deliberations from the people whom they were to save, just so true do we know that, ere another half-century of Knox College, that tabernacle, or a larger one, will not suffice for the crowds which will gather at the funeral of the secret and loathsome lodge.

AN APPEAL FOR INDIA.

Sufficient attention has not been called to the importance of the Macedonian calls that have come over to us from India. A few years ago Rev. C. B. Ward, an independent missionary at Secunderabad, asked for publications, which were sent him. Now Bro. W. J. Gladwin of Bombay, publisher of the Purity Trumpet, a small journal devoted to the reform against the social evil, writes, "I am anxious to spread your works in India. If the anti-secrecy friends will regard this work as a real mission to save the heathen from mock religions and from the errors of traitorous and compromising Christians, then they will help us spread your excellent publications here. Please put this before the people, and I am sure that many will be glad to help poor old India in this way."

No one can withstand such an appeal. Of Bro. Gladwin we have known for some years. He was for a time associated with Bro. Ward, who went abroad from Chicago, where he was pastor of a Methodist mission, and to whom funds are forwarded by S. A. Kean, the well known banker of this city. Now who will help make up a fund for India? Our treasurer has one already begun.

—Every one can see from Bro. I. R. B. Arnold's letter of his tabernacle work on our 5th page that great opportunities for our reform are being lost every day, because we have no colporteur to follow him. The Illinois executive committee are anxious to send a man, but they have no means. What say you, friends in Illinois, can we afford this waste? Please reply quickly to the State treasurer, W. T. Phillips, at this office.

—Hon. Edward Blake of Toronto, leader of the Liberal party in the Canadian Parliament, whose powerful arraignment of secret societies before that body some three years ago will be remembered, is lying quite low at his home and it is feared that he will not survive a shock of paralysis.

—The Arnold tent at Oregon, Ill., was too small to hold the multitudes who crowded to hear the address and see the splendid pictures within. So another section was sent for, enlarging the capacity to 800. Bro. Arnold has struck the right thing for summer campaigning. We rejoice that he is making this venture so successful in every way.

—No reader of this number of the Cynosure should fail to turn to Dr. Gordon's article on "Cooking Stove Apostasy," on the 10th page. The church fair well-nigh succumbed to the warning of Moody and his fellow evangelists, but the lust of the flesh is yet strong in the church. The Brooklyn Daily Eagle published the other day the notice of a "Crazy Tea," to be held in a Y. M. C. A. hall, by some benevolent ladies. This new notion from Vanity Fair to please a godless, pleasure-seeking class of professors is thus described: "A large number of ladies and gentlemen well known in society will participate. The ladies will be attired in all sorts of twisted and wrong-sided aspects, very much as if dressed in a hurry to escape a raging fire in the house. The gentlemen will also appear in ludicrous ideal trimmings, conspicuous but not plain. Bread will be served upon dustpans, butter in pitchers, tea in glasses, jellies on wooden platters, and sandwiches in paper parcels, strawberries in cups, and other articles in similar style. The design is to have everything accord with the idea of craziness, and to have an hour of chit-chat in an extemporized bedlam, all on account of the Indians."

—In its notes of the late General Assembly at Philadelphia, the United Presbyterian speaks thus of Bro. Cole, who is more correctly speaking, at present representative of the church opposing lodge paganism: "Rev. Mr. Cole represented the Church in Africa. There is not the slightest trace of Caucasian in him, and if he is proud of his nativity there is nothing in his appearance to say he should not be so. He made the common, and, to us, humiliating complaint, that the Christian people, whose Saviour he is attempting to preach, send to his country some of its worst enemies. Some of his sayings were epigrammatic, as, for instance, these: 'Just before coming here I saw a Nubian chief who said, "Do tell the white people to leave their rum at home!"' 'Your religion'—a remark of a native skeptic—'shows the people heaven, then makes beasts of them so that they cannot get into heaven.' 'Take a white man and an African from the jungles of Africa and make them drunk, and they will speak the same language.' 'I do not believe in a state religion, but I do believe in a religious state.' 'I have been a member of five secret societies, and I tell you when you send a Christian missionary to Africa who is a Mason, you send a fine heathen.'"

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE EASTERN CITIES.

BRETHREN HINMAN AND COLE HAVE GOOD REPORTS.

WASHINGTON, June 7, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE.—Among the meetings addressed by Bro. Cole and myself in Philadelphia the most interesting was that in the First Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. T. P. Stevenson, D.D., pastor. It was on the evening of the 30th ult., and meetings and entertainments were proceeding everywhere. For this reason our meeting, which was quite a full one, was made up of those who felt a special interest in our work. Among others present was Rev. Dr. Kirkpatrick, pastor of the Fourth Presbyterian church, who gave notice of the meeting, advised all to attend, and set them an example. When I called on him he said that he had many secret society people in his church, and that their connection with the lodge was a great hindrance to their spirituality, and their duties as Christians. He expressed his sympathy with our reform. Quite a number of colored people, including some pastors who are Freemasons, were also present. Bro. Cole gave a description of African secret societies, and showed their relation to Masonry. I spoke on the general character of secret societies and their relation to Christianity. A fair collection was taken.

On the evening of the 2nd instant we started for Baltimore by steamboat, passing down the Delaware river to Delaware City, thence through the Delaware and Chesapeake Canal into Chesapeake Bay; thence down the bay, up past Fort McHenry to the business wharves of Baltimore. It takes more time, but is one of the most agreeable trips I have taken, and cheaper than by rail.

At Baltimore we met a most kind reception from a number of colored pastors, and on Sabbath each of us preached twice to large congregations: Bro. Cole in Leadenhall St. Baptist church, of which Rev. Brown is pastor. He is also the editor of the Baptist Messenger, which in its June number has several articles on secret societies, and their relation to the colored churches. Its influence will be strongly felt and be powerful for good.

• Rev. P. H. Braxton has recently built a church on Park avenue, one of the finest parts of the city, at a cost of over $18,000. It is one of the neatest and most commodious churches I have seen anywhere. This brother commenced five years ago with ten members, worshipping in a hall in a third story. He has now over two hundred. All along he has testified against secret societies, and his people seemed heartily to approve of every sermon.

In the evening I preached to 700 or 800 people for Rev. Harvey Johnson, who also strives to declare the whole counsel of God, but still finds his church encumbered with a large number of secretists.

Monday morning we came to this city, and Bro. Cole has arranged to lecture in the two largest colored churches in this city, and then has a number of lectures to give in Baltimore. Altogether the prospects of our reform are better here in Washington than heretofore.

H. H. HINMAN.

BRO. HAWLEY'S LABORS NOT IN VAIN.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have an appointment for two lectures at Masonville in Delaware county. I preached in the Baptist church while there, and gave one lecture in the Wesleyan Methodist church. The rain prevented the giving of the other lecture.

From Delaware county I went to Buchanan county, expecting to lecture at Quasqueton and at Hoover church, five miles from Quasqueton. On the cars I found Bro. Richardson of Independence. He was at Masonville and attended the lecture I gave there. He was pleased with the lecture, and readily subscribed to aid the Iowa Christian Association in the reform work. On reaching Buchanan county I found that appointments for lectures had not been made at the Hoover church as I expected; but I lectured twice at Quasqueton. The first night there was a popular concert that divided the congregation. The second night my congregation was more than doubled, and much interest was manifest. The people eagerly received the literature that I distributed among them at the conclusion of the lecture.

From Quasqueton I went to Walker, and met an acquaintance who inquired if I had lectured at Quasqueton.

"Yes," I replied, "I gave two lectures at Quasqueton."

"Did they mob you?" inquired my friend.

"Why, no," said I, "the order was excellent; not the slightest interruption."

"Why," he said, "the talk here was that you would be mobbed if you attempted to speak against the lodge at Quasqueton."

From Walker I went six miles into the country to lecture where a new church was organized last winter. A good congregation was present to hear the first lecture, though it threatened rain.

I came here by invitation of Bro. Shaver, a graduate of the Wheaton Theological Seminary. He had organized a new church and wished to have them indoctrinated in the principles of reform.

The audience increased each night, and they listened attentively while I taught them the way of salvation according to the religious philosophy of Freemasonry: and showed them that it was a delusion and a snare of Satan to entrap the unwary and bring and hold them under his power. Passing from the ceremonies and oaths of Ancient Craft Masonry, by the practice and strict observance of which Masons are taught to expect heaven, I showed that in the secret society system there is a deep laid conspiracy against Christ and our holy Christianity, which needs only to be exposed to array every real friend of Jesus against it. For is not that system that sanctions the teaching of "another gospel" as really cursed of God as Paul or an angel from heaven would have been if they had taught any other gospel than that which Paul preached?

Brethren, let us walk humbly with God and in meekness instruct those who have been ensnared into the lodge, hoping that God may give them repentance unto the acknowledging of the truth. Then, like an M. E. minister who heard me lecture, they will confess that they committed a great sin when they were made Masons.

C. F. HAWLEY.

THE YEAR'S WORK IN OHIO.

WHEATON, Ill., June 10, '87.

To the Ohio Friends:

A wise general always makes calculations. If defeated in battle, he inquires, why? If successful, he plans how he may be more so. In the contest with the great evils of the present it is sometimes well to pause, recount past victories, note (so as to avoid) any failures, and plan for the future.

As to-day I review the work of the past nine months in Ohio I do so with no small degree of satisfaction. Yet much more might have been done. I have no complaint to make of those who advocate our cause; when I have been in your neighborhoods you have made me welcome at your homes, cheered and assisted me in many ways. For this you have my heartfelt thanks and I am sure the approval of the "Author and Giver of every good and perfect gift."

Since the first of September last I have delivered 106 public addresses to audiences of from 50 to 600. The interest manifested in them has been quite marked; more than once I have known of persons coming ten miles to attend. Discussions have not unfrequently been had in public and in private which I think has resulted in some good. Thousands of tracts have been distributed and hundreds of Cynosure subscriptions obtained. The line is being drawn between the lovers of darkness and the lovers of light. As the question is agitated people take one side or the other. There are some who, knowing the facts, try to remain neutral, but it is only a question of time when they will be compelled to show which side they are on. Some who have witnessed the large numbers going into the lodges, have become disheartened and expressed their belief that we are fighting a hopeless battle. These friends need more faith in the promises of God. I do not know just how the victory is coming but I know it is coming, because God's Word says so. Many must learn for themselves that "the way of the transgressor is hard," before they will believe it. When the frogs were the thickest in Egypt the children of Israel were nearest deliverance. The very fact that lodges have multiplied emboldens them in making public demonstration by which their true spirit is manifested, and as Pope has well said:

"Vice is a monster of such frightful mien,
That to be hated needs but to be seen."

There are parts of our State I have not been able to reach as yet. The northwestern, northeastern and southeastern portions have been but slightly worked. There are friends in all of these sections. I hope you will not allow the work to lag, but look out for places where meetings can be held, so that when I return speedy arrangements can be made. New Concord has been suggested as a desirable place for our next State convention. It should be earlier this year than last, I think in October. I have not yet consulted the State officers and so can make no announcement. State Secretary, Rev. S. A. George of Mansfield, has reported contributions to the State work from time to time. In addition to those he has reported, the following have been handed me:

J. R. McDowell, James Steel, Wm. Harvey, D. S. Ervin, Wm. Constance, H. Hulbert, Mrs. M. W. Bingham and Marcus Phillips, five dollars each. Mrs. Jane Stitt, John Harvey, James McMillan, James Patterson, Wm. Gladstone, James Archer, Wm. Boyd, James Atkinson, N. Miner, A. Overholt, R. Gardner and Rev. Geo. Richey, two dollars each. Sam'l Poston, W. W. Johnston, G. Y. Graham, R. Johnston, Rev. A. M. Campbell, Rev. Joseph H. Wright, W. C. Hutchison, John Stultz, Rev. J. Swank, Christian Herr, D. H. Beal, D. McMillan, I. N. Brown, John Robinson, S. H. Jamison, Thomas Gilmore, J. C. Wallace, W. F. Wilson, Sam'l Patterson, Rev. Wm. D. Lowery, O. M. Shipley, John Watson, John Berry, R. L. Brownlee, R. M. Crabs, D. White, Rev. A. S. McMunn, Abraham Cox, A. C. Hall, W. H. Waters, Levi Zearing, J. G. Hays, W. R. Hays and a friend, one dollar each.

Mrs. Evans, Dr. A. D. Hawley, A. L. White, Rob't Pollock, Noble Weir, I. B. Benedict, A. K. Burtner, David Raso, Jessie Kinsey, G. T. Horine, David Hess and Adela Coate, fifty cents each.

Mr. Thrasher, L. L. Herr, Jessie Long, Rob't W. Speer, J. L. Lind and J. P. Scott, twenty five cents each. Wm. A. Forester, $1.50; D. Milten, $4.25; Seth C. Foster, $1.00; A. friend, $50; K. A. Orvis, $2.50; H. Y. Miller, $34.80; and L. Powers, $3.

I hope in the coming year we will renew our energies, unite our efforts, make wise plans and thus that the cause of the Master shall be greatly advanced. I shall expect, D. V., to commence work again in the early fall.

W. B. STODDARD.

THE HOME. AFTER THE RAIN.

The day had been dry and dusty,
The roadway scorched our feet,
And the leaves on the trees hung motionless
In the fevered dust and heat,
The grass was browned and shriveled,
The clover drooped its head,
And the tiger-lily's petals bright
Burned red as if they bled.

The hours of the day were numbered,
Cool rain refreshing fell,
It watered the leaves upon all the trees,
It sank in the woody dell,
It dropped in the tiger-lily
And filled the royal cup,
Till the crimson petals cooled their lips
And joyfully looked up.

The birds among the grasses
Slakened their poor, parched throats,
And, into the sweet, cool, evening air,
Poured their deep, tender notes!
The clover blooms were lifted,
That low in the dust had lain,
With the fragrance we only breathe and feel,
In the hour after rain.

And the quiet of all around me
Breathed itself into a prayer,
Lest the day of life, with its sunny hours,
And its glitter and all its glare,
Should wither, with its brightness,
The purposes Divine,
Which had budded and bloomed in the morning light,
Though at noonday they droop and pine.

Softly, O Gracious Spirit!
From the still skies above,
Send, on this thirsty heart of mine,
The dropping of thy love.
Sweetened, refreshed and strengthened,
Let me be lifted up,
Bringing my life's glad all to thee,
Thou who hast filled my cup!

Oh, when my life is fruitless,
Send thou the cooling rain,
E'en though I see the coming clouds
Through bitter tears and pain.
But, let the fragrance linger
Till my life's latest hour,
That fragrance which never a soul may know,
Only after the shower.

—Margarette W. Snodgrass.

"COOKING-STOVE APOSTASY."

An excellent and sober Christian of fifty years' standing in one of our churches meets us and says, "You are right, brother, in your note of warning. I am done with church societies. I have never objected to such gatherings accompanied by a simple meal, nor do I now object. But when I found at the beginning of the year that our church had engaged a colored man to furnish the supper, and when I saw him there with his white vest and white gloves and professional cookery, I said, No more of this." By which he meant to say, we judge, that there may be danger of getting a ministry of three orders in our churches—pastor, deacons and caterer, the last in white vestments manipulating the ritual of pies and cakes. And we think his alarm is well grounded. Usage sanctifies the most incredible innovations in the course of time. It is far easier to start a thing than to stop it, and we commend the wisdom of this man who stepped out when the caterer stepped in, saying, "We have no such custom, neither the churches of God."

Next an elderly woman called to express approval, and to ask if, though living in another city, she might not transfer her connection to a church whose pastor held to such Puritanical notions. A long conversation impressed us that she was a Christian of deep experience, richly furnished in the Word, and deeply imbued with the Spirit of Christ. But when she touched the amusement question she broke out with extraordinary vigor of speech and jesture, and said, "I have put down my foot, I will not endure it!" What could it be that had stirred this mild-mannered, sweet-savored saint? "When I came home from my vacation last summer," she proceeded, "I was told that there was to be an exercise in the church in which I should be interested, and so I went. I took my seat in the sanctuary, when I saw that the pulpit had been moved away and a curtain drawn across the platform. In a few moments the curtain was lifted, and out came the young men and young ladies of the church dressed in costume, and they acted a Japanese wedding from the very place where I had been accustomed to hear the Gospel. I cannot attend that church any more." Will any one say that her indignation was inexcusable and her protest groundless? To denounce theater-going would be a very ineffective proceeding, we take it, from that pulpit in which the theater had actually been set up. And there is no question in our mind as to which is the most objectionable, for Christians, to go to the play-house or bring the play-house into the church.

But before we had brought forth a phrase on this subject we were powerfully impressed with the matter of course way in which we heard these things spoken. For instance: Having held evangelistic services in a certain church in a thriving village, and seen a considerable blessing, we met the senior deacon of that body a year or so later, and naturally asked, "How are you getting on in your church?" "Oh, finely," he replied, "we have just raised the money and made our plans to have a turkey dinner once a month during the winter, and expect to draw in the people as never before." And, positively, this was the only answer he gave to our question. It is a shame to speak of these things, but we are compelled.

A young man at whose store we were calling on business, proceeded with great enthusiasm to describe the superb time which had occurred in the lecture-room of his church the preceding evening. Being determined to surpass anything before attempted in that line, they had introduced the novelty of naving the gentlemen furnish the supper and allowing the ladies to be served. With great glee he told how comically the officers and brethren looked dressed up in white aprons, cooking coffee, cutting meat, and making sandwiches, and declared that the whole affair had been an immense success. But we forbear. Some expositors, holding that the seven churches in the Apocalypse are an inspired foreshadowing of the various phases of the church's apostasy until the end of the age, tell us that we have reached the Laodicean period in which the threat applies, "I will spew thee out my mouth." God forbid that it should be so. But if we inquire whether occasion for such ejection is not furnished in the scenes and exhibitions which we have described above, we believe a very wide consensus of stomachs will answer in the affirmative.

Now we boldly express our conviction that, so far from conducing in the slightest degree to our religious prosperity, these things are the greatest hindrance to spiritual life and power under which multitudes of churches are now laboring. And the evil is widespread in city and country alike, and runs into every possible variation. We may well face it candidly; we are living under a dispensation of vicinals, which is not a whit less destructive of seriousness and spirituality than a dispensation of unbelief would be.

THE SUMMING UP.

We do not deny the propriety of a simple meal spread at a gathering of the church; or a feast made for the poor and hungry as a means of reaching them with the Gospel. But the custom of spreading expensive feasts for the entertainment of well-to-do and well-fed Christians we believe is proving a most injurious one.

Are there not many pastors who can duplicate the experience of a city minister who says in a recent number of the Congregationalist: "I have the best lot of people in my church I have ever met with. They get up entertainments, suppers and dinners which are models of their kind. They pay their bills with more promptness than any people I ever saw. In fact, they do everything in the world except the things for which the church was legitimately designed. And what can I do about it?"

To one who asks why the work of Christian women in preparing delicacies to be sold at a church festival, or in making goods to be dispensed at a church fair, is not just as acceptable to the Lord as money, especially when one has not the latter to give, we reply: "The work is acceptable; but the principle of raising money in this way for the cause of Christ is what we object to. To get an equivalent in food or goods for the money put into the Lord's treasury robs the offering of its richest element—that of sacrifice. The very savor and sweetness of a gift in the sight of God are contained in this, as abundant Scriptures show. In God's reckoning the value of an offering depends as much on what it costs the giver as on what it nets the receiver. Therefore the treasury of the Lord is vastly more enriched by the widow's mite than by the widow's muffins.

But what can poor churches do in the country, where money is scarce? asks another. Let them do a little in the right way, rather than do much in the wrong way. "For the honor of Christ I pray that the heathen may never learn how the American Christians raise money for missions," writes a returned missionary in a recent article. And what advantage financially would it be for them to learn? The Bassien Baptist Christians out of their poverty give more per head for missions than the Baptist Christians of Massachusetts with all their wealth: that is, more without these modern methods than we do with them. Here is the answer to the question: "What can poor churches do when money is scarce?" As for attracting people to the sanctuary, which is the principle aim of church suppers and entertainments, what is gained in that direction compared to the immense spiritual loss incurred? In a certain body of Christians in New England, 151 churches report not a single accession by conversion during the last year. We know something of the ecclesiastical machinery by which these churches are carried on, and how almost universally the devices which we are considering enter into their established order. Is not the record sad enough, and does it not seem to call out the pathetic question of the Lord, "Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread, and your labor for that which satisfieth not?" And by way of contrast, my poor brother, a pastor from Russia, is sitting by me while I write. He never heard of a church entertainment or church supper till he came to this country, and has not a single wheel of our church machinery in his system. Constantly persecuted, seven times imprisoned, once sent into exile, and with no place to gather his flock except his own private house, yet without any of our modern appliances, he has baptized in the region round about his home 400 converts during the last two years. Does not this suggest how much more the Lord can do without our modern improvements than with them?

On the whole, it may be a question whether we have not laid undue stress of late on the mere question of drawing the masses. Christianity has repulsions as well as attractions, and these two are so perfectly adjusted as to hold off those who care only for the loaves and fishes, while drawing in such as are ordained to eternal life. The same voice which says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden," also says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." The operation of this twofold constraint of tenderness and severity is very strikingly told in two sentences from the Acts of the Apostles: "And believers were the more added to the Lord." "And of the rest durst no man join himself to them." To enervate our spiritual life in our effort to draw the masses will be a very great price to pay for our success, if we gain it. Satan takes all ways to destroy the church; heaven help us if, having resisted the encroachments of Arianism, we should now be seduced by this folly of Vegetarianism. To deny the cross in our creed is a fearful thing; to deny it in our life may be even worse. "For many walk of whom I have told you often, and now tell you even weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ, whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, whose glory is in their shame, who mind earthly things." Phil. 3: 18, 19.—Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., in the Examiner.

RICHARD, THE LION-HEARTED.

It was in a small, low room that a woman lay on her dying-bed with three little children clustering near her. The eldest was a boy of seven or eight, the other two were girls of three and five.

"Rick, dear," the mother said, feebly reaching out her hand to clasp her boy's, "mother is going on a long journey. I wish it was God's will that I could take my little ones with me, but I know that it is his will that they shall all come to me after a while. There's a ladder that reaches from earth to heaven; will you climb it, Rick, dear, and bring Elsie and Fleta with you?"

Richard looked at his mother with eyes full of tears. His breath came quick as he answered:

"Yes, mamma; if I can find the ladder that reaches up to the heaven where you are going, I'll climb to the very top, and I'll bring my little sisters along if I have to carry them every step of the way."

Rick's hand within his mother's quivered as he talked, but his face looked strong and resolute, and so brought comfort to his dying mother.

"Rick, precious boy," she said, "be as kind to your poor father as you can, but don't let him pull you down. You're a little fellow, but I want you to understand me; I want you to know that you are the link between my little girls and myself. If you hold true and firm, all will be well, I believe."

"What shall I hold to, mamma?" sobbed the boy. "I can't hold to father, and you say you're going away."

"Hold fast to your Saviour's hand, Rick. You know how he gathered little ones to his bosom, and how he loved them; well, it's just the same now. Call on him if you are in trouble, and he will comfort you. Trust God, and you will be as strong as a lion. You'll be tempted, my boy. Some one—perhaps your own father—will offer you strong drink; but don't touch it. It's the first glass that makes all the trouble; you see, if there were not a first glass, there could not be a second."

Mrs. Stern could say no more. She sighed faintly, and then smiled, and closed her eyes. Was the pale boatman carrying her off on that "long journey" of which she had talked? No; not yet. She opened her eyes and held out her arms, whispering faintly:

"Come, all of you!"

Richard lifted the little sisters close beside their mother, then knelt with them; and the mother wound her feeble arms about them all.

The arms relaxed their hold; one look at Rick, and then the eyes closed forever. (One expression—"Strong as a lion!"—and then the beloved voice was still.)

"Strong as a lion! Strong as a lion!" Those dying words clung to Rick ever afterward. As he grew older they seemed grand to him and proved to be the inspiration of his life. It was a pathetic sight to see him day after day caring for his little sisters, dressing and undressing them, cooking the scanty food his father provided, carving toys for the little ones and hearing their prayers.

Thus passed two years, the father meanwhile coming in and going out, sometimes with a gentle word for his little motherless ones, but often with scowls and scoldings. But Rick, the lion-hearted, patiently bore all; for was he not climbing up to their mother?

Just after Rick's tenth birthday the family were obliged to remove from the little house which once they had owned, but which was theirs no longer, owing to the habits of the father.

Surely the shadows were thickening. The weather was cold; the father was sinking fast, and the little ones seemed left to chance charity. Mark my words! I say seemed left to chance charity, but, thank God! they were not; there is no such thing as chance. Over them all God watched.

Are you wondering whether Rick lost his courage? Well, he was only a boy, you must remember, and his heart grew heavy in that cold little attic-room. It was the evening after their removal, as he shivered as he sat by the bed watching over his sleeping sisters. All the food was gone and soon, perhaps, these little sisters would awaken and would beg for food. Child though he was, Rick could scarcely endure that thought. Suddenly he seemed to see his mother's face, and her voice said:

"Trust God, my boy, and you will be strong as a lion."

Peace came. Out into the darkness the boy went. He was not aimlessly wandering, either, but with a settled resolution to call upon a gentleman who had once met him in the street with his little sisters and bought cakes for them all, and had then turned to a friend with the whispered explanation: "They are poor Billy Stern's little ones."

When Rick reached the gentleman's house and stood before him, he felt awed for a moment and was dumb.

"What is it, little fellow?" asked the gentleman. "Can I shovel your walks, sir?" asked Rick.

"Well, I've no objection, if you are here early in the morning."

"But I'd like to do them to-night, sir, because—because—"

"Because what?"

"My little sisters went to sleep without any supper, and they'll be so hungry when they wake up."

Were tears glittering in the gentleman's eyes? I think so, but he turned so quickly that I am not sure. Soon he came back with a basket, and said kindly:

"Here, little fellow, run home with this, and feed yourself and the little ones. You can come here in the morning to do the work."

Rick went home. Too happy to wait for his little sisters to wake, he aroused them and they had a feast; and then Rick made them kneel while he thanked the Father above. At daylight he began his labor, cleaning the walks. His arms ached, but he persevered until the task was finished. All through the winter—a cold and stormy one—he cleaned walks, and thus kept the wolf from the door. When spring came, he found other and steadier work. Thus the time went on, working, praying, trusting, climbing.

Years—many of them—have passed. There has just been a terrible fire in the city; many firemen have done brave acts, but one tall young man has aroused the admiration of the crowd. Up and down long ladders he has gone, quickly yet carefully, saving lives and rescuing valuable property. The fire is under control, and people are shouting:

"There's no more danger now."

But are they not mistaken? A misguided saloon-keeper has set out a cask of brandy for the benefit of the wet workers. The cups furnished are eagerly snatched up by the tired, excited men. One little lad shouts:

"There comes Richard Stern, the bravest fellow among the whole lot. Give him a drink, quick! See how pale he looks!"

In a flash a cup was held up to the brave young man.

"Drink it, sir; it'll do you good. You're wet to the skin."

Yes, the young man was wet to the skin, and about the smell of the offered beverage there was something strangely tempting. For a second he wavered, and then a whisper seemed to reach him:

"If there is never a first glass, there can not be a second. Strong as a lion, my boy! Strong as a lion!"

"Thank you, sir," said Richard, declining the glass; "I never drink intoxicating liquors. You see, sir, it might kindle a worse fire than this one now dying away."

A gentleman just passing by heard the remark, and, after Richard had gone on, he said to the group:

"That Richard Stern is a fellow to pattern after. God bless him! He has climbed up from the depths with his two sisters clinging to him, and there isn't a prettier or more peaceful home in the city than his. Such a go-ahead, such a conqueror of all difficulties I never saw. He must be made of something more than common stuff."

No, my friend, nothing more than ordinary material; but that grows strong, you know, when anchored upon the Rock.—The Christian Statesman.

WATCH YOUR WORDS.

Keep watch on your words, my children,

For words are wonderful things;

They are sweet, like the bees' fresh honey;

Like bees, they have terrible stings;

They can bless like the warm, glad sunshine,

And brighten the lonely life;

They can cut in the strife of anger

Like an open, two-edged knife.

Let them pass through your lips unchallenged,

If their errand be true and kind—

If they come to support the weary,

To comfort and help the blind;

If a bitter, revengeful spirit

Prompt the words, let them be unsaid;

They may flash through the brain like lightning,

Or fall on the heart like lead.

Keep them back if they're cold and cruel,

Under bar, and lock, and seal;

The wounds they make, my children,

Are always slow to heal.

May Christ guard your lips, and ever,

From the time of your early youth,

May the words that you daily utter

Be the words of the beautiful truth.

A NOBLE STAND.

The temperance cause in the town of M— was in its infancy. A very feeble infancy, too; for there was a drinking saloon at almost every corner, and the reeling, intoxicated men were so common in the streets that no one ever glanced at them. The liquor sellers boasted that more money was paid by them for licenses than in other towns three times the size of M—. No drinking man sank in public estimation unless he lost his credit, and had no money to stand treats.

A temperance lecturer, a very eloquent man, found his way to M—; and the people listened, laughed, and, at the close of his lecture, booed him off the stand. But a band of noble women, the wives and mothers of some of the prominent citizens of M—, took up the work, and set forth on a hopeless crusade against the demon of intemperance, who had set his mark on the forehead of their friends and relatives. They were too well known, too high in position, for the people to treat them as they had done the lecturer; but they failed as signally in reforming their hearers.

There was a large party given in M—, where all the young people of both sexes had assembled. Among the refreshments served were, as usual, a variety of wines. A sweet-faced, modest girl, a great favorite with her companions, taking a wine glass, rose from her seat, her fair face flushing and paling alternately.

"Friends," she said in a firm, clear voice, "we have most of us been brought up together, and when trouble or joy came to one, the others were ready with their sympathy or their rejoicing. Therefore, if we had a common enemy, we would unite against it, would we not?"

"Yes, yes!" from all her astonished hearers.

"Well, then, I say we have a common enemy; one that menaces either directly or indirectly our happiness. Here it is," holding up the wine glass, and throwing its contents out of an open window. "This night I take my stand openly against it, and those who range themselves with the evil thing are no longer my friends. Surely you will not leave me alone in my resolution?"

Under that roof that night thirty young people took the pledge.

Look at M—to-day, and tell me what has become of the saloons and the toppers. Those who were too old to reform are no longer found reeling through the streets, a wholesome shame keeping them within doors. Popular opinion, led by the enthusiastic young reformers, was too strong for them.

All this was the work of one young girl of eighteen, neither very handsome nor exceptionally intelligent, but filled with a high purpose, and a fervent faith, and the magnetism of youth to influence her young companions.—Sel.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

LESSON XIII.—June 26, 1887.—Review.

From Peloubet's Notes.

SUBJECT.—The redemption of God's people.

1. FROM WHAT.—Prison and slavery, Less. I. Past sin, Less. II. Bondage and oppression, Less. V. Enemies, Less. IX. Hunger, Less. X. Godlessness, Less. XI. Selfishness, Less. XII. Intemperance, Less. XIII.

2. PROGRESS.—Through strange ways of God's providence, Less. I, II, III.

Through a long period of training, Less. V.

Through divinely appointed and trained leaders, Less. VI.

Through multiplication of numbers.

Through consolidation into a nation.

In religious knowledge and institutions.

3. AIMS.—Divine helps and good character, Less. I, II.

Leaders, Less. VI.

The call of God, Less. VII.

The deeper knowledge of God, Less. VII.

Institutions of religion, Less. VIII.

Miracles of deliverance, Less. IX.

Trials, Less. X.

Bread from heaven, Less. X.

Laws, Less. XI, XII.

Punishments, Less. XIII.

Applications.—This review can be made practical by applying it to redemption from sin. We see the bondage, the guilt, the bad effects on character. Sin is a worse master than the Egyptians, and a more terrible enemy than Pharaoh's army. God has raised up a great deliverer, who has done wonderful works for us. We often see wonders of grace. Enemies are overthrown. Trials and difficulties train us. Bread is sent from heaven. Great religious institutions have been ordained. The law has been given and especially the law of love.

TEMPERANCE LESSON.

(This lesson was selected by the International Committee.)

SCRIPTURE LESSON.—Lev. 10:1-11.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

The Circumstances (vers. 1-7). The incident of today's lesson occurred just after Aaron and his sons had been set apart to the priesthood (see chaps. 8, 9), and the tabernacle having been erected—the system of ritual worship was in full operation. Aaron had four sons—Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar, who had daily duties to discharge at the tabernacle. The two former as the eldest enjoyed special consideration, and they had been with their father and Moses in the sacred mount, which had not been the case with their brothers. Among the priestly services was that of offering the precious incense upon the golden altar within the tabernacle at the very time that the daily sacrifice was being consumed upon the brazen altar in the court without. At the time the ritual service had been inaugurated, the fire of the great altar had been kindled from heaven; and it was made an ordinance that this holy fire should always be kept up and preserved, and that this, and this alone, was to be used in all the sacred services. The priests who offered incense had therefore to fill their censers with fire from the great altar when they went into the tabernacle to burn incense.—Keble. But Nadab and Abihu, probably (ver. 9) under the influence of wine, disobeyed the command of God, and kindled their incense with strange fire, and not the heaven-kindled fire of the altar.

II. The Punishment. For this open act of disobedience they were struck dead by fire from the Lord in the tabernacle. This was so just and so necessary that Aaron was forbidden to put on any signs of mourning, lest it should indicate to the people dissatisfaction with the judgment of God. This severe punishment was sent in order that, by destroying the tendency to disobedience in the beginning, it might not so increase as to destroy God's whole work of training the nation. One noxious seed destroyed may prevent hundred of millions from filling the fields. He that destroys the first parent insects upon his garden plants, in that stroke destroys multitudes that otherwise would spoil his garden. He that puts out the little fire may save a city from burning up. So God's

THE COMMENCEMENTS.

WHEATON COLLEGE.

The baccalaureate sermon will be preached at 10:30 A. M. of Sabbath, June 19, by President J. Blanchard. The address to the class will be given by the president of the college. The address before the Society of Inquiry will be given by the Rev. W. H. Brewster, of Benton Harbor, Mich., at 7:30 in the evening.

On Monday, June 20, the closing exercises of the Preparatory School will be held in the College chapel at 2 o'clock P. M. In the evening the graduating exercises of the Theological School will occur in the same place at 8 o'clock.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees is held in the president's office on June 21, at 10 o'clock. The Associated Alumni meet at 4 o'clock in the College parlors, and give their literary programme in the chapel at 8 o'clock.

Commencement day is Wednesday, June 22. The exercises begin at 10:30 A. M. Besides the orations of the class, there will be a master's oration. The annual address before the College will be given by the Rev. Dr. P. S. Hensen, of Chicago. In the evening there will be the usual senior concert, followed by the president's levee in the parlors.

All friends and the public generally are cordially invited to be present at any or all of these exercises.

—Since the above was in type a change has been made in the Baccalaureate address, which will be given by Rev. C. C. Harrah of Galva, Ill.

CLOSING WEEK AT WASIOJA SEMINARY.

The exercises connected with the close of the current school year, at the "Wesleyan Methodist Seminary of Minnesota," located at Wasioja, Dodge county, began with the annual sermon to the students, by Rev. J. A. Richards of Fort Scott, Kan., Sunday, A. M., June 5. The text was John 17: 4; from which the speaker drew the thought, that as God was glorified in the completed work of the Christ, so, too, is he in the faithful service of all his followers. It was shown that the true end of education is to fit us physically, mentally and morally, for such service as shall honor God and bless the world. The sermon was packed with forceful entreaty to loyal work in the department of activity to which we are called. A large and attentive audience drew inspiration from the subject so earnestly presented. In the evening Rev. Richards again spoke, pressing upon us the great need of the times—men and women in every walk in life, that are true to conscience.

Monday and Tuesday the final examinations of the year were conducted, showing that the work done so thoroughly by the teachers, and with such application by the students, had yielded marked gain, above even the success of former years; evincing the fruit of wise methods in communication and acquisition of knowledge.

Tuesday evening the Alumni Association gave a superior entertainment. All the exercises, including the music, were of high grade, and profitable as well as entertaining. A. B. Gould, class of 1881, who recently took his degree, B. A., at the State University, made a speech on "Labor and Capital," that for depth of thought, and breadth of scope, and clearness of utterance, would have crowned an experienced statesman with double honor. Reformatory principles, inwrought with woof and warp of his sentiment and faith during the years of preparatory study here, voiced with the ability which won for him the prize in the State Oratorical Contest some months ago, rang out in every sentence. The crying want of the age—"MEN, not things in human form," is being met; and schools that furnish the supply, demand our sympathy and patronage.

Miss May E. Barnhart, class of 1884, read an essay on "Faith the Foundation of the Right: Groundless Credulity the Source of all Error." The thoughts presented were clear cut and beautiful, both in conception and expression. The skillful word-painting revealed the artist.

Wednesday, at the meeting of the Board of Trustees, some radical changes were made in the officary. Rev. J. A. Richards of Kansas was elected President of the Board, and General Agent for the institution. N. C. Mullenix was elected treasurer, and S. A. Gilley, book-keeper. The Board engaged Prof. E. G. Paine, A. M., to remain as principal. His twelve years of devoted service here have brought to him ripened ability for teaching, and to the Seminary a widening reputation among those who believe in Christian reforms. Miss Elsie Storr Dow, A. M., remains as the preceptress, taking the place of Miss Mary Phi Paine, whose years of service in this capacity have left her in broken health. The year now closed, has shown the fitness of Miss Dow for the trust committed to her. Rev. S. A. Gilley was continued as professor of Theology, with an outlook for enlarged success in that department. Prof. J. O. Post of the Musical Conservatory of Amity College, is expected to take charge of the musical department.

Wednesday evening a class of six was graduated, four young ladies from the scientific course, one gentleman from the classical, and one from the higher English. Class motto—Nitentes ad Majora. The programme was well filled by the class; indeed, it was remarked that many classes in our best colleges, East, acquitted themselves with less show of true merit. Every subject chosen for essay or oration masked the dominant force of Christian principle regnant here. The music was furnished by the West Concord Orchestra, but was scarcely up to our home talent. The retiring preceptress, Miss Paine, delivered an address on "They Can, because They Think They Can." None who heard failed to appreciate the practical idea, that patient labor and moral purpose, grounded on the belief in the God-given ability to be and do as he wills, assures success to every toiler, "Possunt, quia Posse Videntur."

We commend this strictly Christian school to the enlarged support of friends in the Northwest. Fall term begins Sept. 7, 1887.

—Rev. Edward A. Leeper of Red Oak, Iowa, is to give the annual address at Amity College commencement next Tuesday. The College Springs people will hear an able address and in sympathy with their reform principles.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—There has been some talk of consolidating the Freedmen's Aid Society with the Board of Education and the Sunday School Union and Tract Society in the Methodist Episcopal church, and doubtless the matter will come up in the General Conference next year on the report of a special committee.

—The General Synod of the Reformed church adjourned at Akron, Ohio, Wednesday, to meet next year at Lebanon, Pa. A temperance resolution was adopted, and delegates to the fourth General Council of Alliance of Reformed churches next year were chosen.

—The sixty-first anniversary meeting of the American Home Missionary Society was held last week in Saratoga. Secretary Barrows reviewed the work of the year. In all, the society employed 1,571 missionaries, an increase over last year of 102. They serve 3,063 churches and preaching stations, with 2,100 Sunday-schools, having 130,000 members. They organized during the year 135 new churches, with 112 houses of worship, and brought sixty-three to a self-supporting condition. They report 3,056 conversions and 10,031 additions to church membership, 6,468 of them upon profession of faith. The receipts for the year were $482,979 and the expenditures $507,986, the deficiency being made up from a balance in the Sweet exigency fund, to which the society now owes $50,000. There was during the year the surprising shrinkage in legacies of $108,013, and in the contributions of the living of $70,162, both unprecedented. A new and notable feature of the work has been the employment of thirty-five evangelists, the result of whose labors has been so encouraging that the number will be increased. A feature of special interest this year is the great extension and success of the work among French, German, Scandinavian and Slavonic immigrants. A Polish student during his vacation visited 1,600 Polish and 200 Bohemian families in Detroit, and a similar work is being done in Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Chicago, and other cities.

—There is now a strong probability that an organic union will be effected, in the near future, between the United Church of Christ in Japan and the Congregationalists. Both foreigners and natives, on both sides, strongly desire it, and expect to see its accomplishment. The missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal church, and those of the Methodist church of Canada, in Japan, have also agreed to unite in organizing and perpetuating an independent Japan church, to be called the Methodist church of Japan, and into this union the other Methodist bodies in Japan are cordially invited to enter.

—The South American Missionary Society of (Anglican) London, reports receipts for the past year of $63,110, and expenditures of $69,835. Much success has attended the work done by the missionaries of the society among the Indian tribes, among the native people, mostly Roman Catholics, speaking Spanish and Portuguese, and among the many communities of the English-speaking people scattered throughout the continent, as well as among the sailors who frequent the harbors. The Argentine government has taken notice of the important work being done among the natives, and has extended protection to the missionaries.

A GREAT REVIVAL IN OHIO.

One of the most remarkable revivals ever experienced by the United Presbyterian church is that which has for months been going on in the Presbytery of Muskingum, Ohio. Dr. J. P. Lytle, who has been more active in this work, during its progress from place to place, than any other pastor, gives some account of it in the last United Presbyterian. He says:

"Going back in point of time, it is proper to state that the congregation of Cambridge, a year ago, was visited and wonderfully revived, something over one hundred having been added to its membership. The work then seemed to slumber for a time, doubtless on account of the indifference with which it was regarded by those who, not being in the midst of it, did not understand it. In January last a series of meetings was held in Lebanon congregation, which awakened a considerable degree of interest, and resulted in an unusual number of accessions. In March the work began afresh in the congregation of New Concord. Here it assumed some more striking features, particularly in the large, and I might say leading, part which the women took in its inception, and in the active share they had in its continuance. The 'pillar of fire' then moved westward to Norwich, and again northward to Bloomfield, the work in these last two congregations being simultaneous. Presbytery intervened in the meantime, and the matter was discussed, and an interest and desire awakened that other congregations might share in the blessing. Some weeks elapsed without any marked signs of the spread of the gracious work. And then, right in the midst of corn-planting, one of the busiest seasons of the year, and when, under other circumstances, a series of meetings for any purpose would have been thought utterly impracticable, the Spirit came in power on the people in Salem and Hermon congregations, almost simultaneously, the former having precedence of about a week. In Salem, of which Rev. J. W. Martin is pastor, and who has been more actively engaged in the work than any other minister in the Presbytery, the accessions have been one hundred and four—ninety-nine on profession, with thirty-one adult baptisms. In Hermon the accessions were ninety-five, with twenty-two adult baptisms. Many of those received are middle-aged, and some old, as much as seventy. I think that in every congregation there has been a preponderance of men."

LITERATURE.

We have received the handsomely printed brochure of Cecil H. C. Howard of the Astor Library, on the Life and Public Services of General J. W. Phelps of Brattleboro, Vermont, and promise an extended review in the near future. The work is published by Frank E. Housh & Co., of Brattleboro, publishers of the Woman's Magazine, and is sold for 50 cents per copy in paper, 75 cents in cloth.

THE LIFE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON. By Washington Irving. In four volumes. Vol. I. Illustrated. Pp. 404. Price for the set in cloth, $3, half Morocco, $4. John B. Alden, New York.

When it was announced toward the close of his marvelous literary career that the author of the Waverley novels was writing a life of Napoleon Bonaparte, there was the greatest expectation among the literary circles of Europe at the result, and all were eagerly curious to know how the character and achievements of the great prodigy of war and of the throne would appear under the embellishing touch of the great literary genius of the age. Much the same interest must have been felt in our own country when Washington Irving, after an unexampled literary career for an American, and with a high reputation in Europe, also, began his last and greatest work, the Life of Washington. It was published some thirty years ago, and since then no American library has been complete without this work. Scott wrote of Napoleon as an enemy of his nation, Irving wrote of Washington con amore. The inspiration of patriotism, of veneration, of love for one who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen," spurred his mild and beautiful genius to its greatest and most brilliant effort. This work which has been largely confined to the larger libraries, has now, by Mr. Alden's enterprise, been brought within reach of every home collection of books, and we shall be happy to see his confidence in the American reading public not unworthily bestowed.

None who take up the June number of the English Magazine will fail to read the well-written sketch of Sir Phillip Sidney, the English Chevalier Bayard, the poet knight who fell at Zutphen. The illustrated sketches of "An Unknown Country" and "Picturesque Piccadilly" will not pass unread. The former is the concluding paper of a series by Mrs. Mulock-Craik describing a tour in county Donegal in the north of Ireland. The gifted author does not fail to mark the fact of the chastity of Irish women, and how greatly English and Scotch suffer in the comparison. But she writes of women in the Protestant districts; while Romanists have all along claimed that Irish virtue was the result of priestly instruction. Of the present political controversy she says: "England would be glad indeed to shut her eyes to the black cloud which overhangs Ireland and the social upheaval now convulsing her from end to end. Her poverty, some say, is at the root of this; and much of it is inevitable. Nothing could ever make her a rich country. Her long stretches of green fertility are balanced by equal quantities of bare mountain and almost useless bog, and her mild, moist climate, while adding to the outside beauty of the country, tends to enervate the inhabitants. It is a well-known saying that an Irishman will work anywhere—except in Ireland. . . . As for the lower classes, they require to be taught the commonest things, and—who teaches them? The priests do it to a great extent."

Self Reliance or Self Esteem is No. 1 of the Human Nature Library, a new serial just issued by Fowler & Wells Co., 775 Broadway, New York. The argument is that self-esteem as an element of character is essential to a high degree of success and the want of it is the cause of many failures in human effort. It is illustrated with more than a dozen portraits and sketches of well-known men and women.

The Cosmopolitan, which is this month to be removed from Rochester to New York City, continues its careful description of Turkish life in "Life Beneath the Crescent." Napoleon is characterized in "An Imperial Barbarian" and there is a bright sketch of Mexican scenery in "How I Ascended a Mexican Volcano."

June and Roses and Vick's Magazine—how one suggests the rest! Suitably there is much in this number about the queen of flowers with a fine chromo frontispiece.

The Missionary Review for June opens with a brief biography of the great missionary Henry Martyn, written by Frederick Vinton, Librarian of Princeton College. Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness of the great English mission training school adds another to her thrilling appeals for missions by an article addressed to Christian parents on the "Practical consecration" of children to the mission work. Dr. Pierson writes on the "Missionary Uprising among the Students." The mission reports and notices give an excellent review of the whole field. The office of the Review is removed to 436 West 20th street, New York.

LODGE NOTES.

The New York Times is responsible for the report that Florence, the actor, has made $30,000 out of the order called Nobles of the Mystic Shrine the past year.

The corner stone of a Knights of Labor building, the first building of the kind erected in the world, was laid in St. Paul the other day. The day chosen for the performance was the Sabbath.

The thirty-seventh annual session of the Grand Lodge of the American Protestant Association began Wednesday morning in Washington. The membership is said to number some 150,000, and there are lodges in nearly all the Northern States.

The members of the Masonic Benevolent Association of Central Illinois met last week in Mattoon. There is a disposition to reorganize and admit persons not members of Masonic orders.

Thirteen girls employed by Selz, Schwab & Co., shoe manufacturers of Chicago, refused to join an assembly of the Knights of Labor. The manufacturers declined to discharge the girls and the executive board of the Knights of Labor Wednesday issued a boycott against the firm.

Cardinal Gibbons before sailing for New York said that his mission to Rome had been successful; that the Pope had yielded much, and regarded the Knights of Labor favorably.

A resolution was adopted by the National Printers' Union endorsing the action of New York Union, No. 6, in which the union protested against the denunciation of the New York Evening Sun by a clique in the Knights of Labor. There is a strong feeling in the convention in opposition to the Knights of Labor. The mere mention of the Home Club is the signal for trouble.

The total membership of the Finch branch of the Good Templars for the year is put at 287,212 as against 270,105 at the close of last year—a net gain of 17,107. The number of thousand who have abandoned the order is not given. The juvenile lodge and Bands of Hope number 50,759. The treasurer reports the receipts of $15,833.82, of which all but a $3,633.24 balance was expended.

The secret society called "Patriotic Order of Sons of America" is led by one Ullman who was in the Know Nothing days candidate of that party for governor of New York.

A late general order from the head of the Grand Army compliments the Woman's Relief Corps and the Sons of Veterans as important auxiliaries in this secret society movement against the true principles of American patriotism.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in Batavia, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurston Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan, and the able and eloquent addresses of the convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

It contains—
1. Portrait of Morgan.
2. Portrait of Thurston Weed.
3. Fine picture of the Monument.
4. The original letter of Thurston Weed and his friends—virtually the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.
6. The monument oration by Pres. C. A. Blanchard.
7. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on "Character of Freemasonry" by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freemasons and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman; and very interesting personal and historical reminiscences.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Eccelesia, (Chicago, Ill.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most restless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fantastic though he be."—Nobels, (Washington.)

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthfully and modestly. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

FARM NOTES.

WORK ON SUNDAY.

It is a sad fact that Sunday work among market gardeners and farmers generally, near the large cities is increasing. In our neighborhood twenty years ago, Sunday was a day for rest. Now, during the summer, every Sunday, men are to be seen at work in the fields making up loads of vegetables, the same as upon week-days. By four o'clock in the afternoon loaded wagons begin to pass toward the city, and this procession is kept up for the rest of the night. In some localities this work is so general that worshippers in churches along the roads are greatly disturbed. This practice was begun by men who have apparently no ambition in life but to beat their neighbors, and to make a few extra dollars. Such men look upon a Sunday spent as it should be, in rest, thought and devotion, as so much time wasted. It is useless to expect much else from such men. The only way to reach them would be to bring back the strict old laws of the Puritans. The worst of it is that their influence is all for the bad. Younger men who have been brought up in Sunday schools and under good influences are led into Sunday work. Competition is so close, and the gardeners' business is so precarious, that such men are sorely tempted, whenever they see their neighbor saving a lot of melons or tomatoes by Sunday work, to follow the bad example. The practice is wrong from every point of view. The moral loss which comes to any community by the spread of such practices cannot be estimated. The evil results are as certain as they can be. One lapse of integrity, or one compromise with conscience always paves the way for another. And, aside from any moral considerations, we believe that Sunday work entails a loss in labor. Every working animal upon the farm needs rest. For a few weeks men may be able to stand the strain of constant labor, day and night, but sooner or later they break down and are forced to resort to the use of stimulants, and thus severely injure their constitutions. Sunday work, done simply to save a few dollars, never will pay. It must eventually bring a curse to those who perform it. There are always lines of farm work, as the care of stock, that render a certain amount of Sunday work a necessity, but there is no excuse for the work done simply to get ahead of a neighbor.

PROTECTING ANIMALS FROM FLIES.

At this season of the year the annoyance caused to animals by flies and mosquitoes often amounts to positive agony and at all times in what is called good corn weather, it is sufficient to prevent the stock eating enough to keep them in good condition. The animals will stand in the water or pass the greater part of the day in the shade rather than expose themselves to the sunshine, going out to eat only when driven by hunger. They quickly lose flesh, the flow of milk shrinks, and a loss is incurred that cannot be easily made good again. At all times a good feed of grain is beneficial to stock, but it is especially so when flies are very annoying, since it will do much to prevent a shrinkage of flesh and milk. Horses and milch cows may be protected, in a great measure at least, by wiping them all over with a sponge dipped in soapsuds in which a little carbolic acid has been mixed. Bulls confined in stables often suffer enough from the attacks of flies to drive them half mad, and there is no doubt that the continued fretting caused in this way develops a savage disposition. The most satisfactory results have followed from sponging, with soap suds and carbolic acid mixed, a Jersey bull confined in a stall.—Chicago Tribune.

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D.D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and beautiful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

"A THRILLING WARNING,"

THE

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons. It treats of

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press,
Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like molten lava from the pen of the author. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mark, robbed of the glamour with which they have been so long and so prettily literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a life of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—Western Christian Advocate.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teaching. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out thousands of happy souls, rich in heaven to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted in its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that it needed, will make our lives better, happier and more useful; that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a common sense and tells in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to this."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incidents. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal attention."—Christianity.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author confronts his theme in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and courtly propriety."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his conclusions with the most reliable and accurate statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR
GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Ontario State Jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freeman to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT.

In closing his letter he says: 'I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the course of my life by a sincere desire to do right, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of the secret societies.'

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and it condenses the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 6 cents.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

E'en his fallings lean to virtue's side.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that many of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

HOME AND HEALTH.

WASHING HELPS.

Lately we have tried putting a little kerosene in the water when the white clothes are soaked over night, and it acts like a charm. At first I thought it might have an unpleasant smell, but such is not the case. The rinsing has a great deal to do with the clear look of the clothes. Hard water is the best for this purpose, and only a little bluing is to be allowed. The chief thing is to get all the suds out of the articles. Colored fabrics should be washed for the first time in salt and water. If the colors are delicate, the goods should be washed, rinsed, starched and well shaken out, then hung at once on the lines. It is always better to fold clothes the night before ironing; it seems to help the smoothing process. A great help to washing day is a mangle, and that family is fortunate who possesses this very useful help. Here, again, kerosene comes in to assist in laundry work, a spoonful mixed in the starch being one of the aids to polishing not always known. Sufficient attention is not given to sorting and soaking white clothes, and sometimes the quality of soap makes a great difference, and this can be discovered only by a fair trial. Anything that helps to make washing day easy is to be done. And of all the ingredients used in a washing fluid, I prefer plain borax that can be used without injury to fabrics or to the hands of the laundry maid.

—Rural New Yorker.

In setting out little plants in June, if the weather is very hot and dry, it is a good way to lay them, root and branch, in a pan of water and so plant them all dripping out of that. Water gently and repeatedly then, rather than very much at once and shade at noonday with cones of newspaper, or flower-pots or bits of board and shingle, or a cabbage leaf on a stick. Flower-pot shutters should be raised a little at one edge—the rest are airy enough.—Anna Warner.

MURDEROUS MILLINERY.

A lady told me the other day a painful little incident relating to wearing birds on your bonnets and hats. "I will try and give her our words. She said: "One day our pastor said (during service) that when he was in Florence a lady came to him and said, 'Do come with me and hear those birds sing; oh! such mournful notes!' There was a room full of birds in very small cages, and these birds were all blind; they had their eyes put out. In the night the owners take them outside the city and hang the cages in trees. The trees are then all smeared with tar. These birds keep up their pitiful singing, and other birds are attracted to the cages and they get stuck in the tar, and then they are caught and their eyes put out. And these birds are killed and sent to America for ladies to wear on their bonnets!"

"And I looked around the congregation to see what ladies had birds on their bonnets, and I was glad there was none in mine, and I don't think I can ever wear a bird again."—Amanda B. Harris in May Wide Awake.

EXTRAVAGANT ECONOMIES.

Many women who are extremely frugal in other things seem to have no idea of the value of time. Of their failures in this direction a writer in the Christian Register gives a few examples:

Do you not know many homes where the supply of cooking utensils is so unnecessarily limited that a good deal of time is daily wasted, and much extra labor expended in preparing the meals, by having to wash one saucepan in which to cook a second dish that could as well have been cooked with the same fire, and watched at the same time as the first? Or a towel must do duty as a strainer or colander, no account being made of its becoming worn and stained? Or a silver spoon is used to stir or lift food from the lack of iron or wooden ones? Why not afford such kettles and pans as are really needed for advantageous cooking and "save" in some other department.

Have you ever seen some busy housewife hanging out clothes on a cold, windy day taking off a clothes-pin each time a garment is added to the line, trying to make one pin hold two and sometimes three articles? Since good clothes pins can be had for five cents per dozen, it seems rather far-fetched saving to stand on the icy ground and double the time really required to shake out and hang the clothes and run the risk of taking cold while so doing.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. H. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. G. Donohue, Past Master, Unit. No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of the Blue Lodge and Chapter of Freemasonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by the renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and a full Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, class and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney said, "This is a bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 34 cents; per dozen, $3.40.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Contradicted. This is a new and original work. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer who reads this work a right kind of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mordecai Leggett. 24 cents each; per dozen, $2.40.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Oddish lovely" illustrated (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Magna Carta of the Grand Army of the Republic," are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second Master Mason. Published at the special request of the congregation of the Methodist Church, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Knights Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Select Master, Super-Excellent Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight-Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; $0.50 per dozen. Paper covers, 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry as a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to support a reverend Freemason and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not join the Order of the Knights Templar. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Injured? By Rev. A. L. Paul. Proof of the truthfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-unions of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Minute Men and Black and White Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Capt. Wm. Morgan. "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan," "Valance's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan," "Reminiscences of Morgan," "Morgan," and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 204 pages. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the work of the secret societies in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trampled and blighted by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 410 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, and to all who are connected with the military. The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore and Webster's Denial to Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, The Use of the Lodge, and the Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor John Ritchie's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1857, at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the persons who opposed the vote of thanks to Washington in his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. H. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and proves that Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp. 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness. adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. J. H. Blanchard. (Freehold edition of a second Mason of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Condemed. By Rev. J. H. Blanchard. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Adoptive Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Eleazar, and known as the Daughter's Degree, the Widow's Degree, the Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and other remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages; cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscence of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. V. Green. Illustrated with engravings, showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

ON ODDFELLOWSHIP.

Revised Odd-fellowship Illustrated. The complete revised ritual of the Lodge, Encampment and Rebekah (ladies) degrees, profusely illustrated, and guaranteed to be strictly accurate; with a sketch of the origin, history and character of the order, over one hundred foot-note quotations from standard authorities, showing the character and teachings of the Society; and an analysis of each degree by President J. Blanchard. This ritual corresponds exactly with the "Charge Books" furnished by the Sovereign Grand Lodges. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Odd-fellowship Judged by Its Own Utterances; Its Doctrine and Practice Examined in the Light of God's Word. By Rev. J. H. Brockman. This is an exceedingly interesting, clear discussion of the character of Odd-fellowship, in the form of a dialogue. In cloth, 50 cents; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 25 cents; per dozen, $2.00. German edition, entitled "Christian and Ernst," paper covers, 50 cents each. The German edition is published by the same publisher.

Sermon on Odd-fellowship and Other Secret Societies. By Rev. J. S. Sargent, pastor Evangelical Lutheran Church, Leeburg, Pa. This is a very clear argument against secretism of all forms and the duty of Christians to oppose it. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Other Secret Society Rituals.

Temple of Honor Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of "The Temples of Honor and Temperance," commonly called the Temple of Honor, a historical sketch of the order, and an analysis of its character. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $8.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $4.00.

Knights of Pythias Illustrated. By Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the Amended, Perfect and Improved Pythias. The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Sermon on Secret Societies. By Rev. Daniel Doolittle, Woodstock, Conn. The special object of this sermon is to show the right and duty of Christians to examine into the character of secret societies, no matter what object such societies profess to have. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

History of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Rev. J. H. Blanchard. A full and complete history of the abduction and murder of Morgan. This book contains indisputable, legal evidence that Freemasons abducted and murdered Wm. Morgan, no other cause than the revelation of Masonry. It contains the sworn testimony of over twenty persons, including Morgan's wife and no candid person, after reading this book, can doubt that many of the most respectable Freemasons in the Empire State were concerned in this crime. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Judge Whitney's Defense before the Grand Jury of the County of Albany. Judge Daniel H. Whitney was Master of the lodge No. 1, Keith, a member of his lodge, murdered Ellen Slade. Judge Whitney, by attempting to bring forth to justice, brought on himself the vengeance of the lodge, and he boldly replied to the charges against him and afterwards renounced Masonry. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

A Masonic Conspiracy. Resulting in a fraudulent divorce, and various other outrages upon the rights of a defenseless woman. Also the account of a Masonic murder, by two eye-witnesses. By Mrs. Louisa Walters. This is a thrillingly interesting, true narrative. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00.

Pres. H. H. George on Secret Societies. A powerful address, showing clearly the duty of Christian churches to disaffiliate with secret societies. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Discussion on Secret Societies. By Elder M. S. Newcomer and Elder C. W. Wilson, of Royal Arch Mason. This discussion was first published in a series of articles in the Church Advocate. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Freemasonry a Fourfold Conspiracy. Address of Pres. J. H. Blanchard, before the Anti-Freemasonry Convention. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Hidden With Cards. OR THE POWER OF THE SECRET EMPIRE. A faithful representation in the form of the evil influence of Freemasonry, by K. E. Plade, Author of "Little People," "A Sunny Life," etc. This is a thrillingly interesting story accurately true to life, mainly a narration of historical facts. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Secrecy by the Family, State and Church. By Rev. M. S. Drury. The antagonism of organized secrecy to the welfare of the family, state and church is clearly shown. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. J. Bay Browder. In an Oration by Rev. Dr. Mayer, Wellsville, Ohio. An able sermon by an able man. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Sermon on Secretism. By Rev. R. Theo. Cross, pastor Congregational Church, Hamilton, N. Y. This is a very clear and convincing argument against Masonry that are apparent to all. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Freemasonry at a Glance Illustrates every sign, grip and ceremony of the first three degrees. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Professor E. S. Clark, Superintendent of public schools at Henderson, Ky., was shot and killed Tuesday by Professor Thomas Posey, principal of the high school. An old feud had existed between the men. The deed was done in the presence of the school children.

The losses by fire in this country in May reach $10,636,500, $2,500,000 greater than the average figures for May during the past twelve years.

The drought still continues in northern Iowa, though rains have fallen generally through the country. The month of May and thus far in June has been the driest season known in northern Iowa since 1876. Scarcely a drop of rain has fallen during that time. Oats, wheat, and grass are almost a failure. Streams are drying up and herders find it difficult to get water for their cattle.

An explosion of gasoline yesterday at Chattanooga, Tenn., caused a $6,000 fire. Two firemen were killed by a falling wall. Humphrey Reeves, manager of the Standard Gas Machine, was horribly burned, as were also three other men.

A cloud burst over Monticello, Penn., Thursday afternoon, flooding the streets and cellars, and doing damage estimated at $100,000. Many persons took refuge on the roofs of their dwellings. The water rushed into a colliery, paralyzing the miners with fright, the men thinking the bottom of the Susquehanna had fallen out. The flood created a sand bank on the track of the Pennsylvania road.

Mr. and Mrs. James G. Blaine and their two daughters sailed from Hoboken early Wednesday morning for Europe on the steamer Ems.

A cyclone visited Marshall, Mo., Wednesday, laying waste part of the town and surrounding country. The storm covered a space of fifty yards wide and nothing was left standing in its path.

At Moorehead, Ky., Wednesday, John Mannin, the marshal, with a posse went, to the dwelling of Dr. Henry D. Logan to arrest his sons, John and William. The latter shot and dangerously wounded the marshal, but his aides rushed into the room and killed both the Logans before they could offer further resistance. Dr. Logan himself is a prisoner on a charge of murder.

The constitutional prohibitory amendment was defeated in the Massachusetts House Wednesday by a vote of 139 to 74, not the necessary two-thirds.

A prohibition mass meeting at Cooper Union, New York, was largely attended, General Clinton B. Fisk acting as chairman. Resolutions denouncing the liquor traffic and the Ives pool bill, and extending sympathy to the laboring people, were adopted.

At San Antonio, Texas, Friday, the Mayor, Chief of Police, an ex-alderman, the cashier of the San Antonio National Bank, and four other prominent citizens, were arrested on a United States warrant charged with breaking up a Prohibitionist meeting.

The Havemeyer Sugar refinery at Brooklyn burned Saturday morning and several adjacent manufactories. The total loss is estimated to be $2,000,000.

For the last quarter of 1886 the postal service receipts were $12,444,641; expenditures, $13,029,330. The receipts were $1,723,437 greater than for the corresponding quarter of 1885.

Proprietors of two leading hotels at New York were on Tuesday constructively arrested for violating the Sunday law by selling liquor to their guests with their meals. A test case will be made touching the constitutionality of the statute.

Wm. O'Brien, the Irish agitator, was tendered a reception and banquet at New York Tuesday night. Mr. O'Brien, in his speech, condemned the persons who took part in a meeting in Union Square which was in sympathy with Henry George. He sailed next morning for home.

The thirty-eighth annual session of the American Medical Association was held last week in this city at the Central Music Hall.

Aaron L. Still, colored, a famous promoter of "underground railroads" in early days, and one of the best known colored men in Pennsylvania, died at Reading Thursday, aged 67.

An artesian well at Groton, W. T., broke through the earth a hundred yards from the natural outlet and is flooding the district. A large fissure has been made in the earth, running under the Episcopal church, and it is feared the building will fall.

FOREIGN.

Rumors prevail in London that Gladstone intends after the crimes bill has passed a third reading to raise the whole question of the government's Irish policy.

Severe shocks of earthquake have occurred at Vernone, in Turkestan. The town was almost entirely destroyed. One hundred and twenty persons were killed and 125 injured.

A dispatch from St. Petersburg says: "The Czar is incensed at the tone adopted by the Russian press in regard to his foreign policy. The Czar aims at maintaining peace, and his policy emphasizes the traditional amity between Russia and Germany."

The annual meeting of the Suez Canal Company was held on Wednesday. The report showed the year's receipts were $1,060,000 less than those of 1885. A dividend was declared of 75½ francs per share.

The Vatican authorities have received $800,000 with which to celebrate the Pope's jubilee.

About fifty lives were lost by an explosion in a coal mine at Gelsen-Kirchen, in Westphalia, Germany, on Wednesday.

A recent earthquake near St. Louis, Province of Quebec, dislodged huge rocks from the mountains, which, rolling into the valley, uprooted and smashed large trees but caused no serious accidents.

The Russian ukaz, forbidding foreigners to acquire estates on the western frontier of Russia, is designed principally to put an end to the influx of Germans. There are in Russia so many German factories, workshops, warehouses and farms, the productions of which are a profit to Germans exclusively, that the Russian government regards them as detrimental to the country, owing to their competition with Russian industries. Besides most of the Germans in Russia are members of the German army reserve.

A Vienna dispatch of the 6th says: "The efforts of thousands of workmen for three days and tons upon tons of earth have not proved sufficient to stop the gap in the Kistis sea dyke, in the submerged district of Hungary. It can not even be said that the rush of water is sensibly lessened. It is agreed on all hands that the bursting of the dyke is due to culpable negligence on the part of the government, which has often been warned of its weakened condition. The distress in Hungary increases hourly. Numerous lives have been lost. Entire herds of cattle have been drowned at Mako. The flood has reached Csand county, and fully 50,000 acres of wheat land will soon be inundated. Csogard is submerged. It is calculated that 50,000 families have been ruined by the floods."

As the result of a contest over a tree claim near Huron, D. T., Monday forenoon, Simeon Nelson, a Swede, shot and killed Mrs. Shaw, her 15-year old son, and Mrs. Shaw's sister, Miss Lyman, aged 22. Nelson also fatally wounded a man named Kiley, and then returning to his home, blew his own brains out with a rifle.

Russia threatens to prohibit the use in Lutheran churches of prayer books and hymnals printed in German and will suppress the teaching of German in the Lortap University and the position taken by Prince Bismarck leaves the German population in the Baltic provinces helpless.

In Ireland evictions were resisted by women who threw boiling water over the bailiffs, and in Wales the mob turned an excited bull loose on the police who were protecting an auctioneer in selling property for tithes, and also rotten-egged them.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHALIGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

William Duncan, the missionary who left a London store thirty years ago to go alone and unprotected by human arm among the desperate savages of British Columbia, to lead them to Christ, was unexpectedly in this city over Sabbath, and spoke in Dr. Goodwin's church in the evening, telling much of his story of missionary life and success, and asking for the sympathy of American Christians in his work. The accounts that have come to us of his devotion, fearlessness and success put him in the foremost rank of our Christian heroes, with Swartz and Judson and Elliott and Studd, and the sainted Moravians. American parents owe it to their children to become well acquainted with the history of Duncan and his Indian church at Metlakatla.

In connection with the notes in our department of Literature it is well enough to call attention to a fact or two respecting Indians nearer home. The Indian school at Carlisle, Pa., is maintained by the Government, and is one of the best investments we ever made as a nation. Senator Dawes asks attention to the fact that Indian boys at Carlisle lately, out of scant and hard-earned wages, have put into the hand of Captain Pratt $1,400 to build a new dormitory. Congress, too full of political dodges, or too recklessly stingy, refused to help these young Indians, but the Government will very graciously take possession of the building and hold its title when finished. Out in Salem, Oregon, we are told that 200 Indian boys picked hops until they earned $1,500 to pay for 73 acres of land, needed by the school at that place. The boys buy it, but with some kind of a Henry George twist Congress gets the deed. If we have not lost all sense of shame these items are sufficiently humiliating to work a true repentance for our neglect of the Indians.

The Masonic order is surprisingly virtuous when public opinion gets after them and they find it hard to kick against the pricks of the press. The New York Grand Lodge deals with Prudence Lodge, but what is done to Palestine Chapter which received the same cut-throats? or with Ivanhoe Commandery, which would have taken them into the bosom of Knight Templary without question, if the matter had not begun to make talk outside the lodge?

So down in Missouri the Masons are learning new lessons of virtue, though their order is the oldest of existing systems if we may believe their bombast. Five years ago the Missouri Grand Lodge adopted the following:

Resolved, That the business of saloon keeping is hereby declared a Masonic offense and those engaged in it are liable to be dealt with for un-Masonic conduct.

The Cynosure called attention to this new land-mark upon the rules of Masonic conduct, which the fathers of Masonry never knew, and would never have allowed for a moment. It was evidently an innovation forced upon the lodge by the progress of reform in the public mind under Christian instruction. The law remained a dead letter, until lately Grand Master Hunt, perhaps thinking to make it odious by enforcement, ordered the suspension of all Masons engaged in liquor dealing. The first notorious fact revealed to him is that some 100 of the most prominent members of the order in St. Louis are liquor dealers, and have been members for scores of years. What shall be done with their "vested rights" in Masonry, and the cart-loads of oaths they have taken, if they can be thus thrust out? It is said the great body of Masons throughout the State believe the edict, and the resolution behind it, are not legal in Masonry. They are right.

One of the largest corners in wheat ever attempted, came to grief in this city last week, and filled the Board of Trade for two days with madness and alarm to be succeeded by some weeks of mourning. Brokers in Milwaukee, Cincinnati and other cities were heavily involved and the losses are said to be in the vicinity of $4,000,000, the corner having control when it broke of 37,000,000 bushels of wheat in one way or other. The matter has furnished topics for a number of city pulpits, and the pastor of the First Congregational church, Dr. Goodwin, gave his opinion to a reporter in these emphatic and truthful terms: "I think that the men who attempt to organize corners in wheat or corn or pork or anything else, and thereby manipulate the market by forcing prices, deserve to be themselves cornered, and at the earliest possible day, behind iron bars and stone walls. The whole business is unmitigated and unscrupulous selfishness, and does not differ in its essence from highway robbery. It is just as truly compelling men to give up their money as if it were done before the muzzle of a revolver. If such methods are to be allowed they will put an end to all legitimate trading just as certainly as suzerainty of the black-flag and its methods will drive all legitimate commerce from the seas. There can be no mutual confidence, no settled basis of values, no fixed standard of morals, where such practices obtain. They cannot be too severely condemned. It will not be putting it too strong to say that it should be made a penitentiary offense to originate or join hands in promoting such schemes."

The Mormons are at last moving openly for recognition as a State—a measure they have long been secretly plotting to secure. A call was issued Friday, at Salt Lake City, for a Constitutional Convention to meet on the 30th for the purpose of making a formal application for Statehood. They have been naturally encouraged by the removal one after another of the Federal officers who have so long held down their blood-thirsty natures as it were by the throat. First, Governor Murray was replaced. Although his successor proves to be a worthy man, yet the change in itself was a great encouragement to the Mormon horde. Then followed the change in the district attorney's office by which a new and untried man took Mr. Dickson's place, while the Brighamites howled with joy. Lately Judge Zane, whom these violators of every law of God and man held in peculiar abhorrence, has been asked for his resignation. These removals, joined with the temporary, but important advantage of the test oath, by which the Mormon power is very cleverly perpetuated by perjury, have filled the leaders of this deluded people with hope. As a State, their power would be made as sure as human ingenuity, inspired of the devil, could make it; and they would be free from many vexatious orders from Washington. The danger of this movement cannot be too urgently set before the American voters, and they roused to the duty of wiping out this foul curse from the earth.

THE INFLUENCE OF SECRET SOCIETIES ON THE COLORED RACE IN AMERICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

There is no necessity for wandering in the field of thought, or undertaking historical researches to discover the degenerating and degrading influence of oath-bound, secret societies on any race, whether white or black. My object is not to tread the well-trodden path in proving to the world that these secret organizations are in their nature enemies of the religion of Christ, and corrupters of mankind; I will only draw the attention of the reader to an incident which transpired a few days ago in Baltimore amongst the colored people, which alone is proof of the degenerating influence of secretism.

On Sunday, the 5th, I preached twice in Leaden-hall Baptist church of that city, to a large colored congregation. On the afternoon we had the administration of the Lord's Supper. Bro. Brown, the pastor, is about one of the most candid, single-eyed, evangelical ministers that I ever met in the United States. In fact, he has a white heart in a dark skin. When I questioned him, whether his paper and ministry will not suffer peculiarly by patronizing anti-secret movements as some of his brethren believe, he rolled up his large, but intelligent and piercing eyes, and then looked on me boldly in the face, replying: "Bro. Cole, bread and butter cannot stand between me and my God. If a thing is right, it is worth upholding; if wrong, it is worth denouncing."

In his exhortation on the communion I noticed that he pointed to the elements, bread and wine, as the true and only emblems of the last Passover, and reproved some of his members for observing it according to the Mosaic ritual. I was naturally curious to ask him after the service what he meant by such exhortation; and by his explanation I understood that a secret society, to which some of his members belong, undertook the introduction of an innovation into their order, by instituting the celebration of the Jewish Passover. They collected from every one of their members, and all interested, the sum of 25 cents, and bought lambs and sheep, which they slew in observance of the Lord's Passover.

I cannot see my way clear to censure these people any less than I would condemn every oath-bound, secret community, whether white or black. A desire for innovation is the source of all superstitious rites and ceremonies connected with Freemasonry and the Purohism of Africa. When the peasant who earns a dollar a day is robbed of evening rest, and cheated of his money, for which he is rewarded with a title of "brother," or "worshipful master," or buffooned, with an apron or fool's cap, finds his disappointment, he could be sustained only by the introduction or invention of new rites and ceremonies. This introduces the drinking of wine in a human skull, and the fabulous doctrine of "the grand lodge above, eternal in the heavens."

I preached in the evening from Heb. 10: 14. "For by one offering, He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." The Lord was with us and he directed the words with power. I really hope that it will soon be time for the Christians of this, your renowned civilized country, to denounce the idolatry of secret lodges. The more I am in contact with this evil, the more I am convinced that Freemasons cannot be missionaries, either to professed Christians or heathens. A Mason and a Christian is a false Christian; and false Christianity is worse than paganism.

MORAL HEROES.—VI.

BY REV. C. C. FOOTE.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER AND GEORGE WASHINGTON CLARK.

The poet and the singer—the poesy flowing into song and song permeating the poetry. Here is a kinship more sacred than that between the preacher and the poet. Here is the opposite of the fabled Kilkenny cats, each eating up the other, for here the bard and the songster have immortalized each other. Who but the singer has clothed the poet with imperishable fame by setting his stanzas to the songster's imperishable melodies, and pouring them through his voice of heavenly mould? What other poems could have inspired those songs with such celestial fire, and wafted them the wide nation o'er? Of the bard I will only say, for personally I know him not, that, when in their school days my sons came to me for the best with which to develop their oratorical powers, I was wont to turn them over to Whittier; so that while promoting their own culture they might also inspire themselves and their school associates with the spirit of reform.

Who shall portray the power of song thus armed? No words that I can summon to my aid can do it justice; it was like shafts of lightning going through and through the sensibilities of the enrapt audiences. "What shall the man do that cometh after the king?" said Solomon. But our singer desired nothing more than to follow after the most impassioned eloquence, the most brilliant oratory, the most overwhelming reasoning. After the mightiest had wrought up the audience to the highest enthusiasm, he by one of his songs would rouse them to an uncontrollable frenzy of delight.

Persons who have never heard George W. Clark will deem these lines extravagant, but those who did hear him will deem them too tame. There was a royal splendor and sublime heights attained unequalled by any other singer of the age. Both the song and the sentiment were in harmony with the great reform; and the singer was qualified and commissioned for the crisis. Profound and prolonged as has been his influence for good, probably in no period of his life of equal duration has brother Clark accomplished so much as during his recent Southern mission among the colored people. Knowing that he had been their friend in the early Abolition days, in the days that tried men's souls, they were almost ready to "worship the ground over which he walked."

HORACE MANN.

Most of the great reformations that have revolutionized the usages of communities and nations, have had their origin, like the sources of great rivers, in a few springs or fountains. Let any one search for the commencement of any one or all of these great reforms, and they will find in the beginning only a few persons were interested. Herein is exhibited the spirit of the moral hero. What daring, what all-controlling love of the right to array one's self alone against the long standing crimes of a nation!

In studying the lives of the reformers of this century, I find that not only morally but intellectually and in culture, they were far above and in advance of the great mass of society. There was a host of presidents and collegiate professors, among whom was pre-eminently the Hon. Horace Mann. In 1852 I visited Mr. Mann at his own home in Massachusetts, and I found in him excellencies of an extraordinary character. I confess that I fell into a profound passion of love toward him. He was a goodly man to look upon. Benevolence was radiant in his expressive face, and the law of kindness was on his lips. I have his great speech in the House of Representatives in 1849 on slavery in the United States. For unveiling the horrors of the slave system, its scathing denunciation of its defenders, its contrast with the progress and charities of the age, and with our professions of liberty, the kinship of our national practice with the darkest and most savage portion of the globe, with its chaste and classical style, all prove Mr. Mann to have been a worthy successor of his renowned predecessor, ex-President John Q. Adams. His first speech in the legislature of Massachusetts was in favor of religious liberty. He was an advocate of temperance. He founded the State Lunatic asylum. He was president of the State Senate. For eleven years he was secretary of the Board of Education, and devoted his whole time to its interest. During those eleven years he worked fifteen hours a day. He introduced normal schools and paid committees and visited educational institutions in Europe, the report of which was published on both sides of the Atlantic. At the close of his Congressional term he was elected president of Antioch college, Ohio, where both sexes were received to the benefits of his vast learning until his death, August 2, 1859, at the age of 63. He justly deserves a place among the moral heroes of the nation.

SECRET SOCIETIES DISCUSSED IN THE COVENANTER SYNOD.

The Reformed Presbyterian (Covenant) Synod met in Newburgh, Orange County, New York, June 1, and adjourned June 8. About 155 delegates were present, ministers and elders. The subject of Secret Societies occupied part of Monday morning's session, June 6, and also Monday evening. The following is the report of the evening session:

Synod held a special session at 7:30 p. m., and was opened with prayer by the Rev. D. H. Coulter of Kansas.

The roll was called by the clerk and the minutes of the afternoon session were read.

The court had before it the unfinished business of the morning, which was the report of the Committee on Secret Societies, read by the Rev. D. S. Faris of Sparta, Ill.

The resolutions on secretism are as follows:

1. That secret orders of which perpetual secrecy is an essential characteristic are because of their secrecy immoral, selfish and unjust, and they are degrading and ensnaring to the conscience of their members.
2. That in addition to the secrecy of these fraternities many of them are Christless, yet counterfeited the worship of the church and obstruct her work and for this reason as well as for their secrecy the members of such societies ought not to be admitted to her fellowship.
3. That we enjoin the courts of this church to refuse admission to the privileges of the church to the members of all secret orders and to exclude from membership those, if any, who may have crept in unawares.
4. That we are encouraged by the signs of the times to persevere in our testimony, inasmuch as some are encouraged to leave the lodge and many without courage to renounce, yet intimate their willingness to have freemen carry on the warfare till victory is won.

In the discussion which followed Rev. D. S. Faris said: Every church ought to exclude members of secret societies from their fellowship.

Dr. McAllister said: When men come together for any special purpose, whether of a social, commercial, political or religious nature, they lay down certain principles as a basis, either expressed or implied. When therefore there is a basis laid down which takes special pains to exclude Christianity, its law and founder, it cannot be accepted or endured by a Christian. Every Christian must protest against this. In these secret societies Christ is ignored. This is not neutrality. This is direct rebellion against Christ.

Dr. H. H. George said there should be a discrimination made between secret societies. Some societies that are called secret are not the immoral and Christless institutions others are, but are corporations as other secular corporations. There is some difference between Freemasons and the Royal Arcanum; between Odd-fellows and Knights of Labor. The oath-bound societies are contemplated in this resolution, and to these we refer and concerning which we speak to-night. Freemasonry is a religion. They say it is not, but their acts prove that it is. They propose to read the Bible and at funerals to conduct religious services. Mackey, the acknowledged authority, calls it a religion, and there are thousands who say that Masonry is a good enough religion for them, and their books claim that it prepares men for the holy temple above. Its aims and designs and declarations are a religion designed to catch men, and it is a delusion and a snare. They are not only a religion but a Christless religion. They have no Christ in their fundamental constitution. They actually take the Bible and go through it and cut out every reference to Christ. Their books say that they do it because their basis is so wide that they have to admit Christians and Jews, infidels, Mohammedans and all manner of persons. The Masonic Scriptures are a Christless Scriptures and I know just what I am saying. If there are any secret society men in the Covenant church they have crept in unawares with a lie upon their lips. The Masonic lodge and all oath-bound societies are antagonistic to the church of Christ, and men cannot conscientiously belong to both. It is either God or Mammon—Christ or the devil. The one is earthly, the other is heavenly. The instrumentality of the one is material, the other spiritual.

The Rev. D. McFall, of Boston, said it is useless for men to claim that Masonry is not a religion. It is admitted to be such by the highest Masonic authorities. They declare plainly and positively that it is a religion. What is the nature of the religion? Is it Christian? They do not claim that it is. They claim that it is the religion in which all men can agree. That is not the Christian religion. They borrow from the Christian religion. They forgive sins; they propose to regenerate men and build men up in the new life. They have altars and prayers but their prayers are not admitted in Christ's name, and none of these prayers can go to God, the Father. The only relieving thing about these prayers is that they are no prayers at all, but that renders them blasphemous, and for ministers, and especially Presbyterian ministers, to play at this thing is simply awful. Let us go to the manuals of Freemasonry to ascertain the nature of its religion. Its accepted standards show that its religion is not the Christian religion. It is a religious institution, but its religion is false. No man would be permitted to belong to two different congregations in Newburgh at the same time though both might be Christian churches. How much less should a man be permitted to belong at the same time to a Christless lodge and a Christian church. For a man to belong to both is to pray to the devil and to Christ at the same time.

At the close of the discussion the report with its resolutions were unanimously adopted.

"HAS ODD-FELLOWSHIP EVER DONE ANY GOOD?"

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

This question, raised by Mrs. W. V. Hunt, perhaps demands some kind of reply. It may seem arrogant in me to attempt an answer, but what I may say on the subject, will not hinder an "able writer" from giving a better showing of the subject.

In treating this question we should grant all that can be claimed, in truth, in behalf of the order. As the question is stated at the head of this article, it should be answered in the affirmative. Do we know of any society on earth that has never done any good? Perhaps no such society ever existed. While social compacts profess good objects and ends, there are none, we presume, purely malignant. The very worst organization known may have fed and sheltered its thousands and in many other ways given sympathy and aid to the suffering and needy.

Tested by the question as stated, not a society could be condemned, if doing some good at some time be a justification of their existence.

Suppose a society whose annual income runs into the millions, and that spends about one-third of its funds in charity, and that much of this is not applied to real charity, if any part is; and suppose that the charity fund so-called, is all paid in by the men who have a right to draw from these funds, in their own behalf or of their family; then where is the charity? But it does them good more or less. While our missionary organizations use about 6 per cent. in the agencies to run the organizations, which is collected from those who lay no claim to the benefits, and receive none, this other order spends at least 60 per cent. of the funds in running the machine, while less than 40 per cent. gets around to those who paid in said funds—some get more and some less than they paid in.

Allowing that such a society as Odd-fellowship has any right to exist at all, it would be on the ground that a very poor tool is better than none. But these clans are good tools, not for noble and beneficent ends, but for ignoble and selfish ones. They are wisely adapted to the specific ends contemplated by the "prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience." As an agency for benevolence, they are as "Boss Tweed" for economy and equity—a sham and a fraud. In her statement of the subject further along (see Cynosure March 3), our friend Mrs. Hunt takes right ground. In the statement that "all the good Odd-fellows have done, could have been done just as well without their being Odd-fellows, therefore Odd-fellowship is not a necessary means to an end," viz., charity or benevolence, is true. More is true. All the good they do could be better done tenfold by doing the work as Christians, by the Christian rule.

The central question at issue in said discussion by Mrs. Hunt and Odd-fellows is, is there sufficient reason why such orders should exist? The basic principle of all secret clans is one and the same, selfishness, the very opposite of charity and benevolence. They all have one cardinal virtue. "The virtue indispensably requisite in Masons is secrecy." (See Macoy's Masonic Manual, p. 14.) All besides is subordinate. What a religion! "Better than the church" and so takes the money and the work out of the hands of the church. What shameful arrogance! Does God the Son know how to legislate for the world and for his people? O no, secretism arrogates to itself the secret of the world's amelioration and salvation! Jesus "said nothing in secret" and according to Masonic orthodoxy, was not fitted for the "King in Zion." Had he been the embodiment of secrecy, the fundamental virtue of Masonry and all other similar clans, then his name might have been retained in the Scripture quotation found in Masonic manuals, from which that blessed name is by Masonic law expunged. And now after seventeen centuries of Christian endeavor, an institution born and nursed in Appletree tavern, a grogery in Covent Garden, London, comes to the rescue with its religion in which all men agree (?), excluding by its fundamental laws four-fifths of the human family! The Gospel of Christ, which is the universal religion in every needed sense, is outdone and made obsolete, according to the books on Masonry, by a system invented by a pack of tipplers, and containing in its fundamental law, the decalogue of pandemonium. Masonic law, I solemnly aver in the sacred name of truth, makes provision to break every rule of the Ten Commandments; and I hold myself amenable to make full proof of the allegation. Odd-fellowship is simply a kind of Masonic cigarette, for Masonic children to initiate into the denser smoke of the pit—secretism.

Of the necessity and the use of these things I would say, they are not needed to meet any praise-worthy or legitimate end whatever. Every one of them is born from the cancerous womb of selfishness, pride, profanity and lust. Some better souls have been sadly duped by them, and, thank God, are coming out from them, and renouncing them. As impure water runs from a corrupt fountain, as impure desires and evil words flow from putrid souls, so these moral pests are a sort of moral necessity, growing out of the great deep of human depravity. Hence Jesuitism, the model of secretism, Mormonism, Anarchism, Ku-Klux, etc. All have the best of reasons, as they claim, for their existence, however absurd they appear to right reason. As alcoholic stimulants are required by a pampered and perverted appetite, so secret clans are demanded by a cannish selfishness. The Gospel of Christ is all-sufficient for man, socially and morally. Lodgery, with all its machinery, is to our race a curse.

N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY AND GENERAL AGENT OF THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, JUNE 16TH, 1887.

Brethren and Fellow-workers:—Business details of the year will appear in the reports of your Board of Directors, Treasurer and Publisher. I need only to say that amicable relations have existed among the employes of the Association and that the advance has been quiet but steady during the year. Not all has been achieved that could be desired, but the sowing and the early fruitage are alike prophetic of the coming harvest.

Immediately following the last annual meeting I visited so far as I could the pastors and other prominent clergymen in this city to ascertain their views upon the secret lodge system, and if possible to enlist their sympathies and co-operation in a general meeting to discuss the relation of the lodge to the Christian religion and civil liberty. In every instance I met with a courteous reception and in some with a most hearty welcome. There was no lack of sympathy on the part of the clergymen, for most spoke freely from observation and some from personal experiences of the pernicious effects of the orders, but they were not so ready to publicly and aggressively assail the hidden foe. I was convinced that the ministers of Chicago, with a few exceptions, are in heart opposed to the whole lodge system, and that when the issue is made and the battle set in array, they will stand on the Lord's side, cost them what it may. I was further convinced that very few have any just conception of what the lodge is. Said a doctor of divinity to me: "I took three degrees in Masonry and consider it superlative nonsense, and since I was converted I have never been near them." When I spoke to him of the anti-Christian features of the lodge and showed him how Masonry mutilated the Scriptures, he confessed his entire ignorance of its religious character and admitted that there might be objections more serious than he had apprehended. Another man in the same denominational connection stated in the presence of some who are here to-day, "I used to look upon Freemasonry as tomfoolery, but when they laid the corner-stone to our postoffice I began to investigate and I am convinced that the religion of Masonry is paganism, and that while we are raising money and sending men abroad to convert the heathen we are raising up a generation of idolaters in our own land. Yes, in our churches." This difference of opinion was not because one man was a Christian and the other was not. Both are men of prayer and piety, but one was informed, the other was not. One had been "entered an apprentice, passed to the degree of a Fellow Craft, and raised to the sublime degree of a Master Mason," and was disgusted. The other had learned its philosophy and penetrated the veil of its religious mysteries. They represent two classes, the ignorant and those who have discovered the real secrets and true character of the lodge system. Good men and especially men of piety need only to be informed to see in this intricate and widely extended combination a "system of iniquity" in which men "sacrifice to devils" and the heart is estranged from God and wedded to Baal.

The first meeting which I attended this year was a conference of United Brethren at Fairmount, Indiana, July 20th-22nd. It was to protest against what is known as the "Commission" invasion by which the Secret Empire is seeking to obtain control of this influential branch of Christ's church. Other questions were involved, but the pivotal point was, Shall the lodge be sheltered and nourished in the bosom of the United Brethren church, or shall the old constitution be retained and adhering members of lodges be excluded. The attendance was good from several distant States. The discussions were able and the spirit excellent. There was no bitterness shown towards their opponents, but a determined purpose to accept no compromise of principle but to maintain the old landmarks was apparent. As a representative of the National Christian Association I was accorded every privilege that could be desired and can assure you that in the radical element of the United Brethren church our cause has some of its warmest friends. Just now these brethren are engrossed with the distracted condition of their church, yet they are in full sympathy with us and fighting the battle along the line of their specialty towards a common victory.

In connection with this meeting I held others at different points, and although Indiana has not kept an agent in the past year as at some former years, yet there are aggressive movements at some points and a promising field for work all over the State.

On the way to the Iowa State convention I stopped at Denmark where I spoke four times in the oldest Congregationalist church west of the Mississippi river. The fifth was a union service held in the Baptist church. It was here that I met one of those rare specimens which are becoming less common, a deacon who believed in Knight Templarism and said if he had not joined the lodge he would never have been converted.

The State meeting at Birmingham, August 27, 28 and 29, opened with a full house and a characteristic speech by Pres. C. A. Blanchard. The interest continued through the two days, the last evening being the most enthusiastic of any in the series. Official statements in the Grand Lodge reports of Iowa show that the membership has steadily diminished in the Birmingham lodge since the discussion began there, and it would no doubt have long since died had it not been sustained by outside influences. Bro. Hawley had arranged for and worked up this convention and has since been pushing the work forward with success in the State.

Passing from Birmingham to Kansas I stopped at College Springs, preaching once and giving two lectures on the lodge. It was at this time that I last met Father Leuty, whose piety was deep and fervent, whose convictions were strong and invariably followed by decisive action, whose liberality in support of his principles was always in proportion to his means, and whose life was in every sense a success and whose death was a victory. He rests from his labors but the work he loved goes forward.

The attendance on the State convention at Rusco, Kansas, was not large, but the evening audiences were fair. Bros. P. S. Peemster and R. Loggan were present and spoke hopefully of the work at some points in Kansas, although stringency in finances and short crops had produced a feeling of depression that made people cautious and rendered it difficult to secure necessary funds. The lodge has feeders that run to every fountain of nutrition in the land, except the "fountain of life," and seems to flourish when other interests languish.

Next in order came the Illinois State convention at Princeton, Sept. 21, 22 and 23. This is one of the strongholds of Masonry and the home of many leading spirits in the order. I preceded the convention a few days, to look up friends and do what I might to awaken an interest. The convention was a success and well attended from first to last, the hall being packed at evening sessions. Bro. Barlow presided and gave the opening address, full of points and comprehensive in its scope. The speakers at this meeting were Dr. Wishart, Rev. Wm. Pinkney, Rev. C. B. Eby, Mrs. Prof. O. F. Lumry, and Pres. C. A. Blanchard. Bro. I. R. B. Arnold added greatly to the attraction and utility of the meetings by his illustrated lectures on the lodge. We found in Princeton some godly and faithful women whose hands were strengthened and hearts encouraged and whose prayers and labors are with us.

Bro. J. F. Browne spent some months in Wisconsin, and arranged a meeting at Waupun, Oct. 19, 20 and 21. With more zeal than discretion the craft planned to make trouble at this meeting, but by the wise forethought of Bro. Britten and others a quantity of bad eggs stored back of the hall were discovered and destroyed; and thus deprived of their favorite weapons the lodge made no direct assault, but contented themselves by placarding the town with a scurrilous circular, hooting and throwing a few stones at the delegates as they passed from the hall.

Friends in Michigan have not been idle. Their State convention held in the Wesleyan church near Williamston, Oct. 12, 13 and 14, was of unusual spiritual power. As we were returning together Pres. C. A. Blanchard remarked, "I believe the religious tone and power of the meeting was equal to any I have ever attended." In a prosperous rural district where the Wesleyan element predominates and with Bro. H. A. Day in the lead, it could scarcely have been otherwise. Rev. Mr. Wilkinson brought greetings from the friends in Canada and by the recital of facts and clear and incisive remarks contributed in no small degree to the deep interest and devout earnestness of the meetings. Bro. Wilkinson has the ability and piety which make him successful in "winning souls," but his ability and success are no shield against the malignant shafts of the enemy who fights under cover, and his opposition to the lodge has provoked relentless hostility and furnished conclusive evidence of the genuine quality of his work.

I spent a portion of November with Bro. Byron Tunnick at Schuyler's Lake, N. Y., where he has been holding his ground for years against fearful odds. Here as everywhere I found friends when once the cause was introduced, and at the end of my stay was assured of a warm reception and an open door at the M. E. church should I return.

The friends in Ohio have sustained an agent in the field during the greater part of the year, and as a result there has been a steady and healthy growth. Their convention was at Greenfield, Dec. 15th and 16th. The weather and roads were both unfavorable to a large local attendance from the surrounding country, but there was no lack of spirit on the part of those who attended. There was no complaining of the past, contention about the present or gloomy forebodings for the future, but a united and firm resolve to maintain the advance taken and push the war into the very heart of the Secret Empire. The work of the year and the condition of the field and finances, as reported by the lecturer and agent, were matters of encouragement, and the addresses of Daniel Hill and Dr. McMill impressed me as possessed of more than ordinary merit.

From Greenfield I went directly to Knoxville, Tenn., where I met Bro. Hinman and began work on the 18th of December. The next day being Sabbath I preached in Knoxville College chapel to a large and intelligent audience, most of whom were colored and students. Dr. McCullough, who is at the head of this United Presbyterian college, does not shut to declare the whole counsel of God or shrink from the maintenance of unpopular truths.

In Knoxville city churches I found the "color line" practically in force, and the same exclusiveness prevailed in the lodges. With the exception of the Episcopal minister, all the white pastors I met were opposed to the lodge and only four had ever belonged. Three of these had taken one degree to their disgust, and the other is the one before mentioned. The colored pastors had not been so fortunate. With a single exception all whom I met had belonged to one or more of the secret orders and some to a number. Those who did not approve had been almost compelled by the prevailing sentiment to join some order to escape ostracism and actual persecution by their own members. Said Mr. Russell, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of colored Masons in Tennessee, "When our people were freed at the close of the war they were ignorant, and colored men came among them from the North and organized lodges and filled this country full of orders. They got rich by swindling our people and then went back North to enjoy their money." He added, "I allowed myself to be re-elected Grand Master under protest, and I have deliberately made up my mind to sever my connection with the lodge at the close of my official term and will have nothing more to do with them. I am convinced that the lodge is at present the greatest obstacle in the way of the advancement of our people. It is occupying their time, absorbing their thoughts and taking their money without doing them any good." Similar views were expressed by Bishop Turner of Georgia, who chanced to be in Knoxville, and had severed his connection with twelve of the thirteen different societies to which he had once belonged. From the testimony gathered in personal conference with ministers in Knoxville and at other points I am confident that a reaction has begun and that the field among the colored people at the South is ripe and ready for the harvest.

The anniversary of the National Christian Association was held in Library Hall, Knoxville, Dec. 28th and 29th, President McCullough, D. D., presiding. This meeting has already been so fully reported in the Cynosure that I need not repeat what most of you have read. The attendance was not large for a national gathering, but as a first attempt in the Southern States the meeting may justly be considered a success.

I spent some weeks in the South visiting pastors and educational centres, speaking and distributing tracts as I found opportunity. At Maryville I spoke in the Presbyterian College, in Friends' school for colored pupils, and gave one lecture in the Second Presbyterian church, Jan. 5 and 6. On the 9th and 10th I spoke at Warner Institute for colored pupils at Jonesboro, under the management of Mrs. Mary Anderson. January 16th, 17th and 18th I spent at Berea, Kentucky, addressing the students and citizens at four different gatherings. No restrictions were made at any of these institutions and I spoke with the utmost freedom and without apparent offence to any one. The presidents and their associates seemed to be in perfect accord with the principles of our Association in condemning the secret lodge system, and not only willing but anxious to have the subject presented to their students.

Bro. Hinman, whose work and worth will never be fully comprehended until the final review, has been abundant in labors on the Southern field, and at each of these institutions as well as everywhere I went there were most gratifying results of his labors.

Bro. Geo. W. Clark began his Southern tour at Lexington. He attended and was very helpful in the Knoxville convention and accompanied me at several of my meetings and when we parted he went farther South to spend several weeks in singing and talking the gospel of total abstinence from lodge, liquor and tobacco. Advanced in years and feeble in health he was nevertheless sustained to accomplish a wonderful work.

I reached Chicago Jan. 21st and was directed by your Board to co-operate with the committee appointed to call and arrange for a Congress of Churches and Christians to be held in this city. As the members of this committee were occupied with other matters it fell to my lot to look after the details of this movement and see that their plans were carried out so far as possible. My time was mainly occupied in this way up to the close of the Congress, which completed its sessions on the evening of March 31st last with most gratifying results. The original conception of this Congress was with Pres. J. Blanchard, who traveled thousands of miles, interviewed many leading clergymen, wrote scores of letters, and labored indefatigably for its success. He secured the written endorsement of prominent men whose names appeared in the call, and gave his hearty co-operation to the committee in the arduous task assigned them. Calvin W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker, and chairman of the Committee of Arrangements, and Pres. L. N. Stratton, D. D., its secretary, were instant in season and labored with a determined devotion that was a prophecy of success from the moment they entered upon their work. Others co-operated nobly and by persistent and united effort the many obstacles were surmounted and the movement consummated in a grand success. This body had considered and taken action in approval of this Congress at two annual sessions and while conceding all control to others, by your action and by vote of your Board of Directors you had generously given the influence of the National Christian Association, the voice of its organ and an assurance of financial help if needed, to further its objects and without which supports the effort would have seemed impracticable. The result has in my judgment fully confirmed the wisdom of your action, and should be followed by other meetings of a similar character whenever practicable.

Since the Congress I have spoken in Clinton and Burlington, Iowa, and delivered eight discourses in and near Salem among Friends in the same State. My last trip was to Michigan partly on business for the Association, and partly to visit and speak to Friends near Ypsilanti.

In reviewing the year I see everywhere, evidences of the divine favor and abundant reason for devout gratitude, and in looking to the future I discern difficulties to encounter, but less cause for distrust than ever before. The opposition against which we contend is hydra-headed and when smitten upon one front it changes to a thousand Protean forms. But in whatever shape it appears its animus and venom are the same. As the good is pushed to the front the incorrigibly bad waxes worse and worse, and a radical change cannot long be delayed; and it is the work of the National Christian Association to move in conjunction with all reformers and reforms pressing its special mission of exposing, withstanding and seeking the removal of all secret societies, that "the kingdom and dominion and greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens" may be given unto Him whom the lodge rejects, and the human race become one brotherhood, not of sworn confederates, but of redeemed and blood-washed souls.

In the work of the year the Christian Cynosure has borne a leading and commendable part. To its influence is due more than to any other single agency the development of sentiment opposed to the lodge in the South. In saying this I do not disparage the labors of Bro. Hinman and those who have stood heroically with him on the field. Both alike have been good. But the Cynosure, with its weekly record of news from home and foreign fields, its historic gleanings and solid arguments, its expositions of the schemes of the crafts and warnings against their wily arts must do more to educate and impel men to action than any transient agent, however faithful. Special contributions for the purpose have enabled your publisher to furnish a limited number to pastors unable to pay, and no investment has brought greater returns. I would recommend that friends be asked to increase their contributions for this purpose, and that if need be appropriations be made from the general funds of the Association to supply pastors of limited means with the Cynosure, and that pastors so supplied be required to preach at least one sermon a year to each of their congregations on the secret lodge system, and forward an outline of their sermons along with the texts to this office. In this way facts furnished to pastors would in some measure reach the people and a wider influence be gained.

If possible a wider circulation of your organ should be secured in the North as well as at the South. I am of the opinion that the plan of last year to aid States sustaining an agent to the amount of $25 per month in new subscribers has been reasonably successful and that it may profitably be continued; but neither the efforts of agents, of the publisher, or of your editors and directors can solve this question unaided by the people. The question is in my judgment a vital one and can be solved in one way, viz., by the present subscribers taking hold of the work in downright earnest and doubling or trebling the list before January 1st, 1888. If the united wisdom of this body can suggest any practicable means for extending the circulation of its organ it should by all means do so.

I would further recommend that Elder H. H. Hinman be continued in the field as during the year past, and that Rev. B. A. Imes be employed to work for the Association; and, in case his services cannot be obtained, some other competent minister be employed to labor in the South. The South seems to be just now a land of Providential and wonderful opportunities and I would recommend that the next National Anniversary Convention of the N. C. A. be held during the coming winter in New Orleans or some other city or center of influence as the way may be open.

It is due to Bro. I. R. B. Arnold that mention should be made of his work. Though not employed by the N. C. A., he has been encouraged and aided by your Board in securing a tent and the necessary outfit for his line of work. His accommodations for seating six hundred proved to be inadequate and he has found it necessary to enlarge his tent to meet the demands of the crowds that gather, even in this busy season of the year, to witness a pictorial exhibition and listen to illustrated lectures on the temples and religious symbolisms of ancient and modern lodge worship. The attendance and attention at his meetings, usually held for one week in each place, are sufficient proof of their efficiency, and it might be well for this body to give some expression of your estimate of his plan of work. Possibly, too, something more might be done to extend the circulation of anti-secretary literature in connection with these tent meetings.

In closing I will simply allude to one encouraging fact that does not properly appear in your treasurer's report. I refer to provisions made in the wills of some of our friends by which their means will remain to represent them and sustain their principles when they shall have ceased from their labors. Contributions in cash have not been as large during the past as in some former years, but all demands have been promptly and satisfactorily met, and in humble reliance upon Him whose promises you have already proven and whose support is assured unto the faithful and obedient who "devise liberal things" you may plan for the enlargement of the work committed to your care, knowing that a liberal sowing will be followed by bountiful harvests, in which they that sow and they that reap shall alike be rewarded.

J. P. STODDARD.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

REPORT OF BUSINESS, RESOLUTIONS, ETC.

The thirteenth annual business meeting of the National Christian Association was called to order promptly on Thursday, June 16th, and in the absence of Dr. H. H. George, president of the Association, Rev. M. A. Gault, vice-president, took the chair and conducted the opening devotional exercises by reading from the second chapter of second Timothy. Prayer was offered by Rev. A. J. Chittenden.

The roll-call was responded to by twenty members, and several others came in later. Secretary Stoddard reported letters received from sixteen other members, and as subsequent letters might be received, the Corresponding Secretary was requested to keep a record of them. On a recommendation by L. N. Stratton and J. Blanchard the following new members were voted upon and accepted: Calvin W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker, W. T. Ellis, editor Fire and Hammer, Edgar Wylie, Mrs. W. I. Phillips and Mrs. L. N. Stratton.

The report of the Corresponding Secretary and General Agent was read and referred to a committee on business. The chair appointed on Business committee: Pres. C. A. Blanchard, John Gardner and Edgar Wylie; on committee on Nominations: M. R. Britten, W. W. Blanchard and A. J. Chittenden. Bro. Britten was excused at his special request, and E. A. Cook selected by the body.

The Treasurer, W. I. Phillips, presented his annual report, which was received and accepted, and referred to the business committee. The business committee reported the following recommendations:

The Committee on Business to whom was referred the report of the General Agent, beg leave respectfully to report as follows:

We recommend that Bro. Hinman be continued as an Agent of the Association.

We also recommend that the Board of Directors employ Rev. B. A. Imes of Memphis, or some other competent man, to labor especially among the colored people of the South.

We also recommend that the provision to aid States employing agents by giving to them twenty-five dollars per month, to be paid in new subscriptions to the Christian Cynosure, be continued.

We also recommend that the next Annual Convention be held in New Orleans or some other city of the South, provided efficient labor can precede its gathering.

We learn that Mr. Ezra A. Cook of Chicago is willing to aid each State by donations of books to agents by said States employed. We advise that a definite statement respecting this offer be secured and frequently inserted in the Cynosure.

We recommend that the report of the General Agent be approved, and that the thanks of the body be tendered him; and also to the remaining officers of the Association and the editors of the Cynosure, for their faithful and efficient service during the year past.

This report was approved without much debate. These propositions have been for some time approved by the experience of the Association.

In the afternoon the business committee made an additional report as follows:

In the matter of the Washington Building your Committee respectfully report:

1. That they have examined the report of Rev. E. D. Bailey, editor of the American, and are gratified with the progress which the cause is making in Washington and vicinity.

2. That we are not, without farther information, able to say whether in our judgment the work done by the American is the best possible return for the amount of money invested in the building or not.

3. We advise that the present arrangement with Bro. Bailey be continued until otherwise ordered by the Board of Directors, to whom we advise the question as to the disposition of that building be referred.

CONCERNING THE CYNOSURE.

We are glad to learn that the subscription list of the Christian Cynosure is in so satisfactory a condition. We find, however, that there are a large number of delinquents, and that some of them are of long standing; we, therefore, recommend that the publisher be instructed to purge the list of such delinquents as carefully and judiciously as possible, and that the Board of Directors be requested to give immediate, and if necessary, protracted attention to the development of field work and canvassers for the Cynosure.

This report was also passed without objection, there being no changes recommended in the disposal of the Washington building or the business management of the Cynosure, except to increase the responsibility of the Board.

The report of the committee on Nominations was then received and accepted. The report made little change in the list from last year and is as follows:

For President, Rev. H. H. George, D. D.
For Vice-president, Rev. M. A. Gault.
Corresponding Secretary and General Agent, J. P. Stoddard.

Recording Secretary and Treasurer, W. I. Phillips.
Directors: Alexander Thomson, M. R. Britten, John Gardner, C. W. Pritchard, L. N. Stratton, Thomas H. Gault, C. A. Blanchard, Joseph E. Roy, E. R. Worrell, H. A. Fischer, W. R. Hench.

The report met no objections, but Bro. Britten wished if possible to be excused as he contemplated removing from the vicinity of Chicago and would not probably be long able to serve on the Board. He was requested by all that his name remain, and

CORRESPONDENCE.

IT IS TIME TO WORK, MEN OF THE NORTH.

PINE BLUFF, Ark.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The cry of this quarter is for "light," and by all means they should have that—so desirable. Many young men are desiring to know what society to join. I notice that most of the lodges are made up of young men, in many cases students from the country. When asked how they came to join, the answer is almost the same in each case, "I heard it was a good thing," a "passport to society," "bring friends in sickness." Some one has kindly sent us some copies of the Liberator. Father Geo. W. Clark sent some tracts and Rev. C. C. Foote some papers, for which thanks. All came in time to do good, only not enough to go round.

Eight young men asked me last week, what society shall I join? One asked me if I was a Mason. I requested him to try me, prove me, or disprove me. But he said, "I and one and I thought you are one, for you go right along then."

I answered him then, "I am not."
"Well, how did you become so bright then?"

I was on the train the other night. The porter of the sleeping coach saw me, took a seat and talked right along; told me of the Memphis trouble, of the Knights of Wise Men, the Odd-fellows, etc., too much to write, and if written would cause him to appear as one who had lost a jewel. One thing he told, amused me: it was the initiation of a friend of mine, who is six feet three inches in his socks and strong as an ox. He raved and tore round and threatened his tormentors with shot guns if he had to hunt them all day long. As they were making him swear, he swore he would send them to their master, the devil, by the shortest cut; but they gave him the jewel of a silent tongue, and how do you think he got it? They bucked him, gagged him, rolled him in a corner, and as they passed him in the initiation of others, they would thump him as one tries a water melon and he would not say a word. They would stick pins in him and he would only twitch a little. Say nothing would he, a jewel he had, a silent tongue secured by a gag. I can not tell all, but I think I'll get him to renounce the lodge.

A member of my Sabbath-school said the other day, "Mr. J—, I joined the Knights of Labor."

"How do you like the order?" I asked.

"What I have seen so far disgusts me," he replied.

"How is that; how can it be so?"

"Why it is nothing but a hooting mob. You can't hear; it is worse than a bought-up township convention all the time. Then you always have to pay this assessment and that, and I don't see any good it does. They are no good—that's my opinion, and if I had taken your advice I would be three or four dollars ahead. I think I'll draw out. I don't want to mix up with them." His opinion is the opinion of many, for some in the white lodge wish to rule them; they have two lodges, one for white and one for colored.

Dr. Talmage's sermon was received with diffidence by many in this section. They who read the Cynosure thought he was handling a subject he did not understand; and true, great men are not always wise, and many a sermon that takes well is but a fortieth dilution of theology.

Those churches in this section and also stores that consented to give the upper stories to the lodge, are having trouble each in their turn.

A vigorous fight aided by newspapers and tracts would place this county in a better shape than some would expect to see. There are some strong men here that have their eyes opened and are not afraid to open their mouths, thanks to the Cynosure. Among them we find Revs. A. M. Middlebrooks, J. C. Buttes, J. C. Rodgers, Geo. Robinson, and Flagg. We long to see the battle pushed; it devolves on the men of the North to do this; and the sooner they commence the more will be saved from falling into the snare set for the unwary. Now is the formative period with this, our people; may they find favor in the sight of those able to mold aright. God bless his chief agent, the Cynosure. LEWIS JOHNSTON.

A SOUTHWESTERN SCHOOL NEEDS HELP.

PARIS, TEXAS, June 11, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR:—It has been some time since I have written; but it has only been for the want of time, not that I have lost interest.

I have been for sometime back interested in the education and elevation of my people in this city, and am more so now than ever. We have in this city 883 youths between the ages of seven and fifteen; and then a large number of young men and women who are thinking of getting an education. Out of this number of not less than twelve or fifteen hundred, we have one public school with an attendance of a little over three hundred. I have been teaching a private school with an enrollment of something over seventy. There are a very large number of the families who will not send their children to a public school, and then there are a great many who wish to go to school but are over the school age. This makes at least half of the young people of the city, to say nothing of those in the surrounding country, for whom no school is provided. We have a good lot and four school rooms on it, that can be used until we can do better. It is the place where the public school was held for several years until last year. This lot has been given to the colored people of Paris for educational purposes. If we could get some of our friends North to help us get a start in the way of improving the building some, and the salary for the principal for a year or so, I am sure we could enter upon a powerful work here, that would do untold good.

I see Bro. Gunner is doing all he can at New Iberia, La., to get such a school as we want here. I know Mr. Gunner well; we are both from the same school (Talladega), and I believe he has the interest of his race at heart; and I therefore hope his work may be a success. It would not cost more than half as much to start a school here as it will in New Iberia. They have everything to buy to begin with, while our lot and buildings are here; I think that $100 would be all that we would want to spend on the house now.

I hope you will be pleased at least to think of what I have tried to say to you on this subject as it seems to me important.

I believe nothing is doing my people so much harm as the lodge. They will leave the church any time to go to their meetings, and to save my life I can see no good they are doing. No man can be a member of the lodge and at the same time be a good member of the Congregational church. He may even be a president of a Georgia College, still if he adheres to the lodge he must be discounted by the church; and I am sure if the A. M. A. knew what the lodge is doing against the progress of the race they are seeking to help, that a pledge never to become a member of one of them would be the first condition to membership, or aid from that society. While they are in the world they belong to the devil, but when they go into the lodge he turns the key on them and says, "Get them if you can." When I find a man who is a member of the lodge I watch him, for I do not believe he is so true as he would be were he out of it. Every minister in this city is in not less than one, and from one to three lodges, and you can see from this that I stand almost alone.

There are four persons in my church which are members of the lodge, and two of them are dead members, and I hope will not be with us much longer, unless they change from what they are now, for they are doing the church no good whatever. After going into an order they may be faithful to the church for a while. But a man is benighted in the lodge as he is able to take the degrees. To get these he must be faithful to the duties of the lodge, and faithfulness to the lodge means to leave off many duties of the church. I see the lodge members leave other duties, it matters not what they are, and go when the call of the lodge is heard.

If you have anything on the "United Brothers of Friendship," and the "M. T." I wish you would send it to me. I am studying this order some. I wish also that you would send the Cynosure to Rev. —, he is a member of three of the orders of the city, but tells me they are a fraud from beginning to end, and that he has made up his mind that they do a preacher no good. I believe the paper will do him good. Yours for the Master,
J. R. McLEAN.

WE WILL NOT FORGET MEMPHIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I wrote you last week giving you an account of the lodge work in the town of Marion, Ark., and how the Pleasant Grove Baptist church at that point was being torn up on account of it. I promised to give you further particulars this week after seeing Elder Robinson, pastor of said church. He has not yet returned to the city, as the Masons had him arrested for disturbing public worship. Now this disturbing public worship was simply a refusal of Elder Robinson to allow some twenty-five Masons to take the church work in their own hands, and depose him from the pastoral charge of the same against the wishes of 800 other persons, members of the same body. So Elder Robinson is held under bond.

Memphis is just now becoming agitated again; tomorrow is the Odd-fellows' grand gala day, and it was an article that appeared in the columns of the Living Way this day two years ago that brought on all the society troubles that it pleased God to carry me through; and, bless his holy name, he brought me out more than conqueror and I sing:

"Thus far the Lord hath led me on."

The Odd-fellows tomorrow, and on the 24th the Masons will be out. They have their posters out, and last night pasted one on the awning post in front of our office door. This morning I covered it with pictures of the third degree. Aside from this, a very interesting fact is that the St. John's Baptist church of the city nearly boiled over last week on this same aggravating lodge question. When Elder Brinkley and I refused to commune with or fellowship the lodgeites in our churches, several of the Baptist ministers together with the Methodist commenced to bid for the members of our churches who belonged to the lodge, and they got them. Two hundred and fifty in all were excluded and left the Tabernacle, and nearly one hundred went from Bro. Brinkley's church. This brother at St. John's was very anxious to increase his membership, and from his pulpit said, "Come on here. We'll take you in. We belong to societies. Come on." On or near the 18th of May the Immaculates, styled the I. O. L., gave their annual picnic. There were nearly one hundred females in the procession rigged out in regalia and hauled through the city behind a band of music and an escort of ungalant Knights a la circus. The preacher assailed this procession from his pulpit as unbecomingly, degrading, and highly improper in Christian women. Now among those who had joined the church was a brother whom we will call Bro. Hate-truth. He was the ring-leader among the lodgeites at Elder Brinkley's church and at the same time he was the clerk of the church. So last Friday night, June 3rd, he arraigned this preacher for heresy, and the preacher's coat was made too warm for him. This Mr. Hate-truth did just what he attempted to do at Bro. Brinkley's. Success was almost sure for his party, and the dear preacher who two years ago wanted the "society folks" can be seen now, and with a tremble in his voice he wants them all out of his church.

At every outbreak in the city I at once become the center of attraction and the object of attack. I do not yet venture out any distance from home after night; my friends do not think it would be safe for me to do so.

The prohibition movement is assuming prodigious proportions, and I am trying to fill my place in that army. I take my stand among the front ranks, for I realize that that is the place for every soldier of Christ. We have added some thirty converts this year, and every one of them are questioned as to their position on secret societies and their position on the liquor question. R. N. COUNTÉE.

THE WORK AND WORKERS IN ARKANSAS.

THE GENERAL MISSIONARY OF THE BAPTIST CHURCHES APPEALS TO US.

MONTICELLO, Ark.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Please accept my thanks for your kindness in sending the paper to so many brethren by my suggestion. I wish it might be placed in the reach of every church, at least in the South. But leaders are not apt to subscribe for a paper that flashes such light upon the indirect paths that they have so long trodden. If I were able I would make every leading man in the State a regular reader of the Cynosure by paying for it myself. The Cynosure has wrought a mighty work in this warfare of reform and yet not a single gun has been heard. The most of my people are very conscientious (except those whose "conscience is seared over with a hot iron") and hence when the Cynosure is read several times in a family or community it has a lasting effect toward lodge and liquor reform.

Traveling over the State as general missionary I have not failed to show how injurious secrecy is to both church and state, and how destructive to health and character is the liquor traffic. These two banes are inseparable. As it has been said to me, my people are "slaves to slavery." They had not learned to enjoy physical freedom ere they had en-chained themselves to a cob-web system of slavery that is unequalled and almost indomitable. But, "Carthage must be destroyed!" If liquor and lodge-ry are allowed to rule church and state as they do, the Revolutionary war and the late Civil war are complete failures. If these evils are to be fostered, it is a shame to mention Washington's sword or Lincoln's pen—indeed it would be sinful mockery to do so.

Bro. Geo. W. Clark "showed up" in song the magnitude of these evils, and many, keeping step with his music, stepped "out from among them." Would that he might sing again.

Rev. H. Woodsmall also has done a work in that way, the value of which can not be easily estimated: for, ingratiating himself into the very hearts of even those that were somewhat "seared over," he has led "out" many and many a one without the slightest contest. Skill is greater than force when gigantic evils are backed by ignorance and prejudice.

I appeal now to those who are friends to reforms like those of our age, that they may contribute in some way toward helping to "turn on the light" in Arkansas, for "my people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Let the Cynosure come to hundreds of Christian leaders. Let temperance literature come for thousands of homes, and "the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ."

Yours for reform,

J. A. BOOKEB,
Headquarters, Helena, Ark.

AMONG THE COLORED CHURCHES OF LOUISIANA.

I noticed in the Cynosure a few weeks ago in an article entitled "Among the Colored Churches of Louisiana," on page 6, signed "J.," that three of the colored churches in Plaquemine would not let me preach in them. Now permit me to say that I have only been denounced and boldly rejected in one church in Plaquemine; of that one I wrote you some time ago. But two of the colored churches there, both of which have secretists as pastors, have never invited me to preach; and another invited me but once.

Since my last writing to you, two ministers, L. V. Collins (Baptist) and Rev. Wilson (A. M. E.) have been evading the county organizing "Jacobs" and "Universal Brotherhoods." It is true many threats have come to my ears since I came up here about preaching against secret sins, but a true minister of Jesus must not mind such foolishness. I am expecting (God helping me) to go to Walnut Hill, and, indeed, if it were not that I am sometimes financially embarrassed, I would traverse every parish in the State. Thank God some few will stand up for truth wherever I speak. You cannot imagine the opposition that arises here against a man who speaks out against secret organizations. My wife visited the Roman Catholic church in Plaquemine last week; and she tells me that the priest upbraided and denounced all secret societies. The colored people here, both male and female, as a rule think it a blessing to join some society, and have a street parade sometimes. Rev. B. Dorsey, A. L. Reese and Chas. Williams are my strongest supporters in the parish. Bro. Hubbs, also, sometimes preaches against secretists, but I have one stronger than them all—"Jesus of Nazareth, King of the Jews." I trust all who read the Cynosure will pray for our deliverance from the lodge and liquor cliques.

FRANCIS J. DAVIDSON.

FAIRCHILD AND TALMAGE.

ROBBINS, Tenn., June 9, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Yesterday a Christian minister said to me: "I joined the Masonic order and took three degrees. Before doing so I asked a professing Christian who was a Mason, 'Is Morgan's exposition true?' He replied, 'No, it is not true.' I joined and found it literally true. At the door I was told that the obligations I should take upon myself would not interfere with my duty as a citizen or a Christian. I found them contrary to my duty in both particulars. I found I was sworn to conceal crime. I found I could not pray in the lodge in the name of Christ. I found that the majority of the members of my lodge were worldly men, and that they trusted in the lodge for salvation. I found that I could not be both a Mason and a Christian, and I left the lodge forever."

Does Mr. Talmage consider this earnest minister of his own denomination a perjurer? Does he believe C. G. Finney was a perjurer? Does he believe that the 45,000 who left the lodge after Morgan's murder were perjurers? He knows they were not.

If Mr. Talmage believes all the good things he says of the lodge, why is he not in it? If the lodge is the best place to plot the overthrow of the devil, what excuse can he as a fighter of the devil give for not entering the lodge. There's a screw loose somewhere. What a difference in tone between Pres. Fairchild's Chicago address—mild, logical, unanswerable, and Talmage's sermon—flashy, fallacious, transparent—bosh! One man believed what he was saying. Which was it?

PITH AND POINT.

RIGHTEOUS INDIGNATION.

I am fully in sympathy with the cause to which so many strong-minded, God-fearing men have given their lives and their fortunes to save the nation from being ruined, and our government overthrown. I believe secret societies are wrong, and tend to evil continually. I sometimes give a public denunciation of them as the Lord helps me. I am filled with indignation towards government officials for their contemptible silence in regard to the evils growing out of secretism; but what better can we expect of them, when they are as deep in the mud, as others are in mire. I believe our government is faulty in allowing such a flood of foreign immigration to our American shores. The scum of all creation coming here expecting protection from the best government under heaven, and then what do we get in turn? Anarchy, murder, and everything that is dishonoring to a wholesome and a Christian nation. May the Lord put to his helping hand before we are overwhelmed with sin and shame, and become a by-word to the Christian world.—MRS. R. E. STEPHEN.

ROB. MORRIS ON THE DIVINITY OF THE BIBLE.

I am very much opposed to societies that are secret in their workings, and I am very much opposed to our preachers "lauding them to the skies." But it seems that our editors are afraid to speak out on this question, and I don't know what can be done about it. Rob. Morris, the celebrated Masonic lecturer, has delivered two addresses here lately, in which he affirmed that "Freemasonry is as divine as the Bible," and that the "God of the Bible is the god of Masonry." This is nothing less than blasphemy, and it merits severest condemnation.—E., Kirkville, Mo.

THE LODGE MUST FALL.

I feel more sure than ever that the whole lodge system must fall, as it is one of Christ's great enemies, which he came to destroy. I am glad to know the truth will triumph, and Jesus will be King of kings and Lord of lords, and that there will be no more Masonry, for the last enemy will be destroyed, which is death, and when they cannot kill Hiram any more there will be no more Masons. I regret that I cannot be at the annual meeting any more. I have had the pleasant privilege of being present the last two years, and wish you great success and pray our Father's blessing upon your deliberations.—H. CURTIS, Olathe, Kan.

MEMORIALIZING NOT IN VAIN.

The convention (Baptist) opens one week from to day, and it will be the twenty-seventh anniversary, and we have memorialized the churches now this nineteenth year, and we are greatly encouraged in view of the progress the anti-secret cause has made, and rejoice that the prohibition sentiments which we introduced are now so generally received, and that all the churches use only unmentioned wine in the Lord's Supper. But many still vote with the liquor parties and do not understand that the night cabal is the strong bulwark of the dram shop.—MRS. M. M. AMES, Menominee, Wis.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON I.—July 3, 1887.—The Infant Jesus.—Matt. 2: 1-12. GOLDEN TEXT.—Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins.—Matt. 1: 21.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Question of the Wise Men. vs. 1-10. The terms, "magi" and "the East," are both very indefinite. These wise men may have come from China, India, Persia, Arabia. All that matters to us is, that guided by a supernatural sign, certain sages, learned in all the mysticism of Oriental philosophy, took a long pilgrimage to worship the infant Christ. There was no place around his cradle for the unsubstantial shows of royalty. All that represented courtly, aristocratic or fashionable life was excluded. It is entirely a figment, and absurd on the face of it, which pictures the wise men with kingly regalia. Labor, in the persons of humble shepherds, gave Christ his first crowning; then came these venerable representatives of the earth's purest culture and highest wisdom, thus indeed fulfilling Isaiah's glorious prophecy, "Kings shall come to the brightness of thy rising,"—the sovereigns of muscle and the sovereigns of brain. He who said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work," is yet to be Labor's acknowledged Head. Their simple question troubled Herod and all Jerusalem. It meant to Herod a rival, the more feared because unknown; to the Jews a political overturning with all its sanguinary accompaniments; to their Roman conquerors, revolt to be put down sternly, mercilessly, as only Rome knew how to put down revolt. To all classes it meant disquiet and ferment,—men's hearts failing them for fear of what might be. When the soul takes Christ for its King, it means the dethroning of its old rulers. It means revolution, it means conflict. Man has been called a fighting animal. He was sent into the world to fight, and he ought to like it, if not better than anything else, at least a great deal better than a state of ignoble peace. Nothing worth having can be gained without contest. No moral or spiritual victory for the individual, no triumph of truth and righteousness for the race, without a battle for the right of way. The wicked, the weak and the unbelieving are troubled by the rising of the star of reform. To them it only portends trouble, but they who wait to see his salvation rejoice, as did the wise men, with exceeding great joy.

2. The Question Answered. vs. 11, 12. The desire to do homage to a mere earthly king, born to rule over a small, tributary Roman province, was very insufficient to take these wise men on such a long and wearisome quest. Without doubt they worshiped him as the Redeemer. As they followed the star, whether we are to believe or not that they were obeying a prophecy of Zoroaster, which bade them look for a divine being who was to come into the world on a mysterious mission that should embrace every people and every race, it is clear that they had some idea of the true grounds on which this baby King of the Jews based his sovereignty. The scene teaches the same missionary lesson with which the Gospel closes, "Go, teach all nations in my name." Do we realize the debt that we owe to other races who began the march of civilization when our Anglo-Saxon ancestors were but a horde of wandering savages? Warned of God in a dream they depart as mysteriously as they came, and Herod's deep-laid scheme to make them his tools in the destruction of the infant Christ was thwarted. It is a true saying that every man is immortal till his work is done. God over protects his own. Not in Mary's arms, but on the cross do we now seek and find the King of the Jews. In the words of Sir John Bowring's beautiful hymn,

"All the light of Christian story Gathers round its head sublime."

And all evil systems, all false beliefs, which rob him of his kingship by making his cross of none effect, we are bound by every tie of Christian loyalty to combat to the end.

From Peloubet's Notes.

PRACTICAL.

Ver. 1. Nature, rightly studied, leads us to God and to Christ.

We must look up to heaven to be guided rightly on earth, as ships are guided on the ocean by the stars.

Those are the only true wise men who use their learning to find out heaven.—W. Austin.

Christ is wont to catch every man in the way of his own craft,—magians with a star, fishers with fish.—Chrysostom.

Those who know about Christ should make every effort to find him. It is worth while to sell all we have to obtain this pearl of great price.

Ver. 3. How often the very persons who live nearest to the means of grace are those who neglect them most!—Ryle.

Wicked men are troubled by that which brings hope to the world,—as by revivals, temperance reform, preaching, and whatever interferes with unrighteous gains and pleasures.

Here is a test of our character,—whether we rejoice or are troubled at the coming of Christ and his kingdom.

The true king is ever a terror to the false king (in our hearts and in the world).—Riddle.

Ver. 6. The true glory of a town or country does not consist in its numbers, but in the men it produces, and the spiritual good which flows from it.

Little Bethlehem became glorious because Christ was born there; but our hearts can become Bethlehems.

Ver. 11. We should bring our best treasures to Jesus. Giving should be made a part of worship. One minister proposed to ask, after every collection in church, "All who have been omitted in the passing of the contribution box will please to rise."

Reverence for the great and good, and worship of God, are marks of true wisdom and greatness.

In this lesson we have 'types of four classes of men which exist still; namely, (1) those who earnestly seek the truth; (2) those who rest in the letter of the truth; (3) those who are fearfully alarmed at the truth; and (4) those who are affectionate guardians of the truth. The magi represent the first, the scribes and Pharisees the second, Herod the third, and Joseph and Mary the fourth.—Thomas's Genesis of the Gospels.

IN BRIEF.

Bishop White, of Pennsylvania, was sitting one day at dinner with that bold and perhaps unscrupulous financier of the Revolutionary times, Robert Morris, when the latter said, "Bishop, I have made my will, and have devised to you all my impudence." "In that case," replied the bishop, "you have certainly left me the greater part of your estate." "Yes, Bishop," interposed Mrs. White; "and it is plain that you have entered immediately upon your inheritance."

In 1869 the criminal population of Great Britain held the proportion of one to every 1,853 inhabitants. This proportion has been steadily reduced until it amounted to only one in 3,069 inhabitants in 1885. The United States in 1850 had a better criminal record than Great Britain has ever been able to show. In that year there was only one criminal to 3,442 inhabitants. But ever since 1850 the rate has been rising. In 1860 it was one in 1,647; in 1870 one in 1,021; in 1880 one in 837. Taking this to be the present proportion, it is not very satisfactory to know that every 837th person one meets is a criminal.

The Chinese are credited with being the first to reduce vegetable matter to the fiber and web which constitute modern paper. According to Gibbon the art of manufacture from this material was introduced from China into Samarcand, a city of Asia Minor, in 651. Here the new method soon took shape and modern paper making became quite an industry in the city. In 704 the Saracens, a fierce, warlike tribe of Arabs, captured the city and learned the art of paper making, which they introduced into Mecca three years later. In 711 they made a descent on Spain, making themselves masters of that country, and established paper making upon a good footing there. By this time raw cotton had become the chief material of manufacture. During the reign of the Saracens and Moors in Spain the industry flourished and paper became the universal writing material. The Spanish introduced cotton rags in 1035 as a material of manufacture, and soon afterward linen rags. This was probably the first use of rags in paper making.

Paper can now be made from almost any fibrous substance, but the chief material of manufacture still remains rags, straw, old paper, cotton waste, manilla, jute, esparto grass, wood pulp and chemicals. The introduction of wood pulp into paper making is the most important improvement made in the manufacture within the last half-century, for without it the immense editions of the great dailies would be impossible, and that wonderful piece of mechanism and ingenuity, the web perfecting or "lightning" press a dead letter. Paper made entirely from rags does not take as kindly to printers' ink as is desirable and has a tendency to clog the type, necessitating frequent stoppages of the press to wash off the clogging in running off a large edition. Paper containing wood pulp has a natural affinity to printer's ink and receives the impression almost instantaneously, without the least soiling or clogging of the type or stereotype plate.

Many years ago the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company proposed to build a road from Wheeling to Baltimore through the southwestern counties of Pennsylvania. The project aroused opposition along the proposed line as vehement as that with which our fathers met the tyrannous acts of England. So furious did it become that the company were compelled to abandon the proposed route for the present far less favorable one through Virginia. Though perhaps none of them had ever seen a railroad, they possessed the idea that evils innumerable would follow in its train. They urged that it would destroy the market for horses, the raising of which they were largely engaged in, the lives of the nomadic cows and hogs would be perpetually in danger, and society corrupted by its rural purity. A kind of indignation meeting was held at the country store, at which one speaker, after descending on these evils, capped his climax as follows: "I tell ye what, it'll never do to hev a railroad through this yere kentry. We could never keep our fences up, 'cause every time they'd break a rail they'd think nothin' of takin' one right off a man's fence." Harper's Magazine for April.

BY GREAT MEN IN THE STATE.

Gerrit Smith, in an address, 1870:—Masonry murdered Morgan. If it could not conceal his murderers, it nevertheless protected them. It overrode the laws of the land and ruled the courts and the ballot-boxes. Moreover, it is capable of repeating the crimes. Why then should we not dread secret societies, and do what we can to bring them to an end?

William Wirt: "If this be Masonry, as according to uncontradicted evidence it seems to be, I have no hesitation in saying that I consider it at war with the fundamental principles of the social compact, and a wicked conspiracy against the laws of God and man, that ought to be put down."

Joseph Ritner, governor of Pennsylvania, 1837:—"If it be true as the lamented Colder (himself one of the initiated) declared that many a Mason became a great man but no great man ever became a Mason, how nearly does it concern the youth of our country to pause and reflect before they commit their present standing and future reputation to the keeping of a society, which for its cold-hearted and selfish purposes could immolate even the fame of Washington at the shrine of its abominations."

Lewis Tappan, private journal, 1814:—"Dr. Dixwell gave me lectures on Masonry at his house." "In September left the lodge." Letter, Jan. 21, 1829:—"I am free to say that I henceforth renounce Freemasonry, considering it a useless and profane institution."

George Washington, to friends in 1794, quoted by Myron Holley:—"The real people occasionally assembled in order to express their sentiments on political sentiments, ought never to be confounded with permanent, self-appointed societies, usurping the right to control constituted authorities, and to dictate to public opinion. While the former was entitled to respect, the latter was incompatible with all government, and must either sink into general disesteem, or finally overturn the established order of things."

James G. Birney, candidate of the Liberty party for President, was a Freemason, "but never entered a lodge after he joined the church, and, as his sons grew up, he cautioned them against joining any secret order."—Gen. Wm. Birney.

William H. Beward: "Before I would place my hand between the hands of other men in a secret lodge, order, class, or council, and, bending on my knee before them, enter into combination with them for any object, personal or political, good or bad, I would pray to God that that hand and that knee might be paralyzed, and that I might become an object of pity and even the mockery of my fellow-men."

Wendell Phillips: "I wish you success most heartily in your efforts to arouse the community to the danger of secret societies. They are a great evil; entirely out of place in a republic, and no patriot should join or uphold them. Considering the great forces which threaten the welfare of the nation in the next thirty years, and how readily and efficiently they can use any secret organizations, such should not be allowed to exist."

George Washington's Farewell Address: "The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle, and of fatal tendency."

Daniel Webster: "All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another, and are bound together by secret oaths, are naturally sources of jealousy and just alarm to others; are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approved the law, lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen, for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE-TRY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part.)

Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish Swedish and Synodical Conferences

Mennonites.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1887.

"Thus all things prove the adage just,
A good thing spoiled corrupts to worst."

Hudibras used this maxim of the old heathen moralists as a gibe at Cromwell's Puritans, and the gibe was just. The men whom he drove out of the Rump Parliament were Puritans spoiled and they spoiled the nation. We are reminded of this by Arkansas laws protecting the Sabbath by jailing Seventh-day Sabbatarians. And we notice workmen petitioning for the Sabbath as a day of rest but not of religion. Our vast army of railroad young men who are the cream of American enterprise, where they are left together in knots and squads by car movements, corrupt each other beyond words to describe. A Sabbath without religion is a curse. For whatever brings men together in masses, if it does not purify, corrupts them.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

There were two very important measures taken at this meeting; one, to correspond and co-operate with all missionary societies for furnishing their missionaries with our anti-secret literature; the other, for a Southern college or university "forever excluding secret societies." We hope all our readers will ponder them.

The American Board, in the crafty phraseology of Dr. Woods, resolved "That this Board can sustain no relation to slavery which implies approbation of the system." But slave-holders were among its missionaries, officers and contributors to its funds. So the American Missionary Association is weakened by Masonic contributions, or rather contributions of churches which have Masons in them. Hence their schools and churches are not yet free from secret societies in spite of the manly protest of their secretaries and committee.

One good college which promptly ejects the secret vermin will bring all the noble schools and churches of the American Missionary Association speedily to the same ground. Put one faithful and fearless anti-secret college or university in the South which shall treat secret societies according to their true nature, and in a little while so many men like Peter Howe will support no other sort there that the noble A. M. A. will work to the same line.

Missionaries during the slavery agony were the best Abolitionists. They sent home remonstrances to their home board against being fed by money wrung from slaves! The sainted Dr. Badger said, "Send us your tract against secret societies and we will send it to all our missionaries." Instruct the missionaries and they will instruct and save the churches.

MASONS UNDER DISCIPLINE.

The public was informed a while since that Palestine Chapter and Prudence Lodge of New York had received two notorious characters, one a murderer and gambler, and the other keeper of a low house of ill-fame in that city, named Jere Dunn and Tom Gould, and passed them through four degrees to Royal Arch, in a single night. The special says: "Grand Master Lawrence suspended the warrant of Prudence Lodge and took the same into his possession." It was further stated that criminal charges are preferred against five other members of Prudence Lodge, and that the order was much excited about the scandal, and much merit is claimed for the lodge for disciplining murderers and brothel-keepers. The following facts will show how much purification of public morals may be expected from the lodge:

1. Every Mason in the United States has sworn to consent to have his throat cut if he reveals already revealed secrets. Of course Masons must do the throat-cutting.

2. Every Mason swears not to defile the female relatives of Masons, "knowing them to be such."

3. Aaron Burr's adulteries are proclaimed by his biographer, M. L. Davis, and his letters to his daughter Theodosia, in which are continual mention of his intimacies with women, bear the stamp of the most detestable profligacy. Burr and Benedict Arnold were Masons.

4. Bishop Vail of Arkansas, before going to his field, went to Davenport, Iowa, and received three degrees in one night. Next day he complained to an Episcopal clergyman (who informed the writer) that he was distressed by the terms of the Master's oath which bound him to conceal all a Master Mason's crimes, "murder and treason excepted."

5. Prof. Robison (Conspiracy, p. 199) gives a French degree in which the blindfold candidate is required to stab his own brother, bound and gagged, for revealing lodge-secrets. And the god of the lodge, by the omission of Christ, is an unclean spirit and a murderer "from the beginning."

For such an institution to set up a discipline in the interest of virtue is like bandits professing to punish robbery, and brothels to protect purity. It is sheer brazen effrontery and hypocrisy. Notice, too, that Grand Master Lawrence, before trial or conviction of Prudence Lodge, takes the entire lodge property "into his own hands."

Well, here we have the out-come of this extraordinary affair, as given by the papers in their report of the New York Grand Lodge, June 9th.

At to-day's session of the Grand Lodge of Masons the report of the committee on warrants in the case of Prudence Lodge, which admitted Jere Dunn and others, was received. The report says: "Patient and earnest search for the facts in this case has satisfied the committee that there were no circumstances sufficiently of an extenuating character to mitigate the offense. Jere Dunn, Tom Gould, and six others, equally disreputable individuals, had been obligated at the altar of Prudence Lodge. They were not only men of a disreputable character, but were so notorious that their bunco-steering, confidence operations have been common report and food for sensational newspaper stories for years. Not to know that Tom Gould and Jere Dunn were improper candidates for Masonic affiliation was to confess an utter ignorance of affairs too improbable to be accepted even by a very credulous person. Nevertheless these persons had received their Masonic degrees in due and ancient form in a lodge rating 203 members, any one of whom at any time whatever during the progress of the conferring of the degrees, as the Masonic law places an enforced interval of two weeks between each degree, could by his own simple act have stopped and prevented its occurrence and this desecration of the pure altar of Freemasonry. Such neglect—such failure to protect the order—indicates utter unfitness to be a lodge duly empowered to work."

The committee recommended that the warrant be forfeited, and those members who can establish their Masonic purity and worthiness, can join such other lodges as can be induced to accept them. The report was adopted.

We are simply amazed that so respectable a paper as the Inter Ocean should follow these hideous facts with near a column of fulsome laudation of Masonry. A local lodge of New York city, containing 203 members, who, six months ago, were in good standing with every lodge in the State, has been taking to its bosom felons, catiffs and criminals, six of whom were known to all readers of the papers. Does the Inter Ocean wish us to believe, does the editor himself believe there are no other lodges and chapters in New York containing such characters? Yet this strange editorial (June 11th) says, Masonry "has been traditionally devoted to the improvement of mankind by the defence of the higher virtues;" and "eminently proper is it that the order should exercise the most rigid discipline in punishing lodges that tend to bring reproach on its fair fame for centuries!"

Can it be that the Inter Ocean is ignorant of the fact that every state in Europe, Protestant, Catholic and Greek, has been compelled to defend its life against the machinations of Mason-lodges? Has he never heard of the murders of Pritchard, Miller and Morgan? Of the bloody revolutions in Mexico produced by the conspiracies and counter-conspiracies of the York and Scottish Rite lodges? Of the Mason-lodges of Paris which Lamartine likens to pools of poisonous reptiles covered with green slime? Ignorance is the mildest excuse for such an editorial.

THE SOUTH MUST BE HEARD.—The present number of the Cynosure might almost be called a Southern number. Please read our correspondence department from beginning to end and let the statement of facts respecting the work among the colored churches and the most urgent pressing demand for more workers and more literature have their due effect upon every reader. The day for self-sacrifice is here, and it is time for the friends of our reform to redouble their efforts for the deliverance of the colored people from the power of Satan through the lodge. Mark the report of donations for the Southern fund from week to week and let no reader of this note have rest till his name appears in it.

—Next to the anarchist trial last year, the great suit for conspiracy to defraud the county brought against county commissioners, wardens of county institutions and their accomplices has been one of the most important to Chicago. The investigations of the grand jury and the trial which closed Saturday with a verdict of guilty have given a blow to the gambling, thieving gang that managed affairs during the three terms of Mayor Harrison.

—Rev. Dr. J. P. Lytle of Sago, Ohio, who is a champion for Christ against secretism in the United Presbyterian church, has lately met with a great earthly loss in the death of his wife, who was a woman of most excellent report in all the region of their home.

—The Chicago Daily News of Monday morning has an illustrated history of the First Congregational church of this city which began in a secession of Abolitionists from the Presbyterians led by Philo Carpenter of revered memory. Portraits of Mr. Carpenter and Dr. Goodwin of more than usual accuracy for such kind of work are among the cuts.

—A note from Mrs. F. W. Capwell of Dale, New York, gives us the unwelcome news that Bro. Capwell lately had a severe fall from a wagon which will confine him to his room for several days. It is hoped the result will not be more serious. For this, among other reasons, he could not attend the N. C. A. annual meeting, as he has for several years.

—Our critical readers will mark in the report of Dr. George's speech at Newburg, on the second page of this number, an unwonted leniency toward some of the orders. We are happy to note a correction of this matter by Rev. M. A. Gault, who spoke from the chair in the N. C. A. annual meeting to the effect that the reporter of the Newburg daily was not careful and accurate, and there was no such discrimination as appears.

—The twenty-fifth wedding anniversary of President and Mrs. L. N. Stratton occurred on the 8th inst., and was celebrated with all the enthusiasm due so happy an event by their numerous friends in Wheaton and elsewhere. A large company, without respect to party, sect, or order, gathered in the evening, and left behind them over $160 in cash, beside a fine collection of presents, all silver-bright, as an evidence of their appreciation.

—At the North Ohio convention of Loyal United Brethren, Rev. A. H. Tussing told his experience among the Odd-fellows, and it is repeated in the Conservator. He says that when he entered the lodge one night he spoke kindly of Christ, when an Odd-fellow by his side said to him: "Do you believe in Christ? He was a bastard and an impostor, and a false teacher." When the lodge was called to order, the Noble Grand was asked why the name of Christ was not used, and explained that Jews could not join in the use of that name, and that their money was as good as that of any body else, therefore they must keep Christ out.

—A letter from Dr. T. S. Bliss of Denver to his local Prohibition paper, the Challenge, from Omaha and the General Assembly is full of joy as he reports the strong resolution adopted by that august body. Of the uniform sentiment of the Assembly he writes: "The trumpet here gives no uncertain sound, and it was evident from the first of the discussion that there could be no trifling or half-way work on this important subject. The interest was deep and strong, and it is believed that this body gathered from all parts of the country, represents the truest and best sentiment of the great body of our people. Nothing can be stronger than the fixed purpose to be humbugged no longer with license laws—high or low—but adopting the divine method in dealing with such gigantic wrongs and crimes. Prohibition and nothing else is to be the watchword from this day forth and forevermore!"

—Through the kindness of our friend and brother T. K. Buffkin, who lives amid the orange and eucalyptus groves under the frowning ridge of the Sierra Madre mountains, a copy of the Pasadena Union of the 4th inst. has come to us, containing a very interesting account of a very remarkable housewarming for Jason and Owen Brown, the two sons of old John Brown, who live in the edge of the mountains north of Pasadena. It was noted in our editorial correspondence last year that Owen had entered a quarter section of government land on an elevated plateau above the first high mountain ridge, a good half-day's climb from the little settlement where they lived, called Las Casitas. They have lately removed to their mountain eyrie, and as a token of esteem their friends in Pasadena and the East gathered a fund and purchased furniture and other convenient articles which were taken up the declivity of the mountains. The little party which bore the gifts had a pleasant reception and may the memory of it long be bright in the hearts of these sturdy old men.

ROOM IN THE INN.

Saturday, June 12th, Mrs. Stoddard and myself visited our old time friends, John J. Cox and wife, in Grundy county, Ill., and found them full in the faith. We were met at the depot and returned on Monday in time for the Chicago express, and during our brief stay nothing could have been added on the part of our friends to make our visit more enjoyable. Sabbath afternoon we attended Sabbath-school and very much enjoyed the exercises in which we were asked to take a part. Mrs. Hoyt, the superintendent, showed tact in management and care in preparing exercise for "children's day" and was assisted by others. These friends of Jesus and the children, upon whom he pronounced a special benediction, are doing a good work. The house was well filled for an evening appointment, and after the opening exercises and a Scripture reading with comments, Mrs. Stoddard gave them a talk on the W. C. T. U. work, and her experiences in the South while laboring for temperance and reform in the mountain regions of East Tennessee. The attention of both old and young was undivided, and at the close several came forward to speak cheering words and to assure us of a hearty welcome in case of our return. I can but feel that some good seed was sown and some toiling ones strengthened, and pray that at least one grain may be added when the garnered harvests shall appear and the jewels are counted up.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—I have before me a little book entitled, "Our Country," by Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D. It has evidently met with a hearty reception, for this is the "fifty-fifth thousand." The introduction is written by Prof. Austin Phelps, D. D., who is led "to look on these United States as first and foremost the chosen seat of enterprise for the world's conversion." The work is divided into fourteen chapters. The first points out the fact that the closing years of the nineteenth century are one of the great focal points of history. "Five hundred years of time in the process of the world's salvation may depend on the next twenty years of United States history."

The second chapter deals with our National Resources. An area of 2,970,000 square miles, not including Alaska; twice as much west of the Mississippi as east, "capable of feeding a population of 900,000,000, and of producing an excess of 5,100,000 bushels of grain for exportation." With mineral wealth inexhaustible, manufacturing products exceeding those of Great Britain and an aggregate wealth of $43,000,000,000 this country can sustain and enrich 1,000,000,000 of people. Truly has Matthew Arnold said: "America holds the future." The third chapter refers to western supremacy. The sceptre is west of the Mississippi. Texas would reach from Chicago to New Orleans, Montana from Boston to Cleveland, Idaho from Toronto, Can., to Raleigh, N. C. "Dakota might be carved into a half dozen kingdoms of Greece; or, if it were divided into twenty-six equal counties, we might lay down the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel in each." In a single year the West produced 55 tons, 724 pounds (avoirdupois) of gold, and 1,090 tons, 398 pounds of silver. There are 200,000 square miles of coal measure, thirty-eight times the area of all the coal fields of Great Britain. In Idaho there is a mountain which is eighty-five per cent pure sulphur. Nevada has borax enough to supply mankind. In Wyoming there are lakes in which the deposits of sulphate of soda are from ten to fifteen feet in thickness and almost chemically pure. Texas has enough gypsum "to supply the universe for centuries." The Colorado river of Texas cuts its way through mountains of solid marble. Montana has tin-bearing rock sufficient to supply the world. The West will direct the policy of this government. "The world's sceptre passed from Persia to Greece, from Greece to Italy, from Italy to Great Britain, and from Great Britain the sceptre is to-day departing. It is passing on to 'Greater Britain,' to our mighty West, there to remain, for there is no further west; beyond is the Orient."

The fourth chapter treats of the Perils of Immigration. Three causes induce immigration: 1. The attracting influences of the United States; 2. The expellent influences of the Old World; 3. Facilities for travel. Perhaps 15,000,000 are here now. In 1900 there will be 43,000,000 foreigners. "If our noble domain were ten-fold larger than it is, it would still be too small to embrace with safety to our national future little Germans here, little Scandinavians there, and little Irelands yonder. Our safety demands the assimilation of these strange populations. The lion, without being consulted as to time, quantity, or quality, is having the food thrust down his throat and his only alternative is digest or die." They must be Americanized. When Oliver Wendell Holmes was asked when to begin the education of a child, he said, "One hundred years before it is born."

The next chapter is upon the Perils of Romanism. He quotes their own publications to show that Romanism is unrepudiated and dangerous. "America is the hope of Rome." Half a century ago, Gregory XVI., who held that "the salvation of the church would come from America," said: "Out of the Roman states there is no country where I am Pope, except the United States." Lafayette, himself a Romanist, was not wholly blind when he said, "If the liberties of the American people are ever destroyed, they will fall by the hands of the Romish clergy."

Chapter six is on the Perils of Mormonism. This is an "imperium in imperio," ruled by a man who is prophet, priest, king and pope, all in one. He has 28,838 officials to look after a population of 138,000. All these threads of authority are gathered in one hand. The president of the church has more power than a general over his soldiers.

Chapter seven is upon the Perils of Intemperance. From the equator north and from the Arctic regions south, nervous disorders increase until the climax is reached in the temperate zone. In the East life is phlegmatic, in the West it is nervous. Intoxicants are less dangerous in the Orient than in the Occident. In our West the air is a wine. The nervous sensibilities are greater there. Intoxicants are more injurious there. The drink system finds an easy prey. "The alternative, then, seems clear, simple, certain, that civilization must destroy the liquor traffic or be destroyed by it."

Then follow the perils of socialism, of wealth, of the city. The closing chapters are upon "The Influence of the Early Settlers," "The Exhaustion of the Public Lands," "The Anglo-Saxon and the World's Future," and "Money and the Kingdom." The work is invaluable. Every American citizen ought to read it.

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Trinity M. E. church, Rev. A. C. Hirst, D. D., pastor, on "Messiah the Prince." There was an audience of 500 people. Dr. Hirst spoke of our work in this city as "valuable and valiant." In the evening I preached in the East Pearl St. M. E. church, Rev. D. Lee Aultman, pastor. The Law and Order League has been trying to put a stop to Sunday theaters in our city, but their efforts have proved abortive. The theater managers have themselves arrested about midnight Sabbath night. The next morning their representatives appear before the court and pay a fine of $1 apiece and get off. The fine is never collected, however, as the officials are in league with the law-breakers. The Law and Order people cannot arrest them a second time for the same offense, so their hands are completely tied.

The fact is, the King of kings must be appealed to. He alone can command the winds and waves. To try to control Cincinnati without his aid is as foolish as Xerxes' mad attempt to chain the ocean.

The Annual Commencement of the Cincinnati University took place in Odeon Hall, Tuesday evening. The degree of Bachelor of Arts was conferred on two ladies and three gentlemen, Bachelor of Letters on two ladies and five gentlemen, Bachelor of Science on one lady and five gentlemen, Civil Engineer on one gentleman, Master of Arts on two gentlemen, and Master of Science on two gentlemen. The last was a most successful year.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

POLICE MATRONS.

Nearly two months ago the Governor, (Oliver Ames, son of the late Oakes Ames), approved an act passed by the Legislature "to provide for the appointment of police matrons in cities, and for the establishment of a house of detention for women in the city of Boston." No practical steps until very recently have been taken to carry out this humane act. Mayor O'Brien has reminded the City Council of its negligence or procrastination in the matter. An action was taken on the 7th ult. referring it to a committee. The Board claims to be unable to proceed until the amount of salaries have been fixed. Several philanthropic ladies interested in the movement have succeeded interesting the mayor in the cause. He seemingly is endeavoring to spur on the City Council to immediate action.

The mayor has a sort of bull-dog way in his undertakings. When he grasps anything he seldom gives it up till he accomplishes his purpose. Though an Irishman, a Catholic and a Democrat, he is the most level-headed officer of this municipality. He has a most practical and straight-forward manner in putting matters before individuals or corporations. The following letter concerning the "police matron" question is an excellent specimen:

CITY OF BOSTON EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT, JUNE 10, 1887.

To the Board of Police:

GENTLEMEN:—A great many inquiries are made at this office concerning police matrons, whether they have yet been appointed in accordance with the law and where they are located. The law states that the Board of Police may, within one month from the passage of the act, designate one or more police stations, etc. Have the Board designated any stations yet, or, if not, do they intend to? [Signed] Yours respectfully,

HUGH O'BRIEN, Mayor.

Bostonians are confident that immediately stations will be designated and matrons appointed. The city council and board of police will get little peace until the matter is settled.

The execution of this really humane act of the Massachusetts Legislature and its endorsement by the Governor will hardly fail to interest everybody. To show that dear old Boston will not remain long nor far behind in any good cause, the writer has ventured to bore the good readers of the Cynosure with this article.

No one has brought any charge of ungentlemanly conduct against our police concerning the arrest and incarceration of females, yet the propriety of having a female officer in attendance at the various stations is self-evident. Why this necessity has been so long unheeded is quite surprising.

EDUCATIONAL.

—Ex-President Mark Hopkins, of Williams College, expired Friday morning at North Adams, Mass.

—Dr. Roswell Dwight Hitchcox, President of the Union Theological Seminary of New York, died Friday night at South Somerset, Mass.

—Bethany College, at Lindsborg, Kas., but recently a small academy, was dedicated as a full college under the auspices of the Lutheran Swedish Augustana Synod. The attendance is already three hundred and the new buildings are of the best.

—Commencement at Earlham College will this year occupy two days. So large is the Senior Class, it has been divided, the first section occupying Wednesday next, followed by an address from Congressman W. D. Bynum. In connection with exercises of next day Pres. Joseph Moore gives an address and the corner-stone of a new college building will be laid.

—Atlanta Baptist Seminary is an institution founded at Atlanta, Ga., in 1867, and conducted by the American Baptist Home Mission Society. Rev. Dr. Samuel Graves is president. There were 146 students attending last year, of whom 18 were in theology, and 32 others are preparing for the work of the ministry. Among the students' societies is one called the "Congo Mission Circle" to develop a missionary spirit among the heathen.

—Geneva College catalogue reveals a prosperous year for the institution over which Dr. H. H. George presides. The whole number of students is 155, of whom 67 are in the college classes. This fact is a revelation of the intellectual strength of the Reformed Presbyterian church, which, though a little flock compared to some denominations, embraces some of the clearest and ablest thinkers and eloquent speakers in our nation. The endowment of the College is nearly $150,000. Further information may be had of Pres. H. H. George, Beaver Falls, Pa.

—On June 12 the Moody Schools at Northfield began their anniversary exercises. On Saturday, June 4, the corner-stone of the new library building, the gift of Mr. James Talcott, of New York, was laid. It will cost $25,000, will have a capacity of 40,000 volumes, and will be fire-proof. Rev. Dr. Joseph T. Duryea, of Boston, delivered the baccalaureate sermon, and Dr. Alexander McKenzie the principal address on Commencement Day, Thursday, June 16. Twelve graduated from the seminary and three from the Mount Hermon School, where 225 have been at work this year.

—Dr. J. H. Vincent, Chancellor of the Chautauqua University, telegraphs from London that he has secured the services of Prof. Henry Drummond as a lecturer this season at the Chautauqua and Framingham Assemblies. Prof. Drummond, though comparatively a young man, is well known in literature, but chiefly as the author of "Natural Law of the Spiritual World," which has had an almost unprecedented circulation in England and America. Prof. Drummond is an admired lecturer on science to cultivated audiences, an earnest helper and a most successful leader in the instruction of workmen. The dates of Prof. Drummond's lectures will be duly announced.

THE HOME.

TRUST.

Be not anxious for the morrow!
He who portions joy and sorrow
Knoweth what for thee is best;
And whate'er its skies may bring Thee of joy or sorrowing,
Comes at His behest.

Anxious thought can never yield thee
Grace to bear nor faith to shield thee,
Should the morrow trials bring;
But, if thou in patience wait,
He will help thee in thy strait,
Give thee song to sing.

His is love that lasts forever,
Faithfulness that faileth never!
From thy mind forebodings cast;
And, to know what He will be,
Should a morrow rise on thee,
Read it from the past.

When at last thy home thou nearest,
And the gloom of death thou fearest,
Maybe then to-morrow's light,
Given thee for faithful trust,
Shall upon thy memory burst,
Pluming thee for flight.

When hath ceased all sin and sorrow,
Where thy life hath no to-morrow,
Sun, nor threatening cloud nor moon;
To the love thy past that planned,
Mid the harps of heaven's band,
Thine shall find a tune.

—The late Thomas Edmund Reynolds.

SOMETHING TO CARRY HOME.

It was an unusually warm morning for June. But little air stirred the lilac bushes, and the chickens wallowing in the cool, moist earth beneath them, crouched down often, as though overcome by the heat.

I raised my parasol as I stepped out upon the front porch, and gathered up my dress with a listless hand, as I looked out over the road which stretched out to the church, whose white spire rose above the green trees in the distance; and I wondered how I was to get over that hot bill, where not a shadow broke the glare. Such a sudden outpouring of the sun's heat seemed quite overpowering. When I entered the church I found my heterogeneous collection of scholars nearly complete; but I opened the closely shut window near, and dropped into my straight-backed chair, feeling as though there was not one atom of reserve force left in me with which to tackle my duties. It was discouraging to have such feelings to contend with, when I had striven so, but an hour ago, for a prayerful, tranquil mind; and strove to overcome it. But the children, rubbing their feet on the bare floor, nearly sent me wild, and I was glad when the opening bell called us to order. But I did not regain control of myself so but that when, after the lesson was well begun, Julia Simpson, or Julia Ann, as the children called her, came in, dragging by the hand such a little mite of a brother as seemed too small to be anywhere but at home, I was annoyed. "Why can't mothers be their own nurse girls?" I thought; and I'm afraid there was the least mite of sharpness in my voice as I said, "You shouldn't bring such a baby to Sunday-school, Julia."

"Mother said I'd got to stay and mind him then," was Julia's reply.

I made room for them, and gave the little fellow a book of pictures to keep him from talking; but of course it wasn't a minute before the book went, with a bang, on the floor. When this happened for the third time, and just as I was saying, "Now children," I took the book, and, much to the child's apparent wonderment, tossed it on to the table. After this for awhile the child was determined to do the talking himself; and of course every time he gave utterance to anything, in his funny baby-fashion, a suppressed titter would break out from somewhere among the thirty-five children composing the class. But at last I seemed to get a little of the child's attention. I think it came from my talking of the verse, "His flesh shall be fresher than a child's," and calling the children's attention to how beautiful, soft, rosy cheeks like Julia's little brother's were, and took up one of his chubby little hands, to show them the difference between such flesh and mine. At any rate, the latter part of the exercise the child sat swinging his fat legs, and crouched down in a sort of listening way, as though giving us his undivided attention. But I supposed this came from drowsiness, and I forgot him entirely.

When the school was closed, and the children straggled out, I stumbled over "Eben," as Julia called him. He raised his great black eyes to mine, and said, in his slightly solemn, childish way, "I'll come again."

"Yes," I said; "and you must be a good little boy all the week."

"I'll be dood, and pray Dod," he said, nodding his head like a wise judge, and marching away.

The last thing I had striven to impress upon the children's minds had been the need of prayer—for everything and at all times; and I was surprised that even so much, as seemed by the child's words, had been grasped by him. And going home, thinking it over, the breeze seemed a good deal fresher than when I went over the road before, though it was an hour nearer noon, and the way was not half so long and tiresome.

The next Sunday I looked for little Eben, but Julia came without him, and in time the incident of his ever having come slipped from my mind. A few weeks later I stood one morning out among my late roses, clipping and tying up, and smelling of this and that half-open rose, when a "hem," caused me to turn suddenly, and I found a woman standing beside me. How she had opened the gate and trodden the gravel walk without my knowing it was a mystery; but there she was, and as she did not say anything, I said "Good morning." She answered with a nod, and then stood awkwardly twisting the fringe of her shawl between her thumb and finger. Not knowing what else to say, I asked, "Can I do anything for you?"

"Well, no—that is, I only thought I'd like you to know how we'd got on the right track again."

"Ah," I said, not having the remotest idea as to who "we" were, or what "track" they had generally been on.

"Yes, I kinder felt as though I'd like you to know how much good you'd done us."

"I!" I said in astonishment, as I pulled off my garden gloves, and walking to the porch, pushed one of the garden chairs towards my strange visitor, taking the remaining one myself. "I do not see how that can be, when I never saw you before."

"But you've seen Bub," and the woman laughed, and the laugh seemed to knock ten years right off her age.

"Bub! who's Bub?" I asked, struggling to get hold of what the woman was driving at.

"Why, my Bub, Ebenezer, that Julia Ann took to Sunday-school."

"Oh," I said, the Julia Ann letting in a little light. "You're Julia Simpson's mother? I remember little Eben's coming with her one day. Yes, yes."

"Well, you see—" and the woman settled back, as though surer of her ground now—"I used to mind about religion, quite a sight, when we were first married. But after things got going so hard with us, and it was work, work and money always short, and the children coming along, and so little time for anything, we kinder forgot about it; and when we didn't there did not seem to be much chance for such things; and I used to tell Rufus—he's my husband—that there wasn't much time for poor folks to be religious in, and he seemed to think it was about so. Well, as I started to tell, the next day after Bubby went to Sunday-school was what some folks call 'blue Monday' with me. The baby'd been worrying all night."

"Eben?" I asked.

"Oh, no; you ha'n't seen my baby yet. She's most a year old, and a wonderful sight like her father; as I was saying, she'd kept me awake; and now there was the big washing, and the sun up so hot before I got at it; and taking it all round, it seemed as though I never could get through with it all; and after I'd rubbed a little, I just dropped into a chair with my hand on my back, saying, 'It's no sort o' use; I never can do it.' Bub was on the floor with the baby's playthings, and I didn't suppose he was minding me one bit; but he looked up with those great eyes o' his'n, and says he, shaking his head, 'Why don't you tell Dod so?' I thought it must be I hadn't heard him right, and so I asked, 'What did you say, Eben?' 'I say,' he said, rising to his feet, 'why don't you tell Dod so, and not bover so about it?' I got right up and went about my work, but I was sort o' numb like, as though I'd got a blow. You see it was so queer like for Eben to talk like that. I tried to move about lively, and get myself free, but I couldn't, and at last I went into the bedroom, where baby was in bed asleep, and shutting the door, I did just tell the Lord all about it, just how tired I was, and how hard everything was going, and how little strength I had, and asked him to get me through the day the best he could; and when I went back to the kitchen my heart was as light as a feather, and I broke right out singing, as though I was a girl. But I ha'n't got to the best of it," she continued, as I moved a little, to get my handkerchief. "If you'll believe me, as I was a-takin' out the first boiling, who should come in but Rufus, and says he 'I didn't have quite the right lumber I wanted for the job, so I thought 'twas so late I'd come home and help a bit, and not go after it till noon. Now, I don't believe Rufus had done such a thing as that afore since the first year we was married, and what do you suppose could have put it into his head unless—" Mrs. Simpson hesitated, as though I might not quite agree with her, I thought. So I hastened to say, "Unless the Lord put it into his heart. Of course you have perfect right to think it in direct answer to prayer."

"Well, so it seemed to me and Rufus," said Mrs. Simpson, pulling her shawl up around her; "and you don't know what a comfort it has been to us, and we've just taken a new start; and it's wonderful how easy things do go now. And when I went by this morning, and saw you a-standing out in the garden, I felt as though I'd like to let you know what a sight of good what Bubby brought home did for us."

"Well, I'm sure, Mrs. Simpson," I said, shaking her hand warmly, "it does help me to go on with the little ones. Sometimes it seems as though I couldn't get anything done up small enough for them to take."

"Don't you ever think that again, for it's wonderful how these little folks do manage to get hold of things;" and Mrs. Simpson, with another shake of the hand, walked away.

How do you think I felt after she was gone? I can't tell you exactly how, but I know I felt a good deal as though I ought to ask somebody's pardon, and I went down before God, in that little back parlor of mine, for a long time; and the next Sunday, when Julia brought Eben, gay in a new suit of blue water-proof, with brass buttons, I gave him the very best seat there was; and all that lesson time I tried to strip my talk free from big words, so that even the smallest should have something to carry home.—Selected.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

Are you almost disgusted
With life, little man?
I will tell you a wonderful trick
That will bring you contentment
If anything can—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Are you awfully tired
With play, little girl?
Weary, discouraged and sick?
I'll tell you the loveliest
Game in the world—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Though it rains like the rain
Of the flood, little man,
And the clouds are forbidding and thick,
You can make the sun shine
In your soul, little man—
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

Though the skies be like brass
Overhead, little girl,
And the walk like a well-heated brick;
And are earthly affairs
In a terrible whirl!
Do something for somebody, quick;
Do something for somebody, quick!

FIRE AND WATER.

The sea along the western coast of Scotland is filled with numberless islands, which look out on the map as if they might have been broken from the solid land. One of these is a tiny island lying close in the embrace of a larger one. Though it shows as a mere speck on the map, this little island of Staffa is known the world over for its wonderful natural formations. On the edge of the sea, rising direct from the water, is the well-known Fingal's Cave. The regularity of its formation is so remarkable that it is hard to believe it to be a work of nature. Lofty columns of regular shape stand up out of the sea, built up, it would seem, of block upon block of solid stone carefully chiselled and as carefully laid upon each other.

On the northern coast of Ireland, at the point which is nearest the Scottish coast, is another wonderful assemblage of these columns, roofless, and running out into the sea, called the Giant's Causeway.

An old story makes these two wonders the ruins of castles built and inhabited by two unfriendly giants. The cave has received the name of the Scotch giant Fingal. There are many old poems, sung among the Highlanders in the far past, of which Fingal is the hero, but we now know that no man's or giant's hand helped to lift these great blocks of stone one upon the other. They were built up by the fires under the earth. The melted stone poured out of the volcanoes above and spread over the land, and there, as it hardened and cooled, split up into great crystals or columns. The water dashing for thousands of years against them washed away the earth around and the broken fragments, but was dashed back again by a few of the hard unbroken columns, and so were left Fingal's Cave, the Giant's Causeway, and other formations like these.

Too long ago for you even to imagine it, there was a great bridge of these columns reaching from Scotland to Ireland: the Giant's Causeway was one abutment, and Fingal's Cave another. In the thousands of years that have passed since, the rest of the bridge has been swept away and destroyed, with only here and there an island of columns between to tell the tale.

These rocks—hardened volcanic rock—are called basalt. They are not the only things which in drying contract and split into crystals. Take some common starch, dissolve it in water, and let it gradually dry; you will find that it is not a plain flat sheet, but that it, too, has split up into crystals. Nothing, however, splits up as regularly as basalt does.

Sometimes where there has been a wide crack in the older rocks the melted basalt has run into and filled the crack. In that case the stone hardened and split up the other way, and instead of columns, it looks like piles of logs. On the coast of Lake Superior there is a remarkable instance of this; the surrounding rock has worn away, leaving the hard basalt lying like a carefully arranged pile of cord-wood.

The great central fires of the earth are constantly at work, sometimes acting with shocks, and sometimes quietly and steadily changing the face of the earth. In India, seventy years ago, one of these sudden changes took place which was very remarkable. There was an earthquake shock, and a great piece of land fifty miles long and sixteen broad was suddenly lifted up ten feet higher than the country around, and there it has stayed, with a straight wall around the edge called by the natives "Ullah Bund," or "God's Wall," from the mysterious way in which it arose.

Without any earthquake shock or sudden movement continents are in some places slowly sinking and in others as slowly rising. It might seem as if it were the waters which were rising or falling, but a moment's thinking will show you that this cannot be so. Water soon comes to a level, and as there is nearly the same quantity in the oceans all the while, it must be the land that is changing.

There was a great many years ago, before Christ came into the world, a temple built on the Gulf of Baia, near Naples. Three pillars are still standing of this temple, though they have seen many ups and downs since their building. The original pavement was of beautiful mosaic, and so well built that it still remains, though the earth on which it stands slowly sank for many years. About two hundred years after Christ a new floor was laid above the old one, showing at that time how much the earth had sunk. Down, down the pillars went into the sea, till they had sunk twenty-six feet. Then came a terrible eruption of volcanic lava, and the temple was lifted bodily more than twenty feet, the pillars still standing upright. Twenty-six feet above the first pavement, and for twelve feet below that line, the pillars have been fairly pitted by some small sea animal which had burrowed into the marble when it was under the sea. The story of the temple's travels is written on the face of the pillars. Now the temple is again slowly sinking at the rate of an inch a year.

Our own continent is tilting up in some places and sinking down in others. The Florida coast is sinking, the North Carolina coast is rising. Near Boston the land is rising, and Greenland for six hundred miles is sinking so manifestly that the Greenlanders have learned not to build their huts close by the sea. An island in the Gulf of St. Lawrence is gradually tipping; its southern coast is dipping down, and its northern rising into high bluffs.

The water and the fire, in doing these mighty works, in gradually turning and tilting continents and islands, and wearing them down again, do not forget some smaller duties in the way of carving and ornamenting and beautifying the earth.

Near where famous old Troy stood are some marvelous salt springs. The place is a valley enclosed in mountains, colored by the minerals in the water—gorgeous reds and blues and yellows. The floor of the valley is a variegated crust, through which jets of hot, intensely salt water comes up. In one place from the rocks at the side jets of boiling water spout out like fountains at play, and flow away as a rivulet of salty, steaming water.

But there is no country in the world which has more wonderful hot springs than our own. The hot water, filled with carbonic acid, which comes from the fires beneath the earth, has the power to dissolve certain minerals; these it brings up to the surface of the earth. The carbonic acid goes off in gas when it comes to the air, but the lime and other minerals are allowed to settle; there they harden and form a cup, from which the water drips down, forming limestone icicles or stalactites. Finally, cup after cup is formed in this way, most wonderfully ornamented. In one place in Italy such a spring, which is at the top of a hill, has encased the whole hill in a layer of stone formed from its settlements.

In carbonated springs most of the lime settles at the bottom, as earth will in water; but there is a still more wonderful kind of spring which builds its own basin, and after awhile makes itself into a fountain. Such a spring is called a geyser. These are very rare, because it takes so many different things acting together to form them. They are the children of fire and water. Geysers are found in Iceland, New Zealand, and our Western country. Those in the Yellowstone National Park, in Wyoming Territory, are perhaps the largest and most curious in the world. Indeed, that region abounds with wonderful examples of nature's handiwork, which must be interesting to all students of geology.

A geyser begins by being a little hot spring; it ends by being a natural fountain. Geyser water has been put into a basin, and allowed slowly to dry up. It is then found that the settlements from this water are not on the bottom, but that as the water dried, it left a solid rim around the basin, and as it sank, the rim broadened downward.

In the geyser water there is a white and glassy substance that, as it settles, builds a cup for itself; when the water overflows the cup, it naturally runs out of the lowest place. Here the solid rim is built up by the glassy silica till that gets higher; the water then shifts and flows over the lowest place left, building slowly the lowest place in the rim, till, instead of a cup, it makes a high tube with a mound of silica all around it.

Sometimes the water will lie quiet in the tube for a good while; but the fires beneath are turning water into steam, and when enough steam forms, it lifts the water in the tube, in its struggles to get out, until finally the water is thrown up into the air violently, like the jet of a mighty fountain. The steam escapes in a single burst or in several; the water sinks back and lies quiet for awhile, till steam is again formed, and the fountain jets again.

A toy geyser can be made of an upright tube of iron filled with water, and two gas jets burning against the tube, one above another. Every different way that a geyser plays can be imitated on this simple little arrangement. It would take too long to explain why some geysers are too young to play and why some are too old; why some play at fixed times, and others only when a clod of earth or something of the kind is thrown into the tube; but if you could see the experiment tried on the top geyser, it would not be hard to understand.—Harper's Young People.

A little girl of eleven was telling, in a simple way, the evidence that she was a Christian. "I did not like to study, but to play; I was idle at school, and often missed my lessons. Now I learn every lesson well, to please God. I was mischievous at school when the teacher was not looking at me, making fun for the children to laugh at. Now I wish to please God by behaving well and keeping the school laws. I was selfish at home, and was sulky when mother called me from play to help her in her work. Now it is a real joy for me to help mother in any way, and to show that I love her."

TEMPERANCE.

THE SILVER LINING TO THE TOBACCO CLOUD.

The darkest cloud has a silver lining, and through the rift in the cloud of tobacco smoke we see a promise of light and life, an arousing from the stupor that is now upon us. Though facts and figures are appalling, yet there is a bright side that ought to encourage all workers in this much needed reform. People are beginning to wake up on the subject. Physicians are speaking out, teachers are taking a noble stand, ministers of the Gospel are warning and encouraging the young, and even in the halls of our national Congress there are weak pulsations and visible signs of life. Tobacco has been prohibited in the United States Military Academy at West Point, and in the Naval Academy at Annapolis. It has also been banished from some of our leading literary institutions, among which are the Wesleyan University of Connecticut and Phillips Academy of New Hampshire. Those having control of these institutions of learning found such action necessary, not only for the advancement of the students, but for the preservation of the institutions themselves.

That this good work is destined to go on, until the young men in our higher institutions of learning are emancipated from the slavery of intemperance that holds too many of them in bondage, is foreshadowed by the Inter-College Prohibition Convention that has just been in session. At this convention thirty-three colleges were represented by delegates and fifty more by letters and telegrams. Among the delegates were some of the wisest and best educators of the land, among whom were Dr. Herrick Johnson and Presidents Seelye of Amherst and Abernethy of North Carolina. This movement is one of great importance and promise, as it is likely to result in the salvation of many young men, who, unrestrained, would fall a prey to the demon, Drink. Many States have taken action with reference to this acknowledged evil, and require scientific instruction upon the subject of narcotics in their public schools, thus enlightening the young as to its injurious effects. Several ecclesiastical bodies have taken an advanced step in prohibiting tobacco to theological students; also in refusing license to any who are addicted to its use.

What a change from the time when one earnest, Christian minister began to combat this evil alone, no, not alone, for the Author of purity stood at his right hand; and one with God is always a majority. Amid the jeers and taunts of the rabble, and the derision and neglect of those who should have stood side by side with him, he wrote and lectured and distributed anti-tobacco tracts until his Master summoned him to his reward. If the souls of the pious dead are in any way conversant with the affairs of this world, surely the soul of Rev. George B. Trask will have one more cause of rejoicing in knowing that the seed sown more than a quarter of a century ago, has at last sprung up and is promising an abundant harvest. A few years ago any member of a church court who dared to introduce any resolution against tobacco was laughed at; but now leading members champion the reform, and no one would be tolerated who would oppose it.

Let us all rejoice that even on this far off coast we feel the spray of the anti-tobacco wave that is now sweeping over our land. As the result of a petition to the city council, signed by a large number of prominent persons in many of the trades and professions, Oakland, "The Athens of the Pacific," has an ordinance, quite harmless however, making it unlawful for any minor under sixteen years to smoke any cigar or cigarette in any railway car, street, square or public building or public place in the city. The ordinance is not what the petitioners asked for; when the cry of "unconstitutional and sumptuary law" was raised by those who pass all such documents through the legal sieve, the city fathers gave us only a fractional part, not even the proverbial half loaf. We tried to receive this mouthful thankfully as an earnest of the whole loaf that we shall surely expect hereafter.

In the light of these facts, let us take our stand upon the high table-land of promise and look forward with certainty to the period when all reforms shall be accomplished. In that golden age the opium den, the tobacco stand, the saloon, pernicious literature and everything that tends to injure the body, debase the mind, and destroy the soul, will be swept away, and temperance, righteousness and social purity reign supreme.—Mrs. N. R. Johnston of San Francisco in Our Banner.

LIQUOR IN AFRICA.

White men have caused great and most widespread havoc among the Indians of this country by introducing whisky, or, as they call it, "fire water." England is guilty of forcing opium upon China, and now all civilized countries seem to unite in adding to the degradation of Africa. Rev. J. R. Wood, in a recent address to the British Baptist Total Abstinence Association, referring to the magnitude and destructive influence of the liquor traffic in Africa, said: "The exports to Africa from Great Britain, Germany, Portugal and the United States in about a year amounted to nearly 9,000,000 gallons! And the gallons are multiplied many times before they are dealt out to the natives. One of the National African Company's steamers recently carried 25,000 cases of gin and rum for the supply of two factories only. Mr. Bentley says 'he has heard of 50,000 or 60,000 cases of gin as the annual sale of certain factories of the Dutch House.' To save carriage expense 'pure alcohol' is sometimes used as an article of trade. The Hot-tentots of the south have been extirpated, and 'brandy' is the agent with which they were destroyed. The future of the Caffirs depends on drink being kept from them. The Basutos have perished in large numbers through spirit drinking; those who did not die were wrecks of their former selves; delirium tremens was most common among their chiefs. It looks as if the whole tribe would be crushed, without visible hope of rescue. In Loango spirits are the chief article of barter, and Mr. Bently was told it would be in vain to talk to chiefs about hiring laborers after eleven o'clock in the morning, for the principal men would be drunk at that hour. The effect on trade is highly injurious; in some districts it assumes the character and proportions of a calamity. People 'soaked' with gin and rum and brandy are worth nothing for business, either at home or abroad. Distilleries thrive, but where they thrive nothing else can; industries of all sorts flag, and in the end fail. These African people pray to be delivered from this desolating scourge. 'Stop the canteens;' the white man must stop from giving us brandy if he wishes to save us,' a powerful chief appeals to Bishop Crowther; 'beg the great priests (Committee of Church Missionary Society) that they should beg the English Queen to prevent bringing spirits into this land.'—Christian at Work.

if necessary at any future time the Board has the power to fill vacancies. The editors and publishers were retained without change and by unanimous vote. A resolution was adopted recommending to the new Board that a proposition before the old Board concerning manuscripts on the relation of secret societies to the temperance reform and the labor question be carried into effect; and in addition to these topics that of the relation of all secret societies as parts of one system. Some facts were given showing the importance of the latter topic. There is much misunderstanding upon this latter question even among those who are known to be opposed to all secret societies, and several spoke in favor of a plain but comprehensive argument on the question.

The Board of Directors had no report ready, and in response to a call for that document E. B. Worrell, secretary of the Board, read from the record of the year's meetings, which was accepted in lieu of a formal report, but he was instructed to prepare the proper document for file.

The remainder of the session was taken up in discussing and adopting the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we instruct our General Secretary to open correspondence with the secretaries of missionary societies to secure, if possible, their co-operation in furnishing their missionaries with anti-secret literature, books, tracts, and the Christian Cynosure, and to take action thereon, under the direction of the Board of Directors, and to report next year to this body on the general subject.

Resolved, That we recommend a committee to be appointed to investigate the right of the N. C. A. in the Washington building, and report to the Board for action.

Resolved, That we instruct our Board of Directors to consider the expediency of co-operating in, and controlling a college or university in the far South, open to white and colored pupils, and forever excluding secret societies; and that our General Secretary be instructed to open correspondence with Rev. Byron Gunner of New Iberia, La., on the subject and report to the Board of Directors, who may take such action as they may deem expedient, subject to the approval of this body.

The secretary read the minutes of the meeting which were approved and, after a fervent prayer by Rev. W. W. Blanchard, one of the most harmonious of our annual business meetings adjourned.

The new Board of Directors immediately came to order and organized by electing Rev. L. N. Stratton to the chair and E. R. Worrell as secretary. Some of the standing committees of the year were selected and the Board adjourned to the call of the chair.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The West Denver Congregational church, Denver, Colorado, has just passed from the mission state to that of self-support. Rev. R. T. Cross has just fulfilled the sixth year of his pastorate of the church.

—Notwithstanding the political disturbances in Bulgaria, some of the missionaries of the American Board have interesting reports to give. A revival is in progress at Bansko, and the whole village is mightily under its influence. The Sunday morning congregation numbers between 250 and 300, and there have been several hopeful conversions. Drunkards, Sabbath-breakers, and several bad men are among the converts. There is much opposition, but it rather helps to spread the work.

—The Reformed Presbyterian (Covenant) Synod at its meeting in Newburg, N. Y., elected Rev. R. J. George, of Beaver Falls, to the vacant professorship in the Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary, caused by the death of Rev. J. R. W. Sloane, D. D. Mr. George is a young man, but has a fine education and is an able minister.

—The surprising fact is noted that while the Wesleyan church in Great Britain had 1,970 ministers, it had 24,579 lay class-leaders and 15,000 local preachers last year, so that the greater part of its pastoral and preaching work is done by laymen—and none the less effective work for that.

—The colored people have not got through denouncing Mr. Moody for his discrimination against negroes in his last Southern trip. The Independent says that he refuses to go South again on account of the demand for such discrimination as was practiced in those meetings.

—Bros. McLean and Willis, Quaker evangelists, have lately closed a second revival meeting in Columbus, O., held in the Evangelical church for one week. At the earnest solicitation of Bro. Ross, a young Scotch Presbyterian, and successful dry goods merchant, the meeting was transferred to the chapel of the First Presbyterian church, where the tide of religious interest continued until the close. There were conversions at almost every coming together. Persons from Ashley, Cardington, Dublin and other towns, came to the meeting, some for a day or two, while some remained during the whole time of the meeting.

—Bro. B. Loveless has most remarkable success as a summer evangelist. Last year he held great meetings in the busiest part of the season among the farmers of Iowa. He has already this year been engaged for several weeks in Iowa. At one country church near Bethel the place becoming immediately crowded, he ordered a large tent from this city, and the work keeps on with blessed results.

—E. W. Bliss, who has so won his way into the hearts of all the people where he has labored in Chicago the past four months, is now settled in the Y. M. C. A. service till January, and will have charge of the noon meetings and the other regular Gospel meetings. He also conducts Dr. Noble's prayer meetings in the Union Park church during his absence. His lecture before the Bible Institute on How to Deal with Inquirers was listened to with the closest attention.

—In regard to communion wine and tobacco a lively discussion arose at the United Presbyterian General Assembly in Philadelphia. In 1884, the Assembly adopted a resolution commending unfermented wine for the communion, and efforts were made to change this action so as to recommend care in selecting pure wine, leaving pastors and churches free to use either fermented or unfermented wine, according to their preference. This change, however, was voted down, and the former action of 1884 reaffirmed. The Assembly also instructed their Education Committee not to furnish any money to a candidate for the ministry on their funds, who was addicted to the use of tobacco in any form.

—Mr. Moody has given notice concerning the College Students' Summer School at Northfield, Mass., June 30-July 12, that young men and ladies, not college students, will be welcomed, but the school buildings are reserved for college students. Others can secure meals and table board at moderate prices in the dining halls, but must arrange for rooms in the village. The large hall will be large enough for all who may desire to attend the lessons. Professor Drummond, of Scotland, Dr. Mark Hopkins, Dr. Broadus, Prof. L. T. Townsend and others will aid in the conduct of the meetings. The fifth conference for Bible study will be held in Northfield, August 2-11. The price of board and rooms will be $1.50 a day in the school buildings.

—The General Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church adopted a resolution that no student who uses tobacco in any form shall be elected to office in that church.

LITERATURE.

THE STORY OF METLAKAHTLA. By Henry S. Wellcome. Price $1.50. Pp. 483. New York: Saxon & Co.

The singular Indian name which forms the title of this volume is destined to live in history along with the Nonantum and Natick of John Elliott or the Guadenhutzen of the Moravians. The facts told by the author would have given the lamented Helen Hunt Jackson a nobler theme than "Romona," and would have helped her portray a brighter picture than she has given the world in her wonderful "Century of Dishonor." It is the name of a Christian Indian village on the Pacific coast of British Columbia, where William Duncan, a London clerk, called of God to be a missionary, gathered in a separate community the savages of that region who had accepted Christ. It was some thirty years ago that he resolved to give himself to this work having been aroused by the reports of the exceeding savagery and moral destitution of these tribes. For eight months he studied the Indian language by every possible means before he ventured his life by going outside the stockade among them. His work was blessed and to keep his converts from lapsing into savage life he began the village Metlakahla. This was an Indian democracy both in church and state affairs, the Congregational theory in its simplest form. Various industries were established, a fine, large church built, schools begun, and from these cannibal, dog-eating, devil-worshipping, murdering savages Mr. Duncan with God's help evolved an industrious, peaceful, happy Christian community. Then the devil of sectism began to assail and the church of England authorities attempted to enforce conformity to their ritual. But strife and confusion was the only result. The British authorities also threaten to take away their houses and land, and the troubled Indians have turned to America for help. They wish to emigrate to Alaska. The object of this volume is to introduce this interesting people to our government and people, and the interest which is manifested throughout the country must prove to its author and Mr. Duncan that his work is not in vain.

HOME AND HEALTH.

MEDICAL VIRTUES OF ONIONS.

A mother writer says: "Once a week invariably, and it was generally when we had cold meat minced, I gave the children a dinner which was hailed with delight and looked forward to; this was a dish of boiled onions. The little things knew not that they were taking the best of medicine for expelling what most children suffer from—worms. Mine were kept free by this remedy alone. Not only boiled onions for dinner, but chives also they were encouraged to eat with their bread and butter, and for this purpose they had tufts of chives in their little gardens. It was a medical man who taught me to eat boiled onions as a specific for a cold in the chest. He did not know at the time, till I told him, that they were good for anything else."

The above appeared in the Lancaster New Era, and having fallen under the eye of an experienced physician of that county, he writes as follows:

"The above ought to be published in letters of gold, and hung up beside the table, so that the children could read it, and remind their parents that no family ought to be without onions the whole year round. Plant odd onions in the fall; they will come up at least three weeks earlier in the spring than by spring planting. Give children of all ages a few of them raw, as soon as they are fit to be eaten; do not mistreat them with a mess of raw onions three or four times a week. When they get too large and strong to be eaten raw, then boil or roast them. During unhealthy seasons, when diphtheria and like contagious diseases prevail, onions ought to be eaten in the spring of the year at least once a week. Onions are invigorating and prophylactic beyond description. Further, I challenge the medical fraternity or any mother to point out a place where children have died from diphtheria or scarlatina angina, etc., where onions were freely eaten."

THE BEST TIME TO BATHE.—It is best to bathe just before going to bed, as any danger of catching cold is thus avoided, and the complexion is improved by keeping warm for several hours after leaving the bath. A couple of pounds of bran put into a thin bag and then in the bathtub is excellent for softening the skin. It should be left to soak in a small quantity of water several hours before being used. The internal aids to clear the complexion are most of them well known, and the present season is the best for a thorough cleansing and purifying of the blood. The old-fashioned remedy of sulphur and molasses is considered the best. Charcoal powdered and taken with water is said to be excellent, but it is most difficult to take. A strictly vegetable and fruit diet is followed by many for one or two weeks.—The London Lancet.

WHAT AN EGG WILL DO.—For burns and scalds nothing is more soothing than the white of an egg, which may be poured over the wound. It is softer as a varnish for a burn than collodion, and, being always at hand, can be applied. It is also more cooling than the sweet oil and cotton which were formerly supposed to be the surest application to allay smarting pains. It is the contact with the air which gives the extreme discomfort experienced from the ordinary accident of this kind, and anything that excludes the air and prevents inflammation is the thing to be at once applied.

HOT WATER FOR SPRAINS.—Hot water is the best thing that can be used to heal a sprain or bruise. The wounded part should be placed in water as hot as can be borne for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in all ordinary cases the pain will gradually disappear. Hot water applied by means of cloths is a sovereign remedy for neuralgia and pleurisy pains. For burns or scalds apply cloths well saturated with cool alum-water, keeping the injured parts covered from the air.

A writer in the Scientific American says he cleared his premises of all detestable vermin by making whitewash yellow with copperas and covering the stones and rafters in the cellar with it. In every crevice in which a rat might go, he put the crystals of the copperas, and scattered it in the corners of the floor. The result was the complete disappearance of rats and mice. Since that time not a rat or mouse has been seen near the house. Every spring the cellar is coated with the yellow wash as a purifier, and as a rat exterminator, and no typhoid, dysentery, or fever attacks the family. Never allow rats or mice to be poisoned in the house; they are apt to die between the walls and produce much annoyance.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. B. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doehring, Past Master Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' LETTERS on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-work, an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-masonry works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 50 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine odd Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, dress of candidates, signs, dress guards, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $5.00.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon thinking upon them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister of the Gospel in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cents.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Containing the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the number of members. Legally 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Rituals of the Grand Army of the Republic" are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North-western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second volume. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Sub-Master, Super-Master, Master, Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 50 cents; $4.90 per dozen.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry as a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, who were supposed to be Freemasons; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Infringe. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trades-union of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

National Christian Association. 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Wm. Morgan. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Wm. Morgan," by Rev. J. H. Brockman; "Valence's Confession of the Murder of Capt. W. Morgan," by Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times; "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 204 pages. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

In the Collis; or, the Coming Conflict. By A. Francis. A bloodily portrayed the workings of Secretism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life is trammelled and biased by the baneful workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernhart. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmm and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Menace to the Use of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 60 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Rinder's "Vindication of General Washington," by the author. Communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 8th, 1837 at their special request. To this is added the fact that such a resolution was only passed when it opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. B. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proven by the highest Masonic authorities. 15 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship Illustrated. explains the true course and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the Tammany Ring. Past Master Adams is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 430 pp. 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. J. B. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. A second edition of 31 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will be able to finish the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Rev. J. B. Blanchard. A full and complete exposure of the reasons why secret orders should not be fellowships, or the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Adoptive Masonry by Thomas G. Jones, comprising the degree of Jephthah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Electa, and known as the "Adoptive Degree," and the "Adoptive Degree of Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree." 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix treating on the truth of Morgan's Exposition and the evidence from the lodge-room, the history of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

FARM NOTES.

CLOVER.

Dr. Reynolds, in an article in the Christian Union, on "Renovating Land with Clover," remarks:

Of the so-called "run out" land there is probably very little which when seeded to clover would not produce one-half ton per acre, while some would produce a ton. But we will suppose that it will produce only one-half ton per acre. When in blossom let it be mowed with a machine and allowed to remain on the land just as it falls. The mown clover will act as a mould, enriching and keeping the surface moist, and greatly promote the growth of the second crop, which would probably be equal to the first crop. This also may be mown and left to decay on the land. The next year, after having been enriched with the growth of the preceding year, the land will probably produce enough clover to yield a ton of hay at each crop, and both crops may be mown and allowed to decay, the same as before. Thus there will have been added to the land clover equal to three tons of hay. This amount of clover would contain 168 pounds of nitrogen, which at twenty cents per pound would be worth $33.60; 36 pounds of phosphoric acid, which at twelve cents per pound would be worth $4.32; and 100 pounds of potash, which at six cents per pound would be worth $6.00: making the total value of the fertilizing elements in the three tons of clover worth $43.92. In what other way could fertilizers to this amount be more cheaply obtained? But besides the clover which has been added to the land, there are the stubble and roots which have not been taken into account, although worth fully one-half as much as the clover itself. Land after such treatment will be in good condition for crops for several years. All that is required to renovate land in this way is the use of the land for two years, a small expense for clover-seed, and the labor necessary to plough the land and mow the several crops of clover. Any farmer having land in an unproductive condition could afford to be at the necessary expense to renovate with clover. A few acres each year could thus be treated, until it had all been brought into a fertile state, and the productiveness of the farm greatly increased. After the poorer portions of the farm have been renovated by the use of clover in the way indicated, it is advisable to continue the use of clover in the rotation of farm crops, in order to maintain the fertility of the soil.

Several facts about clover should be stated before we can intelligently decide upon the best methods of curing and storing clover.

First. All things considered, in full bloom is the best time to cut red clover for hay. The aluminoids, fats, ash and the flavor are higher than then subsequently.

Second. From early growth till full bloom the decrease in per cent of aluminoids is slight—much less than in the true grasses.

Third. After full bloom there is a rapid increase in the crude fiber and a decrease in the digestibility. Of course, when the great body of the field is in full bloom some heads will be brown.

Fourth. In curing, the leaves, which are the most nutritious portions of the plant, are liable to become too dry and drop off before the stems are sufficiently cured.

Fifth. When dry, or nearly so, red clover absorbs moisture readily. A few heavy dew or showers will remove from 20 to 35 per cent of the digestible material in red clover and reduce the flavor so low as to greatly lessen the amount consumed at a given time by the stock. * * * * *

Start the mow at three o'clock P. M. and cut till eight in the evening. If it should rain the following day the clover would not be wilted enough to receive great damage; should the weather be fair, use the tedder from ten to twelve in the morning after the clover is cut; immediately after dinner rake into small windrows; place in shock before the dew falls; on the following day air and draw into the barn. We have in red clover one of the most valuable fodder plants in the world, but our present method of curing by exposure for a long time to a hot sun reduces the crop in value to poor hay and in flavor to an insipid weed. A ton of the best clover hay costs the farmer less than one-third that of a ton of corn and, all things considered, its food value is about the same.

Clover, in a mixture of grasses for hay, gives the best results, especially if the grass with which it is mixed is inclined to stool. In such cases the storing and curing are attended with less difficulty. Tall meadow oat grass, orchard grass and even timothy do not object to taking clover as a partner.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held in BATAVIA, N. Y., September, 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORGAN in 1826, which has been the most widely published of any Anti-Masonic document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan and the able and eloquent addresses of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

SEE WHY.

1. It contains—
2. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
3. Full picture of the Monument.
4. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his affidavit—almost the last public act of his life.
5. Address by J. E. Roy, D.D.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against

lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung! What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience!

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

NATIONAL SUICIDE,

AND

ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"Even his failings lean to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them are true for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ill.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Independent Repository, (Chicago, Ill.)

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a well-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fantastic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Progression, (Pittsburgh.)

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The collapse of a great wheat corner on the Board of Trade Tuesday caused a panic in the prices of the June and July options, and resulted in the failure of three firms to the amount of nearly $2,000,000. The second day of the troubles on the Board of Trade resulted in the failure of fifteen firms and the utter collapse of the corner in wheat. A large number of law suits are already begun because of this failure, in one case involving $2,000,000.

The brickyards will all commence work next week. They will not sell any but will manufacture enough to fill their sheds. In case the strike is not ended at that time they will close down their work for the season.

The weather was warmer Friday than for six years, and seven cases of sunstroke were reported in this city.

The American Association of Nurserymen, Florists and Seedsmen held its twelfth annual convention at the Exposition Building. About 200 delegates were present.

The Mayor last week ordered the closing of all gambling houses in the city. Its enforcement is very thorough. Only one house had the temerity to "run," and its inmates, twenty in number, were arrested.

COUNTRY.

By the burning of the steamer Champlain, of the Northern Michigan Transportation Company, at the mouth of Traverse Bay, Thursday, twenty persons lost their lives. Among the missing were some Chicago people. The fire started in the boiler room by the breaking of an oil lamp. The engines could not be stopped, and the small boats could not, therefore, be launched; all capsized.

Six persons were killed and many others fatally and seriously injured by a hurricane that struck Grand Forks, D. T., Thursday. Houses, stores, and the university were demolished; a train was blown from the track, and a total damage of $150,000 was done.

The jury that will pass judgment on Jake Sharp, the chief conspirator of the boodlers in New York, was completed Wednesday. It was decided to have a squad of deputies guard the prisoner in his own house during the trial.

A number of emigrants arrived at Nogales, A. T., Monday from the socialistic colony of Topoto bampo, in the peninsula of Lower California. They told sad stories of the hardships they endured, and say the scheme is a wicked fraud. Five hundred persons went to the colony. Hunger and privation reduced the number to one hundred.

The strike of all the building trades in St. Paul, Minn., was inaugurated Wednesday. There was no disturbance, the men leaving their work quietly. It is said the plumbers and plasterers will join the strikers.

In a mine near Springfield, Ill., Thursday, W. L. Gerkins ran against a brace with such force as to tear his scalp completely from his head. Physicians in Springfield hospital restored the scalp, and think it will grow again.

Present indications are for a wool clip in Michigan of 11,641,000 pounds. The number of sheep in the State is 50,000 less than in 1884.

The great coke strike in Pennsylvania practically ended Thursday when the Hungarian strikers returned to work at the old schedule of wages. There are 4,000 foreigners in the coke regions, and they say they will return to work when the opportunity offers.

Natural gas and oil were discovered Thursday at Bremer, Ind., in paying quantities.

A Raleigh (N. C.) liquor dealer was arrested Saturday for selling beer in violation of the local option law, and a writ of habeas corpus was sued out, and before the full bench of the Supreme Court Monday, counsel for the defense argued that beer and wine were not spirituous liquors, within the meaning of the law.

Miss Mary B. Hill, a student at Cornell University, at Ithaca, N. Y., fell to the bottom of the Cascadilla gorge Sunday, and expired Monday morning.

Five men were killed and many injured by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge in the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company's mines at Inman, a few miles from Chattanooga. The victims were nearly all killed.

Seventy one immigrants were detained by the Emigration Commissioners because their fares had been paid by the British Government. In the United States District Court, Tuesday, at New York, Judge Brown decided the objection to their landing included no statutory reason for describing them as paupers, and discharged them.

Two men were killed and two shockingly mutilated in the Mill Creek mine of the Delaware and Hudson Company, Tuesday, at Wilkesbarre, Pa. In the same mine a man was killed Monday, and the regular hands would not go to work the day after, as the accident had occurred on the 13th of the month.

A construction train fell through a trestle on Huntington's new railroad, back of Newport, on the afternoon of June 17th, and probably fatally injured four workmen, who were on the cars.

A careful estimation of the damage from forest fires in northern Michigan puts the total loss at $7,000,000, including $2,500,000 caused by the destruction of the town of Lake Linden. Only eight lives are positively known to have been lost. Great destitution prevails throughout the burned district.

District Attorney Winfield of Madison county, New Jersey, has taken steps to bring to punishment Herr Most and a number of his followers for their connection with the rioting at Oak Hill Park, near Gutenberg, Sunday afternoon, June 12.

FOREIGN.

Two million acres of land in Sonora, Mexico, have been purchased by Eastern capitalists, whose purpose is to establish an American colony.

It is said that no importance is attached by the Mexican national government to the situation in Chihuahua, where two rival governors and state legislatures exist. The matter is said to be the result of local quarrels, and the federal authorities will not actively interfere, except to preserve the peace.

Reports prevail at Ottawa, Ontario, that the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, had threatened to resign if Parliament adopted the resolution in favor of total abstinence. The closeness of the vote has rendered the Prohibitionists jubilant.

The trial of the members of the Alsatian Patriotic League at Leipzig, on a charge of high treason for supporting attempts to separate Alsace-Lorraine from Germany was begun last week. All the accused, while confessing they contributed to the funds of the Patriotic League, pleaded not guilty, contending that the league was not a secret society, but merely a society whose aim is to promote patriotism in France, and raise the efficiency of French youth by the forming of gymnastic and rifle societies. They denied all knowledge of the design attributed to the league to reconquer Alsace-Lorraine.

The Queen's jubilee began on Monday of this week, the imposing ceremonies to take place on Tuesday. The procession will surpass in brilliancy and magnificence anything seen in London during her Majesty's reign, while the ceremonies at Westminster Abbey and Buckingham Palace will equal in grandeur the coronation. The Queen is said to be very nervous, and fears dynamite outrages. A large number of royal personages are in London, and at the Queen's command United States Minister Phelps will deliver at Buckingham Palace, President Cleveland's jubilee congratulations.

OF

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. S. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to afford the most different between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Helfenstein. Paper covers, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

If Canon Wilberforce, the eloquent English advocate of temperance, maintains the views reported in his address a week ago in New York, it would be a wise policy to retain him in this country for a half year. Before an immense audience in Chickering Hall he said he wished to warn America not to let the liquor traffic control her as it does England. "In England we put our big brewers into Parliament, instead of putting them into jail, as you do in Maine. There they lock up liquor before it gets into a man, in New York you only lock it up afterward. There must be no compromising, no high license, but universal and absolute prohibition." That is third party doctrine strong and true.

The Grand Lodge of New York was sitting when the Covenant Synod passed its grand resolutions against the orders. The Masons were not a little aroused by the Synod's action, and commented freely and with much sarcasm on the "cranks" up the river at Newburg. One very intelligent Past Grand Master spoke of the insignificant "Covenant-ists." It is an item worthy of note that, though many of the Grand Lodge were said to be Christians, yet it was in a very unchristian temper that they heard of the Synod's action. Instead of noting the objections of a body of eminently pious men and making inquiry whether those objections were well founded in Bible doctrine, they were satisfied to scoff and sneer just like the infidels in their ranks.

The great building strike in this city is virtually over. Last Thursday the bricklayers resolved to withdraw their demand for Saturday pay-day. The hod-carriers and carpenters have unsettled grievances, and since the bricklayers struck the contractors have taken such action that the two parties are not come together though the particular cause of the strike is given up. A new union was formed of the workmen some days ago, on a much more reasonable and liberal basis than the old lodge. All who joined it were given work. But the season is already far gone, and many buildings projected will not be begun until settled times. Much capital is therefore turned into other channels. The estimated loss inflicted by this strike is nearly two and a half million dollars, most of which would now, but for the workmen's lodges, be divided among their families.

Mayor Hewitt of New York gave that city a decent Sabbath for four or five weeks, by enforcing the law against liquor selling in saloons and hotels. The proprietors of two of the latter took the case into court and were beaten, but the Supreme Court last Friday decided in their favor—that they might sell liquor to guests at meals, but saloons must remain closed. Last Sabbath, therefore, witnessed the most disgraceful scenes in even aristocratic hotels. All became, for the time being, vile as doggeries. They are surely welcome to their victory, and if they do not sicken of the customers they have brought within their doors, we are much mistaken. While such scenes were being acted in New York the city authorities of St. Louis were closing up the grog shops for a day. This is a good work for our cities. It will soon pass the experimental stage, and the people will demand that the liquor business cease permanently every First day of the week.

The Queen's Jubilee was celebrated with the greatest enthusiasm in England last week. From every clime the wide world around, wherever the drum beats time to the martial airs of England, came congratulations and messages of respect and thanksgiving which must make Victoria a monarch to be envied of the rest. In all the large cities of America banquets, processions and speeches attested the love of Englishmen for the noble woman who has so long ruled one of the mightiest of the nations,—a reign without a parallel for the contributions England has made to Christian civilization and evangelization. The remarkable scenes in Boston, told by our correspondent, remind us of the Music Hall mobs in 1881. The morning after the celebration an attempt was made to pull down the figures of the lion and the unicorn which adorn the old State House in that city. Ropes were fastened to them, but the misguided patriots who were pulling on them were scared away.

A meeting of Masonic Grand Masters and Past Grand Masters was held in this city last week. Its like has not been seen since 1859, and the last before that was in 1845. It met at the invitation of Illinois Masons, and was not without some marked opposition as the report of Grand Master Lawrence of New York shows. Twenty-three States and Territories were represented, however, by some forty Masons, who discussed for three days such questions as the "Landmarks of Freemasonry," the prerogatives of Grand Masters, etc. A very conservative opinion prevailed. The Missouri Grand Lodge raid on the saloon was also discussed and the great lights of the order were unanimous in regarding it as contrary to Masonic law. No such resolution will be adopted in Illinois, said Grand Master Darrah. An habitual drunkard would be expelled because he disgraces the order in the community, and is very apt to divulge lodge secrets, but Masons will drink and sell liquor so long as there is Masonry.

Henry Randall Waite, president, on behalf of the "American Institute of Civics," and in furtherance of its purposes, which are to promote, through the agency of the school, the press, the pulpit, and otherwise, the conditions essential to good citizenship and good government, respectfully suggests that on the Sunday preceding the coming anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, Christian ministers of all denominations, so far as possible, shall give special attention in their services for the day to the following topics, viz.: "The influence of the church as related to integrity in citizenship, and the duty of Christian men as citizens." In presenting this suggestion it is proper to say that the "Institute of Civics" represents no party or creed in politics or religion; that its sole purpose is to aid, as above indicated, in the promotion of integrity, intelligence and patriotism, as essential qualifications for the right use of the suffrage; and that it is on this ground that it confidently seeks the co-operation of the pulpit. Printed matter which will be of interest to clergymen disposed to adopt the suggestion made, will be sent free, upon application to Mr. Waite at the office of the Institute, 83 Cedar street, New York City.

THE BIBLE IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

PROPOSITION I.—Mere intellectual knowledge, alone, is not sufficient to fully qualify men for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

Education, to be symmetrical and complete, must include the harmonious development and culture of the physical, intellectual, and moral faculties of man. Any system which contemplates only the training of the intellect is obviously defective. It does not reach the entire nature of the individual to be educated. Knowledge is power we are told, but it depends upon the use to which it is applied whether it be power for good or evil. If it is merely the knowledge of the head, unrestrained by principles of sound morality, it may even prove to be an avenue to crime and lawlessness. It is a well-known fact that learned men are sometimes very immoral and wicked; while illiterate men are often moral and upright. As it is with individuals, so it is with communities and nations. Leckey, whose well-known rationalistic writings preclude the idea of his being biased in favor of Christianity, says in his History of European Morals:

"It is one of the plainest of facts that neither the individuals nor the ages that have been most distinguished for intellectual achievements have been most distinguished for moral excellence, and that a high intellectual and material civilization has often co-existed with much depravity."

If this be true, it is safe to arrive at the conclusion that there is no direct road from the head to the heart. That is to say, a man's head may be a perfect lumber-room of intellectual lore, and yet his heart may be woefully corrupt. His mind may be crammed full of the facts of science, art, law, or literature, and yet he may be destitute of true morality. This brings me to PROPOSITION II.—The inculcation of sound morality is essential to the formation of right character, and the promotion of good citizenship.

The idea that mere intellectual culture is a panacea for all the evils which afflict society is not only fallacious, but absurd. Illiteracy and crime are not always in corresponding proportions. Indeed, it is often found that the greatest amount of crime and disorder prevails where there is the highest state of mental cultivation. Carefully prepared statistics prove this to be true. But shall we conclude from these facts that intellectual education is a curse, that ignorance is bliss, and that we ought to disband the public schools, thereby leaving the masses without the means of knowledge, in order to make them virtuous and happy? Most assuredly not. Culture of the mind is an excellent thing as far as it goes. But this alone is not sufficient. Right here is the capital defect in the secular idea of public education. It proposes to cultivate the mind, but leaves the heart untouched. Such education is entirely inadequate, and altogether one-sided. In addition to this, there must be moral culture and training in order to restrain men from vice, and make them good citizens.

A profound thinker has well said that "whatever we would have appear in the citizen or in the nation we must first put into the schools." It certainly is of paramount importance that morality should be made to appear in the organic life of the nation. It ought, therefore, to be carefully inculcated in the common schools. But the question naturally arises: Can morality be successfully inculcated and maintained under the godless system proposed by the secularists? This we shall now consider.

PROPOSITION III.—There can be no sound, healthy, and reliable standard of morality, where the principles and motives of religion are excluded.

Conscience must have a gauge. We must have some definite and reliable standard by which to determine the moral quality of an action. And we must have something by which to recommend and enforce devotion to the true, the beautiful, and the good. For this we must look to a higher source than the fallible maxims of men. We find it in the principles and motives of religion. Here we have a solid foundation upon which to base the work of moral education. Our ablest patriots and statesmen have ever recognized the connection between morality and religion. The "Father of our Country" said in his Farewell Address:

"And let us with caution indolge the supposition, that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."—Words of Washington, p. 48.

Let it be remembered that Washington was not only a great military chieftain, but also a profound thinker and a wise statesman. His words are well founded. They are well worthy of attention. Pure morality must find its support in religious faith. Without the sanctions of religion, it would indeed be difficult to make any satisfactory progress in the impartation of moral instruction. Recognizing, then, the importance of religion as the foundation and source of morality, we next inquire what religion furnishes the best code of morals?

PROPOSITION IV.—Christianity alone offers that pure and benevolent system of morality which is essential to the right development of national and individual character.

The morality of the Christian religion, as set forth in the Bible, is the only system that will meet our wants and necessities in this respect. Here we have the nature of right and wrong clearly defined, and the consequences of each distinctly set forth. Here we find the most cogent reasons for abstaining from vice, and the strongest incentives to virtue that could possibly be brought to bear upon the human mind. The erudite Lord Bacon truly says: "There never was found in any age of the world, either religion or law that did so highly exalt the public good as the Bible." Let the moral precepts of the Bible be wholly ignored, and let the restraints which Christianity imposes be banished from society, and the world would soon be turned into one vast, seething, boiling, raging pandemonium of brutalized men. Even Prof. Huxley, in spite of his infidel proclivities, is constrained to say:

"I have always been strongly in favor of secular education, in the sense of education without theology; but I must confess I have been no less seriously perplexed to know by what practical measures the religious feeling, which is the essential basis of conduct, was to be kept up in the present utterly chaotic state of opinion on these matters, without the use of the Bible. The pagan moralists lack life and color; and even the noble stoic, Marcus Antonius, is too high and refined for an ordinary child. Take the Bible as a whole; make the severest deductions which fair criticism can dictate, and there yet remains in this old literature a vast residuum of moral beauty and grandeur. By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized? If Bible reading is not accompanied by constraint and solemnity, I do not believe there is anything in which children take more pleasure."

Let these weighty concessions be carefully noted by those who are clamoring for the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools, and yet are such enthusiastic admirers of Prof. Huxley. In this instance his observations are certainly entitled to our favorable consideration.

CONCLUSION OF THE WHOLE MATTER.

We have endeavored to show that mere intellectual education is inadequate and one-sided; that moral culture is necessary as a factor in public education; that religion is essential to the maintenance of pure morality; and that the religion of the Bible is alone capable of producing the requisite standard of morality. The conclusion at which we arrive, then, is that religious exercises, including the use of the Bible, should be retained in our public schools, the demands of secularists to the contrary notwithstanding.

Weatherford, Texas, June 13, 1887.

WATCHMAN, WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

A WORD TO YOUNGER MEN; WHERE ARE WE DRAFTING?

BY M. N. BUTLER.

There are people who think wisdom died with the ancients. They never look ahead but are always pining over the past. They are the clogs to the wheels of progress, and prophets of ill omen to every onward movement. Old men have their prejudices and by-gone associations to nurse and brood over. Old things are passing away, and men who try to instill in the minds of their children old jealousies and past political animosities are not the guardians of liberty. Fossils and mossbacks may stay in the ruts of twenty years ago and brood over the sarcophagus of dead issues, but men of progress must grapple with the living, burning questions of the hour. Antiquated seers and last century philosophers, with their worn-out resolutions and threadbare campaign ditties, are rapidly going out of vogue.

The truth is we have entered a new political era. Another dispensation is being ushered in. Laws, customs, and usages are rapidly changing. The world moves, and new complications and relations are constantly arising and must needs be adjusted.

New times, agencies and circumstances demand new qualifications. Time, thought and experience are necessary to arrive at correct conclusions. Public sentiment is undergoing a moral as well as a political change. Like the influence of the moon on the tide, moral discussion is causing political opinion to ebb and flow. Policy, time-serving politicians are all at sea. They do not comprehend and are not capable of understanding this new state of things. Men who are skilled in the spoils system, and who are adepts at packing a primary, or manipulating a convention are completely nonplussed at this spontaneous upwelling of principle. There are more independent voters now than for two generations past. They hold the balance of power almost everywhere. Disintegration of old parties and phenomenal growth of new ones is unprecedented in the history of popular government.

This independent element is largely young men who have grown up since the war. They have the present and future to deal with, and must either be on the winning or losing side of the great problems so far reaching in their influence. They can hardly afford to be on the wrong side. They propose to keep abreast of the progress of the century and have a hand in moulding the political polity of the country. It behooves them to join the rising tide and not the receding one. New and living issues call for their prayers, their speeches and their votes. History teaches them that reforms, social, religious, and political, never go backward, and they cannot afford even as a matter of policy to be on the wrong side. It is an undisputed fact that parties long in power become corrupt, and there is no instance on record where a political party has ever reformed itself. The young men who vote a ticket simply because their "great-grandfather" did, are getting few and far between. Those who do can hardly expect to supplant antiquated leaders who are all the while harping on dead issues. Better join the ranks of progress and lead young men on the great questions of the day.

This age is calling for a new and higher order of statesmanship, and many a farmer's son, teacher, mechanic and day-laborer will be called upon to legislate and execute laws that past statesmen cannot so much as comprehend. By "past statesmen" we mean those who hold that the great reforms and intricate movements, with their mighty interests, cannot be adjusted by legislation. Younger blood, stronger hearts, and heads clear of old prejudices and foggyism will attend to the matter. Old philosophers do not take kindly to innovations. They look upon all new departures as impractical and unwise. And so it is in statesmanship and jurisprudence. Each epoch in history represents an entirely new order, with now and then a "Grand Old Man" who lives in advance of his fellows.

Political changes, rapid and startling, are doubtless yet in store for the American people. The very heart of the nation is throbbing with suppressed emotion. Political log-rollers and party wire-pullers have run everything from the village caucus to the national nominating convention. In every community are men whose sole business has been to manage local politics. To rescue the country from these demagogues and their henchmen, the independent voter must make politics a study. The people will have their rights. The Republican party ignored this, and popular upheaval swept it from its pomp and power. The grand old party after a quarter of a century of trial so far fell from grace that the people said, Step down and out. Its legalized robbery by corporate corruption—subsidies, land grants, fraudulent contracts, consolidations, watered stocks, and receiverships made private property insecure and public prosperity uncertain. The spoils system has grown with the increasing age of the dominant parties. The political evils afflicting our country are the legitimate outgrowth of these parties. Matters have not improved with the change of administration. It was a choice between two evils.

The Democratic party does not have what the Republican party failed to possess—the confidence of the laborer and producer. The existence of the old parties has become a scramble for office, a life-and-death struggle for the loaves and fishes. The only difference between these great historic parties is simply the outs and the ins. The patriot, all alive to the great moral questions so profoundly agitating the public mind, turns with disgust and contempt from the vacillating, catering policy of his old party.

A strange fatality is sweeping the old party leaders off the stage and others are being indefinitely retired. All this is not accidental. It is the indication of a gathering storm that may be little less than a political revolution. Minds not blinded by party affiliation and prejudice realize but too sensibly that the crisis is upon us. Bible scholars are conjuring up a most fearful war to which all former commotions are as nothing. We are not looking up prophecy, but from the monitions around us portend change and evolution if not revolution. One thing is certain: pure men are not going to longer place hope in agencies manned by, and run in the interests of criminality. The baser sort do not voluntarily abandon political machinery already safe in their control.

It remains then for the patriot to scuttle the old, rotten hulks, and let them and their vicious crew go to the bottom together. Already a new craft, full-rigged, every sail set, and every rope tightened, is plowing the political ocean. It is manned by the fathers of America. Its chart is the Holy Bible and the Constitution of the United States. Its political ensign is not the red flag, nor the black flag, but the glorious standard, the old Stars and Stripes, bought with patriot blood, rebaptized in the name of human freedom, only to be lowered or supplanted when liberty has gone out in night forever. Its motto is not anarchy, outlawry, blood and plunder. It is one that will go ringing down the ages: "For God and Home and Native Land! Save the Boys!"

Sad fathers, heart-broken mothers, weeping sisters, despairing wives and hungry children, catch up the glad refrain that swells into a mighty chorus, wafted from ocean to ocean, and borne aloft on the prayers and chants of the churches of America, it reaches the very battlements of heaven, and angels join the anthem till the vaults of eternity resound with the song of redemption from rum.

What a theme for the poet and the painter! No more drunken husbands, brutal fathers, reeling sons or degraded brothers cursed by alcohol. No more bleeding hearts, blasted hopes, shame and unspeakable misery from this nemesis of hell. May God speed the noble ship Prohibition.

That is the shibboleth of the hour. It is, however, intimately connected with other questions upon which its triumph eventually depends. He who imagines that only one curse afflicts society is narrow in his vision, as much so as the old quack who proposed to relieve the suffering of all humanity by doctoring everybody for the mumps. The demagogue sees only one question, and only one side of a question at a time; the statesman looks at all public questions from every standpoint.

Darlington, Mo.

PROTESTANTISM IS NOT DARKNESS.

In a recent notice of the National Protestant we expressed the fear that it would turn out to be an organ of non-Catholic secret societies. The latest number, now before us, confirms us in our opinion. We see that it is befogged in the common delusion that the right way to oppose Roman Catholicism is to favor the secret societies which profess to be the champions of Protestantism. It publishes to the Protestants of America, an address sent to it by the "Recorder of the Supreme Black Encampment of America, the parent head of the order of Knights of Malta in this country," a secret society newly introduced into America. This order, which professes to be "neither national, political, nor sectarian," and claims to have been instituted in the year 1118, when there was no form of Christianity but Roman Catholicism, still has the audacity to say that it is "a body of men banded together under most binding forms to comfort and sustain one another in the practice of the Christian religion, to offer mutual assistance in time of need, to promote Protestant unity, and to defend the Protestant faith against all foes whatsoever." Though a foreign plant, and "a descendant of the military order of the Middle Ages," it presumes to inform American Protestants that "experience has proved that the best mode of successfully opposing the machinations of the Romish priesthood is by secret societies, under whose veil of secrecy their membership can freely exchange views, and within the assemblies of which Rome cannot raise her voice nor plot their ruin."

This imported order, after declaring that "the order of Malta, being one of the few military orders of the Middle Ages which have survived the revolutions in society, possesses the spirit as well as the forms of Christian knighthood, and is thus decidedly elevating and eminently Christian," has the effrontery to say that it is "the true evangelical alliance for the propagation of the faith." What will the great International Evangelical Christian Alliance say to the claims of this military order? Will the hundreds of Protestant clergymen of America who help to compose that august association yield to the claims of this newly imported secret military order of the dark ages of Catholic Europe?

As a final and crowning step in the presumption of this order its address says: "This ancient and honorable fraternity, therefore, calls upon all Protestants, by whatever name known, who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth, to enlist under its banners, and to take their part in the religious regeneration of the world." Now the National Protestant, in the same number in which it prints and indorses the address of the secret order of Malta, says of the "Order of the American Union": "We are pleased to announce that by order of the National Executive Committee of the Order of the American Union, an address has been issued by them which removes the ban of secrecy, to a great extent, which has surrounded the order with a mysterious suspicion, well calculated to operate to its disadvantage, and give its enemies a handle to work upon the prejudices of the public." If the removal of the "ban of secrecy" from one secret order is pleasing to the National Protestant, how can it approve another order which declares secrecy to be the only hope of Protestantism?

We are opposed to popery and the dark order of Jesuits; yet we are none the less opposed to foreign secret military orders, which had their origin in the dark ages, or in a more modern ale-house. Christianity is radically opposed to all dark systems, and must reject them all alike. Hence our opposition to Roman Catholicism is also directed against secret orders of every kind, no matter what their professions are respecting Christianity in general, or Protestantism in particular.—Prof. W. O. Tobey.

THE CHURCH RESPONSIBLE FOR SABBATH-BREAKING.

In an article on "Sunday Labor in Massachusetts" the Independent deduces the following striking facts from the report of the Labor Bureau of Massachusetts, which should cause as much alarm at the relapse of practical godliness it reveals as is now shown toward the theories of Aodover:

By far the largest of all the industries in the State, in which Sunday labor is systematically done, is that of the railroads. The first railroad train was on what was then the Boston and Worcester road. It began to run on Monday, May 1st, 1834, going as far as Newton, seven miles out. The first train that ran on Sunday was on the second road built in the State, the Boston and Providence. It began to run on Sunday, September 14th, 1834, and continues substantially to this day. The old stage line which this road was displacing had been accustomed to go through from Providence to Boston on Sunday morning "to finish the trip" for those passengers who had come from New York on the Saturday night steamboat. The railroad from the first did the same (finished the trip), and does to this day, as do all roads where the occasion arises.

The first strictly Sunday train, i. e., one which began the trip on Sunday, was a daily steamboat train on the same road, which was put on Saturday, April 2d, 1836; but which only continued that summer.

On Sunday, July 2d, 1837, a Sunday mail train began to run on the Boston and Worcester, which, in some form, has continued ever since, except in the six years from '47 to '53, during which period, so far as can be learned, not even a mail train left Boston on Sunday on this road, except when, sometimes, the Cunard mail steamer arrived too late for the last train Saturday night, and a special was sent through to New York Sunday night. But in May of the latter year a Sunday evening New York mail train was announced, which still continues; and that train inaugurated the present era of Sunday trains.

The Sunday mail train on the Eastern road had a singularly suggestive history. It was put on as soon as the road began to run in the fall of 1838, and continued till February, 1847. On the last Sunday of that year it was hauled off, apparently because it did not pay, it being understood that the management of the road gave up one-seventh of the contract price to get released from that train; and it is told in Salem that on the last train from Boston on that last Sunday afternoon, no passengers rode but employes of the railroad. Moreover, for many years after, even all during the war, the mail between Salem and Boston was carried by a one-horse wagon, there not being travel enough to pay for any kind of a coach. Indeed, the recent era of Sunday railroading, so far as that road is concerned, did not begin till June, 1872, with the putting on of the Bangor express.

The Sunday "church trains" were begun in November, 1860, by Mr. Twichell, of the Boston and Worcester, between Brookline and Boston, at the urgent and long continued solicitation of members of churches who had lived in Boston but now lived in Brookline, and who wanted still to attend upon the ministrations of their Boston pastors. It was twelve years before the next church local was put on (on the Old Colony road), and now for more than twelve years every road has had them in some form. But the chief point of the matter is, that the whole system was begun and extended by church-going people, for church-going purposes; and that from these church excursion trains sprang the whole system of seaside Sunday excursion trains, now so vastly multiplied. A single incident illustrates the whole matter. A preacher who lived out of town in a village on the Old Colony road, had an opportunity for a number of months of supplying a pulpit on the west side of Boston. The Sunday local which he used reached the city at 10:15 A. M., but he found the quarter of an hour to 10:30 too short to get to his appointment. So he wrote to the proper railroad officer, asking if that train could not be run in five minutes earlier. There is our Sunday excursion system in its germ.

For some years after the horse-railroads were established no cars were run on Sunday. The case of the Cambridge road is an excellent example. It was at the first and is yet, officered by conscientious men of the Puritan type, who believe in keeping the Sabbath holy; but they were forced, after six years, by the conditions of the life of society in which they abode, to yield and run their cars on Sunday.

And the strange part of it all is, that by far the chief part of the pressure by which the Sunday cars were caused to be put on came from church members and church-going people, who wanted them to run for their accommodation in going to church.

Sunday steam cars and horse cars are by far the largest systematic Sunday industries in Massachusetts, and the others do not call for special mention.—Independent.

FIFTY YEARS OF AN ILLINOIS COLLEGE.

FROM THE ADDRESS ON THE CELEBRATION OF THE SEMI-CENTENNIAL OF KNOX COLLEGE, BY

HON. S. V. WHITE, OF BROOKLYN,
N. Y., JUNE 9TH, 1887.

In attempting to cull, here and there, an event from these fifty years which may instruct or amuse us, I am reminded of a theme which I heard discussed at, I think, the first literary entertainment which I ever attended in these academic halls. It was at a quarterly meeting of a literary society, and, if I am right as to the date, it was before the foundation of the Gnothauti, and must have been, as it were, an A-Delphic oracle. The personality of the speaker is gone from me. He may be, and I trust he is, at present; but whether he still abides with us or has gone beyond, memory still sounds his theme in my ears. And this is what he spoke about, "The crisis of the world's destiny is now." I was young when I heard those high-sounding words, and though as a member of the Academy not yet advanced to the dignity of a Freshman, I had the regulation awe at the wisdom of an undergraduate, yet at that time the theme impressed me as high-sounding and sophomoric. But with increasing years and maturer thought, I have come to believe that whether consciously or unconsciously, the student who selected the topic had, as it were, caught and repeated the voice of History, that impartial witness of the ages, as she calls to generation after generation while the years glide by, "The crisis of the world's destiny is now."

Recur with me for a moment to a very few salient headlands of history, and apply with me the student's theme. When the voice sounded through the crypts of Egypt's palace, saying, "Let my people go," do you not hear a voice in solemn warning saying, "The crisis of the world's destiny is now?" When the eleven slept in the garden and the Incarnate cried in his agony, "If it be possible, let this cup pass," was not the solemn night made still more solemn by the words, "The crisis of the world's destiny is now?" When Columbus sailed, and Cromwell usurped, and Waterloo thundered, did not History repeat her solemn warning, even as she voices it to-day, and will repeat it "to the last syllable of recorded time," echoing and re-echoing the Sophomore's theme—true in the beginning, true now and true even unto the end—"The crisis of the world's destiny is now?"

Let us then as we discuss the events of the fifty years now ended remember that each half century as it passed, strode backward into antiquity pregnant with events in which nerves were rasped, and brains crazed, and kingdoms won, and causes lost; just as the momentous present throbs and pulsates, and exults and despairs to-day.

To determine something of the work which the world has done, and to which the institutions of learning have contributed, let us inquire briefly as to the condition of science, and art, and commerce, and thought, and moral sense in this country fifty years ago. Some of the younger of my auditors may be startled to hear me say that when Knox College commenced its work, probably no Illinoian had ever kindled a fire or lit his cob pipe with the aid of a friction match. I qualify the statement, because there is a possibility that among the few who experimented with a flat shaving, coated with a mixture of sulphide of antimony, chlorate of potash and gum arabic, which could be ignited by drawing it between folds of sand paper, there might perhaps have been a citizen of Illinois. But as those experiments had only extended through two years, and were, for the most part, confined to the neighborhood of European and Eastern laboratories, the presumptions are strong that in the year of grace 1837 no Illinoian had ever exchanged his flint and steel for the magic lucifer. Be that as it may, Knox College had taught chemistry five years before the sulphide of antimony gave place to phosphorus and nitre, and the paste on the side of a shaving gave place to a deposit on the end of a splinter, and the simple friction match entered the arena of its great usefulness as our daily fireside companion. So also the revered Losey had told Knox's students what he knew, and all that was then known, about the iodide of silver and the actin rays of the sun, two years before the French painter Daguerre startled the world with the results of twelve years of experiments in what has since been named the art of photography. I do not comment on the art or its multifarious uses, but simply call your attention to the fact that the world's knowledge of it is two years younger than the honored institution whose birth we are now celebrating. But still more startling is the fact that Knox College had done nine years' work, and its first graduating class were "conning and learning by rote" their graduating addresses when on June 19, 1846, the Congress of the United States inserted into the appropriation bill for that year two simple lines, the results of which were to crown with the unfading laurels of immortality an American citizen, Professor Samuel F. B. Morse, and to move forward the hands on the dial of human progress centuries, as it were, in the beat of a pendulum. And these are the magic lines:

"For defraying the expenses of the magnetic telegraph from the city of Washington to Baltimore, four thousand dollars."

Were there time and were this a fitting occasion it would be an interesting study to glean from the Congressional records of that day how the statesmen of that period, the guardians of the people's treasure, bemoaned this squandering of the people's money. But this is not the time, nor is this the place, for delving in such richness of research. But that $4,000 voted by Congress when Knox College was nine years old, was the philosopher's stone which transmuted an American inventor's thought into gold outweighing in value all the product of all mines of the Orient. * * *

When Knox College entered upon her work the State of Illinois had been less than eighteen years a sovereign State. The college is seventeen days older than the city of Chicago, both having been incorporated by the same legislature. There was no census for the year 1837, but more than three years later, in the census of 1840, the city of Chicago numbered 4,470 inhabitants. Making an estimate of the population from the census returns of 1830 and 1840 compared, it is safe to say that there are now in her commercial metropolis three times as many inhabitants as there were in the State of Illinois when the college received its charter. It was in 1837 that the internal improvement craze swept over the State when Illinois borrowed "not wisely but too well;" but it was many a weary year before the deer which grazed her prairies were ever startled by the sound of the locomotive's whistle. But I would not grow prolix. I fear that I dwell too much zest upon those early days. To me the Illinois of fifty years ago is as vivid a picture as any which my memory stores. * * *

But there is something in the atmosphere of a college, the importance of which far transcends the learning of a Greek paradigm or an algebraic formula. I refer to the code of ethics and of morals which, without being printed and formally promulgated, is always dominant in an institution of learning.

I would not inveigh against other institutions in this State. At the time I entered Knox Academy in 1849 there was not a college in the State about which I was not informed. There was not one which was not presided over by pious and, as I believe, God-fearing men; there was not one whose faculty did not labor with deep religious fervor in behalf of the religion of Christ; and yet so benumbed was the moral sense of the churches of this State, that there was not one of them except Knox College which did not stand mute in the presence of the barbarism of the Middle Ages, which made merchandise of 3,000,000 of men and women in this land, rather than give offence to remote, contingent patronage, which was hoped for from the slave States to the south and west of us—a patronage which, though long hoped for, practically never came.

But not so Knox College. From the first to the last "she cried aloud and spared not" against this giant iniquity. When Abraham Lincoln, on March 3d, 1837, entered his modest and timid protest against the passage of the concurrent resolutions passed by both Houses, on the subject of domestic slavery, the men named as incorporators for Knox College—whom Lincoln had just aided to incorporate—were already laying the foundations of this institution upon a corner-stone inscribed with the tenet that "domestic slavery was founded on injustice and bad policy," and from that day till April 14th, 1865, when Lincoln fell a martyr to that conscience which was voiced in his early protest, there never was a day when any professor or teacher in Knox College swerved in word or act from adhesion to that tenet.

"Let the dead past bury its dead." The present is upon us with its duties, and the future presses to meet us with its dangers.

With increased capabilities, increased responsibilities have crowded upon this generation. We have seen how the population of the old world rushed to people our favored land. We have seen how time and space are obliterated by electricity, and how all men in all cities and civilized countries have become neighbors and almost freese companions. But with the throngs of honest toilers from the old world, which had heretofore made the waste places wherein they came to dwell to "bud and blossom as the rose," floating in this incoming tide of immigration there has come for years, and is coming to-day, a motley crowd of red-republicans, socialists, anarchists, communists and nihilists, whose presence is a continued menace to organized government, and who are linked by electricity to all the disorganizers whom they left at home.

Fifty years ago next autumn, on the banks of the Mississippi, the first life blood was shed in the irrepressible conflict, and in a little more than a quarter of a century that conflict called for the sacrifice of more than a million lives.

One year ago last month, on the banks of Lake Michigan, an alien mob on Illinois soil struck at the life of organized society and a dozen citizens, many of them guardians of the lives and property of Chicago, were murderously struck down. It is not mine nor yours to censure the law's delay. It is our proud boast that every right of the poorest and vilest citizen shall be a most sacred trust in the guardianship of our judiciary. But you and I and outraged humanity throughout all Christendom will breathe more freely when we know that Cook county gallows has claimed and received its own.

Before passing from this branch of my subject, I venture to express my opinion, as an incipient statesman, that, staunch protectionist as I claim to be, the point where American industry can be best protected to-day is by the prompt enactment of a law providing that before any alien shall be permitted to land on our shores he shall produce before the American Consul, for the jurisdiction from which he hails, satisfactory proof by witnesses known to such Consul that he is a law-abiding, peaceable citizen, and providing for sending back, as contraband, the whole horde of Pariahs whose hands are raised against law and government in every form. America as the home of the oppressed is all very well. America as the Botany Bay for all the criminals of all the effete monarchies of the globe is quite another matter. But the menace from bold criminals such as those who hurled the grenades in Chicago, startling as it seems, is not so much to be feared as is the danger from milder and more insidious theorists, who gradually break down the laws in respect to property and undermine vested rights, through processes of legislation or other forms of law. When assassins band together and strike at the life of the citizen the safety of the community urges a prompt and efficient punishment, but when property is assailed, because of an infringement of some supposed God-given rights which some theorist urges with voice or pen, every man is inclined to stop and scrutinize himself closely to find out if he may not have been deeply wronged. Spies and his fellow anarchists were convicted without a dissenting vote. But there is another feeling in men's minds when Henry George organizes an "Anti-Poverty Society," and the Rev. McGlynn raises the banner of the "Cross of the new Crusade." And yet the logical effect of putting in practice the theories of these men would be to break down all property-ownership, all vested rights, and demit men to a condition of original savagery, where strength would be the measure of right; and in the struggle for possession life and property would be of no higher value than among the ravenous beasts of the jungle. It is more alarming than the explosion of the anarchists' bomb to see the author of a book, which advocates the confiscation of all landed property without compensation, receive thirty per cent of the votes of the metropolis of the continent in his candidacy for its chief office. And more significant still, is it, when you see a priest of the church of Rome, pre-eminently enshrined in the love of his parishioners, plant himself on that same theory and, as it were, hurl defiance at the infallible head of the church. And the gravity of the contest can only be appreciated when you see the successor of St. Peter, who, according to the acknowledged doctrines of the church, holds all the curses of Erulphus in his hands, and whose predecessors have been wont to hurl them, red-hot and hissing with all the terrors of a sulphurous hell, alike at contumacy and heresy; I say the gravity of the question can only be appreciated when you see the Pope at Rome summon and coax, while McGlynn contemptuously asks for a Pope who shall walk down Broadway "in a stove-pipe hat." This is a communistic doctrine which the men of the present and the men of the immediate future have to contend against; and it becomes every educator, and every institution of learning, to be early in the field to meet and expose the error. And is there not a tendency among legislators which may still, perhaps, be within the pale of legitimate legislation, but is nevertheless on the danger line; is there not a tendency to pander to quasi communistic feeling in needless interference with the management of corporate property?

Will you bear with me while I refer you for a moment to the one great measure passed by the XLIXth Congress,—the great Inter-State Commerce law. And in what I have to say of the needs and tendencies of that law, which was so much desired by western constituencies and was championed by Illinois statesmen, I shall make no statement which I do not accompany with the statistical proof. My first proposition is that where, as in the United States, the whole country is a net-work of railroads, competition is, and has been, a protection to the community greater than all laws combined. The history of commerce shows that no athlete contending in the Olympian games ever watched an adversary with such an intensity as one line of commerce watches its competitors. Let me show you what competition has done for the citizen in twenty years. In the year 1865, taking the statistics of the six great trunk lines of railroads from the West leading into Chicago, and the five great trunk lines to the East from Chicago, and it cost on all the roads combined an average of three and seven one-hundredths cents to move each ton of freight one mile, while in 1885 it cost on the same roads eight mills and thirty-seven hundredths of a mill per mile, or a difference of two cents and two hundred and thirty-three thousandths, which was a saving in rates, to be divided between the producer and the consumer on the freight moved by those eleven roads alone, of $391,453,855, a sum about equal to one-third of the bonded debt of the United States. If applied in the same ratio to the whole of the country, there was saved in the item of freight alone, to the people of the United States, a sum twice greater than our whole national debt. Further than this; competition became statesmanship and solved great financial problems, turning the balance of trade in favor of this country, and reversing the current of merchandise as measured by imports and exports in the first ten out of the twenty years, as compared with the second ten years, more than $2,000,000,000. It was statesmanship when competition, without making oppressive rates at any intermediate points, lowered the rates upon long, transit routes, so that the wheat grown on the vast plateaus of Dakota could compete with the wheat grown in the Genesee Valley. It was statesmanship that poured the wealth of our entire domain into the granaries and store-houses of Europe and the world. But under the guise of a regulation of common carriers, the Federal Government stepped in and said in substance, either you shall carry local freight at a loss or you shall stop delivering Dakota wheat in the Liverpool market. I labor under the disadvantage of having been over thirty years in business and only three months a statesman, and so fail to see either the necessity or the blessing of this parental care by the general government.

But will any be so uncharitable as to say that this is the voice of a Wall street emissary of monopoly, who talks shop to us under the guise of a literary address? If so, let me say in simple justice, that there is not a fibre in my whole frame that is not in sympathy with the laboring men. I was born into an anti-poverty society which had been decreed of God in the garden of Eden. I learned its grip and its pass-word at the handles of an Illinois plough. Thirty-seven years ago this week I was sawing and splitting wood in Galesburg at 75 cents per cord, in obedience to its mandate that a man should "eat his bread in the sweat of his face." And if the theories I advance bear the scrutiny of reason, it matters not whether I imbibed them in Wall street or on the Illinois Bottom. I had intended to discuss the vexed problem of the relation of capital and labor, but I shall have only time for a bare allusion to it. And here again, if I discussed it I should have much to say that might, perhaps, be unpopular. There is no need to discuss before you of the wrongs which capital inflicts upon labor. You know of the greed and avarice which, in order to make the rich richer, sends infancy to the dark chambers of the mine and compels motherhood to meet gaunt famine in an attic or a cellar.

But do you ever look on the reverse of the picture and contemplate the wrongs which labor inflicts upon capital. If you never did, then look at 10,000 men on the Missouri Pacific stop work at a loss to the corporation of millions of dollars, because the receiver of the Texas Pacific, acting under the sole direction and authority of the Federal Court and beyond the control of the Missouri Pacific, discharged a master mechanic. Look at the coke burners of Pittsburgh to-day, who submitted a dispute to arbitration and with worse than Punic perfidy refused to abide by the decision. Look at employers with millions invested in a manufacturing plant, who dare not take even the son of the owner as an apprentice without leave first obtained from a secret conclave, which tells him what he may and what he shall not do. Alas! despotism is not confined to monarchies, nor slavery to the poor.

Had I time to discuss it I could show by statistics that within thirty or twenty years the wages of labor have advanced on an average from 50 to 100 per cent, and the purchasing power of money, in the commodities which form the necessities of life, has also advanced from 30 to 50 per cent. For that advance, and for the amelioration of the condition of laboring men and their families, every philanthropist must rejoice. But labor to-day, not content with the prosperity which it has achieved, with sullen mein and secret greed is watching for an opportunity to gain advantages, which in effect must throttle capital and bankrupt the industries of the country.

Never in the history of the world was there need for more wisdom on the part of educators. Never did the young men going out into life find themselves in the midst of more serious environments. Thirty-three years ago this month I made my exit from these halls. Two opposing theories as to labor then crouched like tigers, ready to spring at each other's throat and grapple for the mastery. Times have changed, theories have changed; but human nature remains the same. The student who goes out to-day still finds opposing interests as to labor lying in wait for each other, and only by wisdom in the educator and the patriot may another death struggle be averted.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

The St. Louis episode, where the municipality and the Grand Army of the Republic both seemed inclined to disclaim the responsibility for the invitation of the President of the United States to that city during the period of a celebration which belonged peculiarly to the latter, was instrumental in stirring up considerable feeling.

More recently the battle-flag controversy overshadowed the first topic, and with the electric qualities of speed and heat was likely to have assumed a decidedly angry look, but, thanks to the torrid wave, the multitude spontaneously sought some less heating diversion. When the thermometer is indicating ninety degrees suffering and perspiring humanity forgets all else save a desire to mop its face, fan itself, divest itself of superfluous raiment and administer cooling decoctions to the interior department.

The politicians will, however, manage to keep these topics alive for a while longer in the hope of making capital for their respective parties; but the promise of the era of good feeling which all patriots hope for and expect grows brighter and nearer fulfillment every year, and no one thoughtfully considering all the circumstances of the case will be discouraged by these incidents.

The action of the President in promptly and sensibly abandoning the proposed return of captured flags when he discovered what its effect would be upon the minds of a large class of people, and that a doubt existed as to the legality of the transfer by him unauthorized by Congress, should end the matter. Although doubtless intended to promote the good feeling which was so conspicuously displayed here at the National Drill, and is now being exhibited by the entertainment at Boston and Lynn and elsewhere of Robert E. Lee Camp of Confederate Veterans by Grand Army of the Republic's posts, it had the effect of re-opening the not entirely cicatrized wounds, but the balm of better acquaintance with the persons and motives of each other will eventually heal these tender spots, until a complete reconciliation of the sections will be effected.

These two questions referred to having occurred almost simultaneously and the prominence which the Grand Army of the Republic has taken in each, has had the effect of attracting considerable attention to that organization here and elsewhere. Having no political meaning from a partisan standpoint this organization is but a kindred one to those that have existed in most countries, and notably in that of France. In this city the order has some peculiar features, such as the Department Employment Committee, which sees to the enforcement of the provisions of law respecting the preference to be given to soldiers and sailors, other things being equal, both for appointment to and retention in office; Pension Committee, which aids the soldier, his widow and orphan in the establishment of proofs necessary to place them on the pension rolls; and a Relief Corps, which comes to the succor of comrades who are brought here in the hope of obtaining either pension or employment, and whose means have become exhausted; and lastly, the important part taken in all parades and ceremonies of a national character. *

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

FANEUIL HALL AND THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.—MONSTER PROTESTATION MEETING BY THE CITIZENS OF BOSTON.—ROUSING SPEECHES IN THE OPEN AIR.—AN INDIGNANT CROWD OF MEN AND WOMEN.

The consent of the Faneuil Committee to allow the British and Scotch societies of this city to celebrate the Queen's birth-day in the "Cradle of Liberty," Faneuil Hall, on the 21st inst., was a terrible shock to the patriotism of the citizens of Boston. An indignation meeting was appointed to be held on the 20th in the old hall by a large number of the most vehement. The failure to secure the absent mayor's signature to the permit to use the hall, only increased the crowd's anger. Some proposed that the building be taken by storm, and one word of encouragement from the ring-leaders would have created sad havoc in Faneuil Hall Square, where thousands of men and women were every moment gathering.

In spite of the mob's threats Janitor Bolton resolutely refused to open the doors until the mayor's signature was appended to the permission already given by the city clerk, declaring that the act would be illegal. He would "obey orders if he broke owners." He admitted that the public owned the building; but the public could not have it until a proper permit was secure from the public's representatives. At last, in despair the leaders informed the surging, indignant mass of humanity that the meeting would be held in the open air. Seldom has a larger congregation of irritated human beings been gathered in this city. Larger and larger it grew every moment until men and women were wedged together as closely as sardines in a box. There was a little delay on the part of the speakers, and the impatient mob again demanded admittance to the hall. The stubbornness of the janitor doubtless saved many lives at this point, for had he unlocked those doors many would have been crushed in the rush for admittance.

Finally, when the band had ceased to lend its half-drowned notes to the din, the meeting commenced, or, at least the harangues did. The speakers were gathered on the huge stone steps of Quincy Market, just opposite the Hall. Mr. Geo. J. Moulton, stepping forward, called the mob to order. He said that the efforts of the British to secure Faneuil Hall was significant of something more than the simple use of the Hall. The papers of Europe, the next day, would declare that America endorsed monarchy. He had no objection to the English celebrating their sovereign's birth-day in this country, but did object to its celebration in a place dedicated to liberty, which was the reverse to monarchy. The speech, which was brief, was greeted by alternate applause and hissing.

The next speaker was E. M. Chamberlin, who reiterated the sentiments of Mr. Moulton. He said that the use of the Hall by the English was declared by some to be a small matter. He thought it a great matter. To keep the British out of Faneuil Hall, he seemed to think as great a matter as the casting overboard of the tea in Boston harbor. Amid cheers he closed his remarks by asking why Bunker Hill or Lexington hadn't been secured by the Queen's jubilee committee? He considered it just as ridiculous to allow them the use of Faneuil Hall.

Father McKenna, the next speaker, said that it would be as consistent to celebrate the anniversary of American Independence in the Tower of London as for the British to celebrate the Queen's jubilee in Faneuil Hall. He swore he would never again enter Faneuil Hall if the jubilee was allowed to be observed there.

Mr. Philip J. Doherty closed an able speech with the all-important question: "Do you, as citizens of Boston, authorize or ratify the act of your official representatives in giving Faneuil Hall to-morrow night?" Before he could finish the question, the reply came like a tornado from thousands of throats, "No! No!"

Shortly after the crowd dispersed, anxious as to the result of the protestation. To the honor of Boston I am glad to inform the readers of the Cynosure, that in spite of the cloud which threatened to burst on the evening of the 21st, it passed away with only a low murmuring of thunder. To be sure the crowds about the Hall were immense, but the large force of police on hand intimidated the violently inclined. One intrepid Englishman was well pummeled, however, for shouting, while in the midst of the mob, "God save the Queen!" Boston ought to be exceedingly thankful for its narrow escape from mob violence.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Bunyan, in his "Holy War," tells us how the city of Mansoul rebelled against King Immanuel and exalted Diabolus to the throne. The king sent four captains, with ten thousand each, to recover the city. The first was Captain Boanerges, his ensign Mr. Thunder; he bore the black colors, and his escutcheon was "three burning thunderbolts." The second was Captain Conviction, his ensign Mr. Sorrow; he bore the pale colors, and his escutcheon was the fery law. The third was Captain Judgment, his ensign Mr. Terror; he bore the red colors, and his escutcheon was a burning fery furnace. The fourth was Captain Execution, his ensign Mr. Justice; he also bore the red colors, and his escutcheon was "a fruitless tree, with an axe lying at the root thereof." These captains laid siege to the city, but could not take it. Then they sent a petition to the king for reinforcements. Five other captains were sent, with ten thousand each: Captain Credence, Captain Good-hope, Captain Charity, Captain Innocent and Captain Patience. Prince Immanuel accompanied them in person. The city was taken, Diabolus cast out, and the King of kings enthroned.

Satan has usurped authority in this land. Christ's army, with its different divisions, Methodists, Presbyterians, Covenanters, etc., have made war upon him, but are unable to dislodge him. And now reinforcements have been sent. The divisions are: the National Reform Association, the W. C. T. U., the N. C. A., and the Evangelical Alliance. Before these armies the enemy's works will go down.

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Taylor St. M. E. church, Newport, Ky., Rev. Chas. Taylor, pastor. He was five years missionary in China. This is a wide-awake congregation. They have a revival there fifty-two Sabbaths in the year. They received National Reform principles with a hearty good will. Prof. James McGinniss, of the Bellevue Public Schools, is a member here. Through him arrangements were made for an evening service in the Bellevue M. E. church, Rev. S. G. Pollard, pastor. Newport, Bellevue and Dayton are south of the Ohio river and east of the Licking; Covington and Ludlow are west. I have had interviews with Rev. D. N. Stafford, pastor of the Eastern Avenue M. E. church of this city, Rev. D. N. Ervin of the Dayton, Ky., Presbyterian church, Rev. E. S. Ralston of the Newport Congregational church, and Rev. James Walch of the Grace M. E. church. Arrangements were made with each of these brethren for a service in their churches. Last night I spoke again in the Taylor St. M. E. church, Newport, to a nice audience. To-night I speak in the 9th St. Baptist church, Covington, Ky., Rev. Joseph Courtney, pastor. I have abundant opportunity to get a hearing.

The failure of the Fidelity National Bank of this city, involving a loss of between five and eight millions, is another illustration of the sin and danger of stock gambling. It is stealing on a large scale. Harper, Baldwin, Hopkins, and the rest who were implicated in the Chicago wheat deal, ought to be sent to the penitentiary. Why is it that business men are so careful to consult the reports of the Chicago Board of Trade? The truth is, just as often as that Board takes snuff the whole nation sneezes, and we cannot help it. It is time for a righteously indignant Christian people to say, this outrage shall cease. We need more of the Ten-commandment morality in our commercial affairs.

J. M. FOSTER.

PROF. O. F. LUMRY offers for $3,500 his home property in Wheaton, consisting of house, barn and seven acres of land, and another lot of three or four acres lying in the town near the College for $600. Both pieces of property are very cheap and desirable, and any man in Chicago who wishes a suburban residence, or any farmer or mechanic who has a family to educate, by purchasing Prof. Lumry's property can bring his family under the shadow of Wheaton College, in a grove of beautiful trees, with quickest evergreen hedges, fruit trees, fine grapey and good water,—all which a person of average taste and judgment with a few hundred dollars to spend on the place can turn into an earthly paradise. A man who fears God and loves what is right is the one into whose hands Prof. Lumry wishes his home to pass. He wishes to join his children in the West. Write to Prof. O. F. Lumry, Wheaton, or come and see for yourselves.

—Thirty-two of the Chicago churches report having received since January 1, 1,621 persons on profession of faith as the result of Mr. Moody's meetings.

—The Chicago Baptist Association last week learned from annual reports that on the South side, with a population of 150,000, there are but six English-speaking white Baptist churches, or one to every 25,000 persons. The West side, with a population of 350,000, has only eight churches, or one to every 44,000 persons. The North side, with a population of 130,000, has but one church to every 65,000 persons. Eight wards in the city have no Baptist churches. Only about one-half of the suburbs have Baptist churches.

—A circular has been issued calling for a General Conference of all evangelical Christians in the United States, to be held under the auspices and direction of the Evangelical Alliance in Washington on December 7, 8 and 9 next. The questions to be considered by the Convention are: 1. What are the present perils of the Christian church and the country? 2. Can any of them be best met by hearty co-operation of all evangelical Christians, which, without detriment to any denominational concern, will serve the interests of the whole church? 3. What are the best means to secure such co-operation and to awaken the whole church to its responsibility? The call is signed by the president of the Alliance, Mr. W. E. Dodge; by the chairman of the executive committee, Mr. John Jay, and by the Revs. Philip Schaff, D. D.; Josiah Strong, D. D.; C. A. Stoddard, D. D., and Lyman Abbott.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN OLD CAMPAIGNER.

YORK, Pa., June 20, 1887.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—I began my anti-secret work here in 1868, eighteen years ago. In November, 1886, I began a new crusade on a new plan. I made a list of intelligent persons; parlor lectures and street talks were resorted to whenever there was an opportunity. In January, 1887, I distributed one hundred of Weeds's "Facts Stated" where I expected they would do the most good. In February I scattered several hundred Cynosures, tracts, etc. About the same time I handed around some specimen Cynosures and also a few N. C. A. catalogues. And I have made it a rule to make a few remarks on secret societies whenever I meet any of my scholars, as I call them. Like a good blacksmith I don't forget to blow my bellows, to keep all my irons hot, and to strike hard with my sledge hammer. I give plenty of proof that nearly all of our secret orders are Roman Catholic, Copperhead, treasonable, demoralizing, dangerous, vicious, criminal, etc.

I think I could keep your readers smiling if I was to tell all I hear from persons who have been in the cage with the lodge tiger. One ex-Old-fellow says: "I gave up the lodge, because I found I was paying in money and a act of loafers were all the time getting sick on bad whisky and drawing money out."

The editor of the York Dispatch, a so-called Republican party organ, has been trying to prop up the lodge by frequent articles and lodge notices, etc. He says the wives of secret order men should have plenty of taffy in the shape of degrees in female lodge traps. He has heard how the serpent took in a woman long ago. The Grand Army is also fighting a campaign on the sly; and a woman's "Relief Corps" is getting ready for action. But I fear the twenty-five ladies composing it cannot give relief from sledge-hammer wounds. They had better do up their old bonnets, and look after the boys who go courting.

As a result of my labors, I am collecting funds to establish the "York Reform Library" on a solid foundation of Anti-masonry. "More light" is just what I am determined to give to both insiders and outsiders.

E. J. CHALFANT.

ODD WORTH AND THE CYNOSURE.

WORCESTER, Mass., June 13, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR:—The enclosed is a small testimonial of my appreciation of your address before the "Congress" on "The Religion of the Lodge," in your issue of June 2nd. I have read it over and over again, and intend to keep it for reference. It will have an important influence on thinking and religious minds, and for that reason it ought to be read by theological students. I hope you will give it a wide circulation. "Be not faithless but believing." You are sowing good seed; and, as I believe, have been commissioned of God as a "discerner of spirits," to do an important work, which is entrusted to but few in our land.

Strange that the ministers of Christ are so blind, or timid, as not to speak out against the "false worship" of Satan throughout the land. You have based your remarks on "The Religion of the Lodge" on the writings of a renowned author, Ralph Cudworth, a name respected by good scholars, and such will not dare to dispute with him. I am happy to see the beautiful coincidence there is in his argument with the teachings of the Bible. As Luther brought the old Bible from the monasteries of the dark ages, so you with a similar spirit have placed before our present age a seemingly new revelation, a most important weapon to be used in the great warfare now going on against the various "anti-Christ's" of our time. I refer not merely to your address at the "Congress," but to the Cynosure which is true to its name, and is having a telling influence throughout our country. Our time on earth is short.

Ths sweet our communion on earth to recall,
But glory celestial is sweeter than all.

Yours in Christ,

W. J. WHITE.

"LIVES OF GREAT MEN ALL REMIND US."

HAVANA, N. Y., June 14, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Although my health will not permit me to do justice to all the papers which I receive and desire to read, still there is a large share of the interesting matter of the Cynosure different from what I find in any other paper,—matter concerning men and events of great importance, to be read and acted upon by the live men of the stirring times in which we live, but which seems to be either ignored or passed carelessly by for less vital things.

I have been interested to see that by you the names of faithful men, who hazarded their lives and reputations for sacred principles in a past age, have still been preserved and their deeds recorded for the present generation to imitate, if they will—men who having served their generation, have entered into rest; as David Bernard, Nathan Brown, A. L. Post, and others whom I have known; and a few still living as witnesses for the right, as against the wrong; as J. G. Fee, G. W. Clark, S. C. Pomeroy, whose eloquent words and acts are still stimulating to noble, daring deeds, still needed in defense of justice and truth, fallen in the streets as the Saviour under the cross, and which like him, are to arise in the hour of seeming defeat to triumph over the great enemy of all righteousness.

Though my health and means will not allow me to add to my reading, yet as the Cynosure is on my table by the favor of a friend, it finds a welcome, and I am glad to see it and to have it seen by others; and I would earnestly pray and watch for the day of the consummation of its hopes and labors.

ELIPHALET OWEN.

SABBATH.

GALENA, Kansas.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—You say in a late editorial note, "It is to be regretted the word 'Sabbath' instead of 'Sunday' was not used in the publications of the International body. You say it would be a 'silent but potent educator among the forty-five million of children and youth of America.'"

The term "Sabbath-school" is a contradiction of itself. Sabbath implies rest; school means work. Rest-work—how is that? But to name "Sabbath" would educate our children and youth, to what? To call the first day of the week "Sabbath?" What authority have you for that? In your editorial you treat it as a Scriptural term. So it is. But by what authority do you apply that term to the first day of the week? I would not accept any human authority, for this is a divine proposition. When you fail to give chapter and verse, won't you then regret that you have been so anxious to have the children taught to apply a name to that sacred day without any divine authority? Christ is both author and "Lord of the Sabbath," but never placed it there.

In saying this we do not wish to be understood as trying to defend the heathen name "Sunday," as being the proper name of the first day of the week. "The Lord's day," "The first day of the week," these are the only divine authentic designations that I find in the Christian Scriptures of that day. I pity the ones that are taught to call it the "Sabbath day." I blush for the teachers who have not yet learned "to rightly divide the word of truth." Such "have need that one teach them the way of the Lord more perfectly."

"The law and the prophets were until John." The Christ has taken the old "school master" out of the way; so we are "no longer under the law." The "Sabbath" of that with its death penalty was "nailed to the cross." It does seem to me that doctors of divinity should be able to diagnose this case, but I see they are not. It is senselessly unscriptural to speak of the "Sabbath service," "Sabbath day," "Sabbath school," etc., more especially since it is true that we refer to the first day of the week. Strange it is to me that some will insist on full and complete reformation and at the same time cling so tightly to such shameful, selfish sectarianism, for which I have no more sympathy than I have for the other clans. I utterly denounce this feature of journalism. No well-informed Bible student can do otherwise. I am a free man, and while I love to commend a good thing, I also am just as free to denounce the bad.

JAS. SPRINGER.

NOTE.—Since the brother knows all about this question since Adam, will he kindly tell us when the Sabbath, according to his definition, came to an end, as is implied above.—Ed.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON II.—July 10.—The flight into Egypt.—Matt. 2: 13-23.
GOLDEN TEXT.—He delivered me because he delighted in me.—Ps. 139.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Fulfillment of Prophecy. vs. 13-15. The words quoted by Matthew were spoken primarily of the Israelites, but the richness of Scripture lies in the variety of its applications. It always means a great deal more than appears on the surface, and this gives peculiar force to the simile of a mine. If we want to know all that God means to teach us we must not rest content with the bare words. We must search below the mere letter to find the spirit. We must dig as men dig for gold or diamonds. When one leaves the follies and vanities of the world and seeks a better country he becomes a child of God, of whom it can be said as truly as of ancient Israel, "Out of Egypt have I called my son." We see also God's hand in making Israel's old time foe a hiding place for the infant Christ. So he found for Elijah a safe and sure asylum in Jezebel's own country. There is also in this circumstance a hint of the all-embracing scope of the Gospel, and perhaps of an important part which "the dark continent" has yet to play in the history of the Christian church.

2. Herod's Massacre of the Innocents. vs. 16-18. Herod lives in history as one of the most infamous monsters our race has ever produced, and though he murdered his own son and put to death his virtuous wife Marianne, the crime inseparably associated with his name is the butchery of these innocent babes of Bethlehem. Humanity shrinks with horror from his act. But are there no Herods in this age who live even in our own land? The rum traffic kills hundreds of children every year and orphans thousands. The saloonist who sells what he knows will make the father a fiend from whose step his little ones will flee in terror of their lives is doing the work of one of Herod's soldiers. But the politician who for the sake of getting office, of becoming Congressman or President or Governor, will seek the perpetuation of the traffic comes very near in moral infamy to Herod himself. To-day Rachel in the person of many a broken-hearted mother weeps for her children and will not be comforted because they are not. The Herod of Mammon has no regard for helpless infancy when it stands in his way. The terrible roll of infant mortality among the children of the poor in our large cities is largely caused by the unsanitary condition of the tenement houses into which they are crowded. The owners of such places, who, knowing that they are unfit for human habitation, still retain them as they are for the sake of gain, are no better than Herod who, for the sake of keeping his throne, took the quicker method of the sword. The Christian church has taken delight in embalming the memory of these little ones of Bethlehem as the first in its noble army of martyrs, and even in the untimely deaths of so many of the children of the poor there is hope. They can meet a worse fate than Herod's sword, if they grow up the prey of all evil influences. "Save the children," should be the watchword of our Christian civilization. The time will come when we shall need their aid, and if we allow them to grow up in vice, their blood will God require at our hand when church and state are in peril and Satan has gained for his own army those who might have been their brave defenders.

3. He Shall be Called a Nazarene. vs. 19-23. It was not prophesied that Christ should belong to any ascetic sect, yet he lived a life of self-denial and sacrifice no mere monkish recluse ever approached. In this sense it is possible that Matthew has condensed the gist of prophecy. Christ was to be a Nazarene, not in letter but in spirit, just as all who truly follow him receive the true circumcision "which is of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter."

From Peloubet's Notes.

"For Herod will seek the young child to destroy him." There is a watchful care, and there is deliverance, but there is no exemption from trouble for God's children in this world. Abraham, David, Isaiah, Paul, all had their trials and dangers. They were saved in trouble and through trouble, but not altogether from trouble. So it was with Jesus, our great exemplar, even in his earliest years; and that fact is a wondrous comfort to us.—P. The fact that Jesus was despised in his very infancy, and his life was sought by a cruel ruler, has brought him near to the heart of the oppressed and helpless and harmless in all later ages. We cannot overestimate the effect of this one scene, the flight to Egypt, and the stay there, upon the confessions of Christ during the three centuries of martyrdom. The many legends concerning it show that the event itself made a profound impression upon the early church, and that it produced a reassuring effect upon the Christians who were banished from their homes for the sake of their faith. Such sufferings lost the very sting of humiliation, when the later men who endured them remembered that, in escaping from a cruel ruler, and in exile, they were only following the example of their Master.—Prof. John F. Hurst, D. D., in S. S. Times.

"Out of Egypt have I called my son." The prophecy here cited is found in Hosea 11:1. It was originally written of Israel in Egypt, and is best explained by regarding it a typical prophecy. Though literally referring to Israel, it is typically fulfilled in the child Jesus. (1) Both were strangers in Egypt, and both were called forth by the command of God. (2) Jesus, too, the true first-born, fulfilled the case of the people he represented. "In all their afflictions he was afflicted." (Isa. 63:9). His people, the body, is one with him, their head.—G. W. Clarke. (3) The Israelites were called out of Egypt chiefly that they might bring them the real Son of God, the Saviour of the world; this result could not have come to pass if Jesus had remained in Egypt. His coming out of Egypt as a child was a visible type of this spiritual truth.—Morrison. (4) Nor should we err if we ascribed to them one fulfillment more in the church of the redeemed. Egypt is always represented to us in the Scriptures as a land of darkness, idolatry, slavery, for the body and the spirit—a type and symbol of the world. What wonder, then, that when God calls from darkness to light, from slavery to freedom, from the worship of idols to the worship of himself, it should be styled a calling out of Egypt?—Trench's Westminster Sermons. "Spoken by the prophets. He shall be called a Nazarene." No one prophet thus speaks; but the evangelist is summing up the substance of a number of predictions respecting the lowliness of the Messiah.—Ridda. The little city most likely obtained its name on account of its small beginnings, since Neser denotes a feeble branch in contrast with a noble tree. And Nazareth appears, too, never to have risen out of its original smallness and insignificance. Matthew, in this verse, has chiefly in view Isa. 11:1, where the Messiah is announced as a Neser (branch) who comes forth from the roots of the stock of Jesse; together with the related places, Isa. 53:2, where he is compared as a "root out of a dry ground," and Isa. 4:2; Jer. 23:5; 33:15; Zech. 3:8; 6:12, where he is called a Branch; in order to express the thought that the Messiah will come forth, according to the prophets, without external signs of nobility and excellence, from the family of David, which is now sunken down in lowliness.—Keil.

—There are now twenty-seven vessels engaged in missionary work in different parts of the world, under the auspices of sixteen societies. Of these missionary vessels, sixteen are running on the coasts or rivers of Africa, and six among the islands of the Pacific Ocean.

—At a recent meeting of the Congregational ministers in Massachusetts, R. v. Dr. Burrows stated that there were 330 needless evangelical churches in that State, costing $330,000 a year.

IN BRIEF.

So nervous and irritable has the Czar become that the causes of his troubles must never be mentioned to him in any way. In order to obey his wishes in this respect, the very newspapers he reads have to be specially prepared. He now receives no other papers but those expressly printed for him; the veriest penny magazines of old, containing at best a few inoffensive dispatches, the rest being made up of society gossip and theatrical notes, with at best a leader or two thrown in, recounting the blessings of his autocratic government, without an over strict adherence to truth in his enumeration. The editor of this special sheet, to which the Czar is the only subscriber, and which appears in a single number, saw no harm in inserting the reports of the festivities on the occasion of Emperor William's ninetieth anniversary, which caused the Czar to exclaim sadly: "I shall never live to reach four score years and ten, and have the benediction of millions of my subjects showered upon my head."

John Francis Nicholas Wilkinson, the assistant law librarian of the congressional library at Washington, is a colored man, and has been in office thirty years. He was first employed when twenty-nine years old as a laborer to assist in cleaning the general library. He was soon detailed to the law library, and there through grades of laborer, messenger and assistant librarian, he has served ever since. His perfect familiarity with the law library is a marvel to all. The pages of the Supreme Court justices are momentarily coming down with requisitions for authorities that range as widely as the whole domain of American decisions and of ancient Breton laws, French causes celebres, and other legal matters of foreign lands. No abbreviation of the law reporters staggers him. He refers to no dictionary to discover the meaning of the initials or condensed names used, but goes directly to the alcove and brings forth the desired report. His most remarkable feat of memory is the accuracy of his recollection of cases. He locates, without the assistance of digests, the leading cases in our jurisprudence.

There was a very stout and haughty volunteer general in the Southern army who had contrived to make himself hated by his men, one of whom took occasion to revenge himself as follows: The general, who was extremely vain of his appearance and horsemanship, dissatisfied with his own horse, secured a large, showy chestnut (the property of a baker in a neighboring town), which he rode for the first time on the occasion of a grand review of the army by the commander-in-chief. His enemy heard of the transaction from the garrulous baker, and an inspiration came to him. On the day in question the soldiers were drawn up, the general came curvetting and caroling down the line, his immense frame squeezed into the newest, tightest, most gorgeous uniform that ever field officer sported, conscious of the eyes of his chief, and rejoicing to run his course, when out stepped his enemy and shouted, "Bread!" with a voice like a bassoon. The horse, recognizing the familiar summons, stopped short, and presently his rider was sprawling in the dust before his command, the most absurd figure in the world.

Dr. Clark's resolution in favor of ceasing the Sunday delivery of letters throughout the United Kingdom was at the instance of Sir J. Kennaway, and with the concurrence of Mr. Raikes, referred to a select committee. More than two hundred thousand persons have, it is said, signed petitions to Parliament in favor of the change. We note with satisfaction this wide-spread anxiety to deal effectively with the whole question of Sunday labor in the Post-office. It is curious in this connection to remember that when, in 1850, Lord Shaftesbury, then Lord Ashley, brought it forward and carried a resolution for an address praying for the Sunday delivery of letters to be stopped, he was spoken of as "the most unpopular man in the kingdom."

It is a well-known fact among railroad men that on railroads running north and south the west rails wear out the faster; that five rails wear out on the west side of the track while three are doing service on the east side.

SECRET SOCIETIES CON-
DEMND

BY EMINENT EDUCATORS.

PRESIDENT F. H. M. HENDERSON, Bowdoin College, Me.—I regard all secret societies as extremely liable to be perverted.

PRESIDENT NOAH PORTER, Yale College.—That there are serious evils connected with them cannot be questioned; that they accomplish some good is equally clear.

PRESIDENT HITCHCOCK, Amherst College.—These, at different periods, have been fruitful sources of excitement, jealousy, and heart burning among the students.

JOSEPH MOORE, President Earlham College.—The fact that Freemasonry often thwarts every effort to enforce the law against an offender who is of the fraternity, shows it to be an obstacle to moral and civil progress.

HOWARD CROSBY, D. D., Chancellor University, New York.—Thirty years ago I was a member of a college secret society, and while I had upright fellow-members, and we encouraged literary culture, I found the association was chiefly a temptation to vice.

PROF. J. R. JACQUES, Illinois Wesleyan University.—Among college students, at an age when most susceptible, secret societies tend to breed that secretive disposition which is the very opposite of the truly candid, generous, and magnanimous character.

DR. BREYCHLAG, Professor in the University of Halle.—Never entertain the idea to join the lodge for popularity's sake. It is utterly degrading to imagine pastors, men who have to deal with Christianity, the most universal and opening in the world, wrapped up in the mummeries of Freemasonry.

PRES. J. BLANCHARD.—There have been civil and ecclesiastical pests ever since there was a government and religion; and Freemasonry is one of those pests. The claims of humanity have rejected Christ and worshiped nature, and Nimrod have denied justice and practiced oppression. But both are combined in the lodge.

PROF. J. R. W. SLOANE, D. D., Reformed Presbyterian Theological Seminary.—But my strongest opposition to Masonry is because of its rivalry with religion. It steps in before the church, and is a false, an idolatrous religion, a religion without a Saviour and, therefore, a delusion and a snare to all who engage in it, or rest their hope upon it.

PROF. BURT G. WILDER, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.—I am willing to hazard my position... upon the truth of the proposition that secret societies are unknown in heaven, but that they form a prominent and essential feature of life in the other locality. Light versus darkness; openness versus mystery; mutual confidence versus suspicion and distrust.

PROF. S. C. BARTLETT, D. D., Chicago Theological Seminary.—There are certain other wide spread organizations, such as Freemasonry, which, we suppose, are in their nature hostile to good citizenship and true religion, because they exact initiatory oaths of blind compliance and concealment, incompatible with the claims of equal justice toward man and a good conscience toward God.

PROF. J. G. CARSON, D. D., Xenia, Ohio.—These associations are inconsistent with the genius of Christianity, because the secrecy which they affect, and to which they bind their members by promise or oath, is unnecessary and so unwarrantable, dangerous, and ensnaring to the conscience, and, therefore, utterly opposed to that openness and publicity which Christ enjoins on his disciples both by example and precept.

PRESIDENT C. G. FINNEY, of Oberlin, 1838.—We have, then, the implied testimony of Freemasons themselves, that the Christian church ought to have no fellowship with Freemasonry as thus revealed, and that those who adhere intelligently and determinedly to such an institution have no right to be in the Christian church. In our judgment we are forced to the same conclusion, we cannot escape from it, we wish it were otherwise, we therefore sorrowfully but solemnly pronounce this judgment.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGERY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:

Adventists (Seventh-day).
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.

Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists).

Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership).

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.

Disciples (in part).

Friends.
Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.

Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.

Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference).

Moravians.

Plymouth Brethren.

Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch).

United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

THE ASSOCIATED CHURCHES OF CHRIST.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1887.

The motives which move us to give our readers the speech of Mr. White in this number are various. The excellence of the speech itself, the excellence of the man, and the possibility that we shall wish to vote for him in 1892. If the Republican party shall be broken up and superseded by a reform party, Mr. White's integrity and ability will make him a leader in that party. We could wish, we do wish earnestly that he were with us to-day.

The speech which the editor did not make is a portion of unwritten history which is important to our cause. The effort to blind the public in regard to the Galesburg troubles has been successful for a time; but Knox College, and, indeed, American colleges generally, will yet return to the principles which, as Mr. Sanderson says, were put under the corner-stones in the foundation of Galesburg. When Mr. Gale departed from those principles one of his sons joined the Masons, another joined the Odd-fellows, another frequented saloons; and the morals of Mr. Browning, Andrew Johnson's Secretary of the Interior, for a time perverted the administration of Galesburg.

THE NEW MAUSOLEUM.

There is not a finer vein in all poetic allusion than that which regards the globe we inhabit as "our Mother Earth." We sprung from her at first; she feeds us while we are living, and opens her bosom to receive us when we are dead.

A Mr. J. G. Myers has invented a "New Mausoleum," or "Safe Deposit for the dead." We have received a heavy pamphlet written by Rev. C. A. Harvey, D. D., Washington, D. C., which describes this dead-house or morgue, which is to be a stone building three stories or more high, containing niches, like those in the old Hebrew sepulchres carved out of stone for the burial of kings. Isaiah (14:18) gives a magnificently sublime picture of one of these: "All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own house," and when the hated tyrant King of Babylon comes among them they are all represented as starting up, each from his niche, to refuse the oppressor a lodging among them, and cast him out of the grave as "an abominable branch." No language can exceed Isaiah's eloquence, when he tells the King of Babylon: "Hell from beneath is moved to meet thee at thy coming; it stirreth up the dead for thee; even all the chief ones of the earth." And the prophet describes the dead kings as "narrowly" looking at him, and saying: "Art thou also become weak as we?" "Is this the man that made the earth to tremble; that didst shake kingdoms?"

It may be that this "New Mausoleum" plan is to give to the "sovereign people" the burial of the old Hebrew kings, and if so the Cynosure is content. But we grieved the noble Dr. Lemoine because we could not admire his crematory, at Washington, Pa., and we are not likely to embrace the new mausoleum, as a compromise between burning and burying our dead.

The penchant of the press for the horrible leads to exaggerated stories, fiction as well as fact, about grave snatching, and burying alive. "Death is the king of terrors," and such paragraphs are always read and believed; which is a god-send to dull newspapers of blanket size and blank sense. More people, as martyrs, have been tortured and burned alive than have been buried alive or snatched from graves, a thousand to one; and those martyrs have answered from the flames that the fire did not hurt them, any more than John Brown's halter hurt him. But there is no need of burying people alive, if proper tests are applied; and the ghouls do not hurt us after we are dead. We confess to a preference to burying. God said to Adam, and through him to us his descendants: "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread until thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 2:19); and as long as the earth stands will shed its annual sorrows over us, and breathe out the fragrance of its wild-flowers in the sighs of evening breezes.

"The grass,
Dewy with nature's tear drops,"

But we confess to but little care for the graves. Our friends are not there, but with Christ in Paradise, if they died in him. That is our chief concern. "He shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body," and if he sees best, he can appoint angels, of whom he has plenty, "that excel in strength," to guard the spot where their ashes lie. Nay, and before we die, he can so take away the sting of death, which is sin, and the victory of the grave, which is terror, as in the words of Watts, to "Make the dying bed Feel soft as downy pillows are."

Or in the sweet words of our own Bryant, we shall go to our final rest

"As one
Who wraps the drapery of his couch
Around him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

Those who wish complete information about this new method of disposing of the dead can receive it by addressing Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, 1339 K. St., N.W., Washington, D. C.

KNOX COLLEGE SEMI-CENTENNIAL.

The senior editor of the Cynosure, being present at the Semi-Centennial of Knox College, was courteously asked for remarks by Dr. Bateman, and the call was seconded by the crowd. He promised some remarks at the evening banquet, but was called away. These are the remarks intended to have been made on that occasion:

PRES. BATEMAN, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—One speech at the banquet given by the ladies of the First Church, last winter, at its semi-centennial and that of the town, has rung in my memory ever since. Hon. Henry R. Sanderson said:

"There has been a great change in opinions and forms, so that, to a superficial observer, the Galesburg of to-day might seem to have passed from under control of the principles of its founders; but it is not true. In spite of all the changes seen, the principles laid up in its foundations fifty years ago, still remain unchanged, governing and controlling in every department of life, even though we see and know it not." "For myself, I am free to acknowledge that, having grown up from a child under the influence of these principles, however I may have departed from my early teachings, I still feel their influence, an influence from which I never expect, and never desire to be free." "We are, most of us, children of the Puritans. If any here are not, they cannot escape from the fact that they are largely the mental and moral children of those masterful men who came to America to establish the very principles brought to Galesburg by its founders fifty years ago, and who were in fact the founders of our mighty nation."

These admirable paragraphs, uttered by Mr. Sanderson, forcibly bring to mind the poet Burns, who, after giving eloquent and sound advice to a friend, adds:

"And may ye better reck the rēde
Than ever did the giver."

This speech, of an early and beloved pupil, is the text for my present remarks, that the doctrines deposited under its corner-stones fifty years ago, though buried, are not dead, but, like the founders themselves, will rise again. And, as a well-written tune always returns to the key-note on which it began, so this city and Knox College, some needful jars and discords passed, will, in the surveyor's phrase, return "to the place of beginning," and become like Zion of old, "beautiful for situation," a "joy of the whole earth," and a "city of the Great King" as its founders designed it.

Whoever knew Charles G. Finney, knows the founders of Knox College, for they were his disciples. They were Abolitionists, temperance people, Anti-masons, Prohibitionists; all in one word—Christians. Dr. Gale, the leader of the founders of Galesburg, was pastor of the church in the woods of Jefferson county, N. Y., where Mr. Finney was converted from the world to Christ. He was also converted from Freemasonry. He said to me, "As soon as I was converted to Christ, my moral nature loathed it, and I went to the lodge and demanded my discharge." Mr. Gale, his pastor, soon became his admiring pupil. When I came to Galesburg, Jan. 1, 1846, Mr. Gale's horse had been shorn at his Abolition meetings, and his son, Hon. Wm. Selden Gale, had at one time disused the products of slave labor: and a clause in the deeds forfeited the college, lands conveyed, if ardent spirits should ever be sold on the premises. I was elected president of the college, as supposed to be of a similar stripe with these founders, and one whose colors would not bleach out. I had been a vice-president of "The World's Anti-slavery Convention," London, 1843, and I had written the action in the Presbytery and Synod of Cincinnati, by which Rev. William Graham was suspended from the Gospel ministry for teaching that "Jesus Christ authorized slave-holding." The General Assembly restored Graham, and I notified the Synod that I should withdraw from the Assembly's jurisdiction, which I did. And at Galesburg, when the College Board were assembled, and before they completed my election, I said to brother Gale, who had called on me at President Kellogg's, on his way to its meeting, "Do the Board know that I am a Congregationalist, and that I shall never join Presbytery?" This was seventeen years before slavery fell by Lincoln's proclamation, Jan. 1, 1863. I was unwilling to live and die in fellowship with slave-holding, and distinctly notified the Board that I should not come again under the jurisdiction of the Assembly.

The Chicago Tribune of last Saturday (June 4th), contains a good, but inaccurate article on Knox College and its past troubles. The "bitter strife" described by the Tribune was not at bottom "denominational" but "personal." I neither made nor attempted any removals. I graduated thirteen classes and left all the old faculty, Mr. Gale included, as I found them. In the State Association I moved. Dr. Edward Beecher reported, and we carried a vote to give Congregational committees of discipline the name and ordination of elders. President Sturtevant of Illinois College said, "There never was a body maintaining discipline, who did not commit their discipline to the charge of certain persons; and everybody who knows anything of the Bible churches, knows that it calls these persons 'elders,' in both Testaments." Mr. Gale was no more an ultra Presbyterian than I was an ultra Congregationalist. He obtained money and colonists from both denominations; and Prof. Comstock's book shows a preponderance of Congregationalists. The first members of the church were received not by elders, but by the body; and it was on that occasion Mr. Gale remarked, "Bro. Finney says that hell holds jubilee every time the General Assembly meets;" that Mr. Finney had left the Assembly, and he knew not "how soon he might do the same." The strife was not "denominational," though it finally assumed that form. What, then, was the root of the strife? We shall see.

The college, though rich in land, was poor; was in debt $5,000, and running behind five dollars a day, and college orders were sold by professors for ten, twenty, and even larger per cent discount. I preached for a salary and credited that salary to the college treasury. I received five hundred dollars a year from J. P. Williston, and credited that also to the treasury, and so took no money from the college for my support; though I performed the duties of both president and professor. These and like facts can easily be verified by the college books. I raised money for the college and paid a small sum to the treasurer, Mr. Losey, a few hours after my arrival. I raised some money from the poor Illinois churches who loved the principles of the college, and I obtained some money from the College Society; and, with religious exactness, paid every cent of it into the college treasury. A little before the prairie lands became valuable and salable, I received from Hon. Charles Phelps, uncle of Gen. J. W. Phelps, whose mother and mine were sisters, eighteen quarter-sections, which soon sold for near thirty thousand dollars. Mr. Williston and the Phelps were decided Anti-masons and Abolitionists. The Phelps donation all went into the college treasury. By such means the lands of Knox College, procured by the wise plan of endowment originated by Mr. Gale, were saved; while the lands of the Jacksonville College were consumed by the current expenses. Our lands were sold; our college debts paid; all the permanent buildings now here, with trifling exceptions (and one, the New Academy, which is not here), were built and paid for twenty-seven years ago, under my administration; during the last five years of which good Mr. Gary, the treasurer, reported the college not owing a shilling, and the college property then easily worth ($400,000) four hundred thousand dollars.

Prosperity well nigh ruined us. I had moved the election of Messrs. Colton and Sanderson, both most excellent trustees and members of the village undenominational church, without knowing, and to this day do not know what their personal denominational predilections then were. I had never moved an important measure without consulting Messrs. Gale and Losey. They assented to the election of Colton and Sanderson, but Mr. Losey said, "You must give us Knox for Colton and Browning for Sanderson." I was amazed to learn for the first time that there was an "us" in the Board which provided first for itself and after for the college! Knox and Browning were not professors of religion, and sat bolt upright and felt insulted, when, as we always had done, the trustees knelt in an opening prayer. Mr. Gale had wished, and Mrs. Gale expected, that he would be president of the college, and as soon as the college was in funds he became impatient. And such was my earnest longing for a magnificent institution to turn the sentiment of the churches of the West against slavery that I would have put him into the presidency and taken a professorship under him, but it could not be done. A Dr. Selden, brother of Mr. Gale's first wife, was reputed to be wealthy and had come to live with Mr. Gale. To please this brother-in-law Mr. Gale had wine on his table and cards played in his family. This made him unpopular with the stricter sort of religionists whom he had led to Galesburg as the extreme right wing of reform, himself as strict. He had also found means to enter for himself a body of prairie a mile and a half long by one mile wide while his colonists paid for their farms five dollars an acre; and he needed money to pay taxes and improve that body of land. Prof. Losey therefore came to me and said Mr. Gale wished to have his son Selden elected treasurer of the college, which, of course, involved displacing our good treasurer, Mr. Gary. And when I said the Board would not elect his son, who was but a youth, Mr. Losey said, "If I would go strong for it, they thought they could elect him." I replied that I "had consented to the election of Browning and Knox against the welfare and religion of the college, but this election would be fatal to it." I was younger than Messrs. Losey and Gale, and such was my dread of Mr. Gale's displeasure and the craft and determination which I knew him to possess that I would acquiesce in Selden's election if they could persuade the trustees to elect him; but I would not sin against God and my own conscience by urging the good men who trusted me to a measure which I knew would be fatal to the college. Its principles were being lived down by Mr. Gale and its funds would follow.

War then was openly waged on me, which ended in a motion by Browning supported by eleven votes in a Board of twenty-five, requesting Mr. Gale and myself to resign; and though it would have required thirteen votes, a majority of the twenty-five, to remove me, I instantly resigned.

Mr. President, some of the best reformer kings in the Hebrew Commonwealth failed in their declining years. Ass "trusted not in God," Jehoshaphat made alliance with Ahab and the sainted king Josiah fell in a battle into which his worldly ambition urged him. The martyr John Rogers said: "Few rare and worthy men continue such to the end, therefore let no man trust in men." But let us trust in the God of Moses, whose pall-bearers were angels, and in the God of Elijah, whose hearse was a chariot of flame with angels for his charioteers. Let us end as we began with the thought Mr. Sanderson gave us for a beginning. The age of gold may change into brass, the brass harden into iron, and the iron into stone; but the golden age is coming yet. The principles deposited in the corner-stones of Galesburg will yet control this city even though it takes earthquakes to bring them forth. The anti-slavery principle which founded this city and for which its founders were most hated is now its rainbow of glory and honor; and the secret lodge rooms in which the rebellion was forged, like the fabled forges of the giants under Etna, may blow up society by their dynamite North as well as South, as volcanoes rend the earth with lava and turn its oceans into vapor. But that very vapor will come down in refreshing showers,

"And clothe all climes with beauty."

—Bro. H. H. Hinman, while lately tarrying a few days with his wife and son in Washington, was chosen to represent Dr. Byron Sunderland's Presbyterian church in a city mission effort, and to lead the week-day prayer meeting.

—Rufus Stratton, an aged brother living with a son in this city, member of the corporate N. C. A., and an earnest supporter of every good work for the bringing in of the kingdom of our Lord, is now confined to his room with a sickness from which he does not expect to recover. Yet his intellect is clear and faith triumphant in Christ, and he awaits the will of God with joy.

—The General Agent is agitating the question of another lecturers' institute, like to the one at Wheaton two years ago. There was an earnest desire at the annual meeting to have an enlargement of our lecture work and new men sent into the field. Let prayer be made to God by all who love him, that men and means may be had to greatly forward our work this year above all that have preceded it.

—The Ohio agent has a short vacation. Saturday last he began a new campaign at Creston, Ill. His work will be especially for the Cynosure. No agent, and we have had many good ones, has yet had quite the success of Bro. Stoddard in this part of the work. Under his direction Ohio has become the leading State on our subscription list. Illinois must regain this position. Mr. G. A. Conrad, a member of the next senior class at Wheaton, accompanies him, and the Illinois State Committee stands behind both. Welcome them, friends, wherever they may go.

—Rev. B. A. Imes, of Memphis, should have been noted among those who have protested against the Talmage lodge sermon. His letter was the only one replying to that sermon which the New York Witness published. In a note the editor explained why for financial and other reasons they could not admit these replies, asserting at the same time his belief in the immorality of the principle of secretism.

—Rev. J. A. Cole, who is speaking for our reform in the Eastern cities, wrote last week from Washington, where he was to lecture on the evening following, to preach on Lord's day, and lecture during the present week. "The secret work," he adds, "is indeed a degradation to my race in America. My heart is filled with the work more than before. The people are quite blind, and it really requires some one to open their eyes with the light of the Gospel of Christ in its purity."

—Mr. J. F. Helin of Omaha was attending the meeting of Augustana Synod in Pastor Evald's church in this city last week. He reports that the Swedish churches of Omaha have formed a temperance organization to give efficiency to their efforts in that reform and to prevent the proselyting of the Good Templars. This secret order has caused much trouble to the new society (all for temperance, of course) and to stop their vexatious interference a debate has been agreed upon when Good Templarism and its false pretensions will be put on a hot gridiron. Bro. Helm was candidate for City Treasurer of Omaha on the Prohibition ticket at the last election.

REFORM NEWS.

BRETHREN HINMAN AND COLE IN BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 20th, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—These burning summer days are not favorable to much effort, nevertheless we are pushing the battle to the gate. On Sabbath, the 12th, I spoke in the Covenant church in this city on the relation of secret societies to Christianity. I had strict attention and the sympathy of the entire congregation, who stand squarely on the platform of their church. This congregation, which for many years has but little more than held its own, has of late begun to grow and are proposing to enlarge their house of worship. Their pastor, Rev. Mr. Glasgow, is faithful and well equipped for his work. On the 12th Bro. Cole preached in the Calvary Baptist church, Rev. P. H. Braxton's; and on the Thursday evening following lectured to a large audience in the same place. I went to Washington, returning here on Saturday.

On Sabbath, the 19th, Bro. Cole preached in the morning in the Leadenhall St. Baptist church, Rev. A. Brown, pastor, and at 4 p. m. in the colored Presbyterian church, Rev. J. H. Weaver, pastor. I had the pleasure of listening to his afternoon sermon, and it contained some most cogent reasons why the colored Christians of this country should not imitate the evil example of the white man in going into secret societies. He plainly showed them that such a course led back to heathenism instead of on to a higher civilization.

In the morning I preached at the same place and dwelt at length on the necessity of separation from worldly people and worldly institutions as a condition of success in Christian work. This Presbyterian church is near the corner of Park Avenue and Madison street, one of the most beautiful parts of the city. Almost side by side is the large and elegant First Presbyterian church, Rev. Dr. Leftwich, pastor. That two Presbyterian churches, in every respect alike except in the color of their members, should stand in such close proximity is standing evidence of the power of caste among professed Christians. Let us cease to declaim against caste in India so long as we foster it at home. Rev. J. H. Warren, the pastor of this church, is an able man and is training not a large but a most intelligent congregation in the principles of sound practical Christianity.

At night I preached to a large congregation in the Perkins Square Baptist church, Rev. F. R. Williams, pastor. I had excellent attention and endeavored to tell them faithfully how unlike to the example and teachings of Christ are the influence and teachings of the secret societies. This dear brother feels deeply the evil of these unholy combinations and would rejoice greatly at their overthrow. But like many others, he finds his way beset with difficulties. To will is present with him, but how to perform that which is good he finds not.

I met yesterday for the first time in twenty-three years Rev. E. J. Adams, formerly a co-worker. We parted in 1864 in Sierra Leone, West Africa, and he has since been living in the South, but is now a resident of this city.

Last night, the 20th, Bro. Cole and I met a fair congregation in the Leadenhall Street Baptist church and each spoke at some length on the relations of the colored race to the secret lodge system. We had an attentive hearing and a fair collection. This week we expect some important meetings in Washington and then go to Carlisle, Pa.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE ARNOLD TENT.

BYRON, Ill., June 17, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold, with his tent and fixtures, has come and gone—but not the wholesome moral influence of his having been with us. That is here to stay. No doubt every one who heard his lectures and saw his pictures were benefited, and nearly every one was satisfied—delighted. The pictures were a wonder of art, but that was the least valuable part of the entertainments. The moral and religious instruction given by them and in the lectures of Mr. Arnold have made impressions upon the minds of this community that will be of lasting benefit. The lectures on geography and history were very instructive and entertaining, but that last talk showing that Baal worship was the parent of Masonry was so plain and so well proven, that the devotees of secretism had to cringe under the smarting blows—and they were blows that will fell to the earth the whole progeny of secret societies. May that blessed day be hastened.

B.

FROM THE IOWA AGENT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Greenwood, where I preached on the Sabbath, I went to Vinton, Benton Co., and attended the Ministerial Association of the Iowa Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist church. One of the brethren read a paper on the subject, "Satan: his Personality and Work." He dwelt upon the subsidiary forces of Satan. When opportunity was given for criticism, I arose and called the attention of the assembly to the fact that the secret lodge system is one of the most effective subsidiary forces of Satan, through which he is working more effectively than through any other agency, to supplant Christianity by reviving ancient paganism and by spreading infidelity.

From Vinton I went north to Greene in Butler county in company with Rev. Mr. Story, the evangelist of the Iowa Wesleyan Conference. We were met at Greene by Bro. Grange, a young pastor, and conveyed twelve miles into the country, to attend his quarterly meeting. On Saturday Bro. Story and myself went to Bristow and called upon the pastor of the United Brethren church. This dear brother, though an Odd-fellow, received us courteously, and invited me to preach in his stead on Sabbath night. It was understood that I would speak on the religion of Freemasonry.

The congregation was large and the order excellent, except that one Odd-fellow became excited and restless when, after exposing the pagan-infidel character of Freemasonry, I called attention to the fact that Odd-fellowship is an integral part of the same great Satanic conspiracy, to supplant Christianity by spreading deistical infidelity. But while he was much disturbed, others expressed great satisfaction at the close of the meeting, one exclaiming, "That is just what we needed in Bristow;" another, "That is the best thing that could have happened to Bristow."

I had been announced to lecture on Saturday night at the quarterly meeting conducted by Bro. Story, the evangelist. The rain prevented; but on Monday night I gave a lecture showing how Satan is working through the secret lodge system to remove the very foundations of our holy Christianity, and called upon the people to rally to the defense of the Gospel. The truth was gladly received by many. But one Freemason and Odd-fellow gave sad evidence of being so blinded by the god of this world as to be incapable of realizing the iniquity of the secret lodge system.

From Greene I go north to visit my family at Wasioja, Minn. Let continual prayer be offered that the truth may be made mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of Satan. There can be but one issue to the conflict if we go forth to the battle under the lead of the omnipotent Christ.

THE HOME.

A PARABLE.

Said Christ our Lord, "I will and see How the men, my brethren, believe in me."
He passed not again through the gate of birth,
But made himself known to the children of earth.

Then said the chief priests, and rulers, and kings,
"Behold, now, the Giver of all good things;
Go to, let us welcome with pomp and state
Him who alone is mighty and great."

With carpets of gold the ground they spread
Wherever the Son of Man should tread,
And in palace chambers, lofty and rare,
They lodged him and served him with kingly fare.

Great organs surged through arches dim
Their jubilant floods in praise of him;
And in church, and palace, and judgment-hall,
He saw his image high over all.

But still, wherever his steps they led,
The Lord in sorrow bent down his head,
And from under the heavy foundation stones,
The Son of Mary heard bitter groans.

And in church, and palace, and judgment-hall,
He marked great fissures that rent the wall,
And opened wider and yet more wide,
As the living foundation heaved and sighed.

"Have ye founded your thrones and altars, then,
On the bodies and souls of living men?
And think ye that building shall endure,
Which shelters the noble and crushes the poor?"

"With gates of silver and bars of gold
Ye have fenced my sheep from their Father's fold.
I have heard the dropping of their tears
In heaven these eighteen hundred years."

"O Lord and Master, not ours the guilt,
We built but as our fathers built;
Behold thine images, how they stand,
Sovereign and sole, through all our land.

"Our task is hard—with sword and flame
To hold the earth forever the same,
And with sharp crooks of steel to keep Still, as thou livest them, thy sheep."

Then Christ sought out an artisan,
A low-browed, stunted, haggard man,
And a motherless girl, whose fingers thin
Pushed from her faintly want and sin.

These sat he in the midst of them,
And as they drew back their garment hem,
For fear of defilement, "Lo, here," said he,
"The images ye have made of me."

—James Russell Lowell.

A SOLDIER'S STORY.

The Rev. C. C. McCabe, in the Chicago Christian Advocate, relates the following, for the truth of which he solemnly vouches: H. M. Parkhurst was a soldier in the war for the Federal Union. He belonged to the Twenty-Second New York Cavalry, which was raised at Rochester. He was always distinguished for gallantry in action. On June 28, 1864, while the regiment was on what is known as "Wilson's raid," Parkhurst was captured by the Confederates and started for Andersonville, that hell on earth, where 35,000 men were confined in a stockade enclosing ten acres, with no water to drink save from a swamp that received the drainage of the camp. While on the train he kicked a board off the freight car in which he was riding, and rolled out, falling on the side of the track, while the train thundered on. He struck in a mud-puddle, and was unharmed by the fall; but the guard on the rear car discovered him as they passed; the signal was given and the engineer whistled down brakes. Before the train could be stopped Parkhurst was far away in the forest. They searched for him awhile, and then went on to the next village, where the home guard was ordered out after him. They followed him three or four days, at last succeeding in capturing him, and again started with him for Andersonville.

Through the carelessness of the guard at night, he slipped away again, taking an overcoat from a sleeping rebel as a disguise. This time they hunted him with bloodhounds. The colored people furnished him with food and a good large knife with which to fight the bloodhounds. Two of these terrible beasts overtook him. Wrapping a handkerchief round his hand, he seized each hound by the nose and came leaping upon him with open mouth, and drew the knife across its throat. His pursuers were so close upon him that he heard their deep maledictions as they came in sight of their dead hounds. He was overtaken and captured again. They started with him once more; but again he made his escape. He followed the north star; lived in the woods; ventured only to negro cabins for something to eat; but after many hairbreadth escapes, when hope of reaching the shelter of the Federal Union lines was strong in his breast, he was once more captured and started southward. The captain of the force that captured him gave orders to hang him at daybreak. The rope was fixed to the tree, and great precautions were taken that he should be on hand to be hanged in the morning. They spent the night in a little log hut. Manacles were fastened to the prisoner's wrists and ankles, he was chained to the sill of the house, and two guards were placed at the door with loaded muskets, while the rest of the gang lay around the house upon the ground.

Parkhurst says: "About ten o'clock I went to the Lord with my trouble and began to pray. I told him if he would get me out of this I would serve him with all my might the rest of my life." Having thus prayed the poor prisoner fell asleep. About two o'clock in the morning he awoke suddenly. He never could tell what awakened him. To his amazement his limbs were free. The manacles lay at his feet. He looked at the door. There was only one guard there, and he was fast asleep. "Well!" said Parkhurst, "the Lord has done his part and I'll do mine." He arose, stole softly past the guard, walked out under the tree from which the rope was swinging, and away he went once more on his way towards life and liberty. This time he was successful, and one day he marched into the Union lines, creating about as much surprise as Peter did on an occasion very much like this one. Parkhurst says, "When I came in sight of the Stars and Stripes I fell down on my knees in thanksgiving to God." When the war was over, this young man became a flaming herald of salvation, joined the Oregon Conference, made several trips to the Pacific coast and upon one of them was taken ill, at Ogden, Utah, where he died in the triumphs of the faith he had preached unto others.

I have this incident from one of his comrades, I. C. Wade, who fought with him side by side, and who often heard this story from his lips.

MIKE'S FOURTH.

"An' it's we two'll be afther kapin' the Fourth, sure," said Mike Doolan, as he and Tom Rafferty leaned against the telegraph pole about ten o'clock one bright June morning.

Business was slack at that hour. Tom had not had a customer since nine, and Mike's last one, an old gentleman who stoned for the extra shine which he demanded by the bestowment of an extra dime, had gone into his counting-house half an hour ago, and by this time had probably quite forgotten the curly hair, wide-open blue eyes, and broad, freckled face of the little boot-black, whom, however, he might still have seen had he raised his eyes and looked out under the shady, blue-striped awning into the hot, dusty street. The telegraph pole was just under his window, and he might have heard every word of the boys' conversation had he not been more agreeably employed in reckoning up gains that so far exceeded losses as to warrant the hope that he might be able to grant his girls' reiterated and earnest request and take that long-promised trip by way of celebrating the Fourth.

"Yes, we'll kape the Fourth," repeated Mike—not that he knew precisely what the "Fourth" was, nor how a boy was to "keep" it, having, with friends of his family, "come over" quite recently. But Tom's talk had excited his interest, and by degrees it dawned upon him that the Fourth was a holiday, and was to be "kept" by Tom and the bigger boys with whom he associated at least by the ignition of fire-crackers, the shooting off of a rusty gun of which one of the party had somehow become possessed, and a steamboat excursion, with root beer, peanuts and ice cream.

These delights were painted lingeringly and in glowing colors by Tom, who happened to know that to say nothing of the extra ten cents recently acquired in business the little immigrant possessed two half-crowns and a shilling which he had brought from the "ould country," and which would make a welcome addition to the joint stock which his companions were accumulating for the proposed Fourth of July festivities.

"We must have lots of cash," said Tom, "so we're all goin' to save half of what we get every day; we shan't pay it into the Lodging House Bank either, for mebbe the guv'nor wouldn't let us have it ter' kape the Fourth with. Each one must take care of his own pennies, or else give them to Tim Donovan, who's got a lock-up chest where he keeps the gun."

Just at that moment there was a terrible scream and a woman, extricating herself with some difficulty and consequent delay from a banana stand at the corner, rushed frantically across the street towards a flaxen-haired, blue-eyed baby who, exulting in its late-developed ability to run away, laughed with glee as it toddled over the stones, caught its foot in the car tracks, stumbled and fell directly in front of a pair of powerful horses who were harnessed to a great country wagon heavily laden with summer produce.

The agonized mother was entirely too late, and the little one would have been instantly killed if Mike had not both seen and moved quickly. Springing from his place and upsetting his whole "kit" in his hurry, the boy flew to the spot, and seizing the nearest horse's head with one hand grasped the child's clothes with the other, pushing it beyond the reach of danger, and springing aside himself just in time to avoid the heavy wheel which came crashing down upon the very spot where a second before he had stood.

The woman caught up the child unhurt but screaming with fright and excitement, and hurried back to her stand, while Mike, quite unconscious that he had played the part of a hero, picked up his scattered "kit" and lounged back to the telegraph pole and Tom. His conversation about the "Fourth," however, was destined to another interruption. The old gentleman had raised his head now, and was beckoning to the boy to come nearer to the window.

"You're a brave fellow," said he, "there's a quarter to show you how much I like your pluck, and you shall black my boots every morning."

"Thank'ee, sir," said Mike, turning very red. "I don't want no money for savin' her; she's a little flower just like our Alice over in Ireland. I wouldn't a' seen the horses stamp on her for anything. Please, sir, take back yer bob—leastwise it ain't a bob, but a quarter."

"No, I shall not," said the gentleman. Keep it to buy fire-crackers for the Fourth," and he shut the window.

Mike pocketed his quarter, but not before Tom Rafferty had seen it and mentally ranked him as a still more eligible addition to the Fourth of July party. Then the mother of the child, who had at last succeeded in hushing its cries, was beckoning for him to come to her stand.

"Here's some bananys for yer dinner," said she, forcing some of the choicest and best of her fruit into his hand; "an' it's yer mother I wish I was, fur you're a brave broth' ov' a boy an' a rale little gentleman. My own bhoys that should be here mindin' his little sister, is up at the Island. Bad luck to the cops that tuk him there. And what am I to do, sure, with me stand to mind and the child that arch that she runs away every chance she gits?"

"If you'll take care of my kit for me, I'll mind her a bit, and be glad to do it," said Mike; "it'll make me feel more home-like somehow."

"It's a rale blessin' yer are," said the tired and perplexed mother, delivering her little one into his care and watching him without uneasiness as he carried her up and down the pavement in his sturdy little arms, singing to her and amusing her till at last the golden head dropped on his shoulder, and he brought the baby, sound asleep, to be deposited in the cosy little bed her mother had prepared for her under the stand.

The next day, when the morning boots were all blacked and the slack time arrived, Mike came for "his baby to mind" again, and its mother was only too glad to grant his request.

"Only," she said, "you shan't work for nuthin'. If you'll mind her every day and amuse her, and put her to sleep when you haven't any boots to black, I'll give you tin cints for it, and thank ye, too."

Mike was going to refuse the money but he reflected that he had gone into business for himself, and that it was quite as honorable to be paid for mindin' a baby as for blacking boots; so the bargain was concluded, and every day between certain hours the good natured Irish boy might be seen carrying the big baby in his arms, leading her slowly by his side, or even rolling her along the street in the hand-cart in which her mother every day brought her stock in trade to the stand. The other boys laughed and called him "Molly" and "Sukey," but Tom Rafferty told them to "hush up;" for he knew that the "greenhorn's" stock of money was steadily augmenting, and he constantly expatiated to Mike on the delights of the Fourth, nothing doubting but that he would be largely paid for from the little boy's store.

One morning—it was the first day of July—the stall which had gradually added green apples and indigestible looking pears to its temptations, was bare. Neither mother nor baby appeared, and Mike, who had become very much attached to the child, could scarcely restrain his impatience till the last boot was blacked and he was free to thread the city streets and alleys and climb the stairs which led to the room where he knew he should find "his baby."

There she lay, tossing with fever, bright spots on her cheeks, and no look of affection in her dull blue eyes. She did not know him, but when he took her in his arms and began to walk up and down the small room, the motion seemed to ease her. By degrees her wild cries sunk into low sobbings, and then ceased as she fell into an uneasy sleep.

By and by she awoke with a start, her eyes rolled and her muscles twitched, so that the mother with a wild Irish howl exclaimed,

"She's dyin', shure; she's dyin', she's dead!"

"No, she's not dead," said a calm voice; and looking up they saw the doctor standing beside them; "but she's very ill, and she will die if you keep on screaming and frightening her so. It was a convulsion, but she's over it now." "I wish she could be got out of this hot room and into the country," he said half to himself as Mike went down stairs.

Now Mike had his heart and hands full. He blacked as many boots as ever, but sometimes he could not see to shine them for the tears that filled his eyes. All the hours that he could spare he devoted to assisting the tired, frightened mother in taking care of the sick child, and all the time he pondered those words of the doctor: "I wish she could be got out of this hot room into the country."

Two days passed; the baby had had several more convulsions and seemed to droop every hour. It was late on the evening of July 3d that Mike said,—

"Don't you know anybody in the country where you could take the sick baby?"

"Yis, shure, there's me own mother off in Pennsylvania. Wouldn't she be glad to have the poor darlint? An' the milk an' the eggs an' the swate air would make her well in no time."

"Why don't you go there, then?" said Mike, astonished that this simple way out of the trouble had not occurred before.

"How'd I get there, darlint? It 'ud cost the matter of five dollars, and niver a cent have I got after the rint's paid an' me sellin' nothin' all this week."

Now Mike's savings amounted to exactly five dollars, and he knew that the boys expected him to contribute this to the Fourth of July excursion on which he had so set his heart. But sorrow and prospective death had dimmed the brightness of the anticipated pleasure, and it was after only a moment's hesitation that his tired feet carried him swiftly to the Lodging House and back again, where he poured out his hoard of silver and copper into the astonished woman's hand. It was in vain to protest or refuse; true Irish generosity is evinced as much in accepting as in offering, and before nine o'clock the next morning the sick baby and its mother were on their way to the grandmother's home in Pennsylvania.

Mike was late the morning of the Fourth, but then it was a holiday and no one was early. Trade was slack, and when the few boots that were presented had been blacked, Tom said:

"Now, Mike, let's be off for our Fourth of July. Hand over your money."

"I haven't got any," said Mike faintly.

"But you had five dollars yesterday; you told me so."

And then, with many persuasions and intimidations, Tom forced the smaller boy to tell him what had become of the money. How Tom laughed! It was the only way in which he could vent his indignation; and how little Mike cried as he saw the gang of boys, who had gathered by his time, go off together towards the river; for in spite of his great heart he was only a little boy, and he was all alone, a stranger in the great city.

But some one had overheard the conversation, and the old gentleman, who had been unexpectedly detained in town, closed his window, opened his office door, and came out.

"What are you going to do with yourself to-day, my boy?" said he kindly, while his boots were being polished.

"Dun-no, sir! Ain't got nothin' to do."

"I'd like to have you come with me. Will you?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy, but without any pleasure; one place was as good to him as another, and he was thinking about the sick baby.

But he followed the old gentleman, who entered a street-car which went up to a glass building which Mike knew to be the depot, and in a few minutes the steam-cars had whirled him away into the green country to the pretty home where the old gentleman's daughters and grandchildren were having a glorious time celebrating the Fourth of July.

Mike never forgot the wonders of that day—the grand dinner, the croquet balls, the bows and arrows, the little boats on the lake, the pony on which he rode in turn with the other children, the lemonade and ice cream, the fire-crackers with which he burnt his fingers as often as the others did, and, when night came, the wonderful rockets, Roman candles, and whirling fire wheels. He never forgot it, because it all became very familiar to him afterwards, for the old gentleman asked him at night how he would like to stay there always, black the boots, scour the knives, and, when he grew big enough, take care of the cow and pigs, the chickens and the pony. And Mike thought he should like it so well that he quite forgot where he was, and shouted with an Irish brogue that made everybody laugh, "Hooray for the Fourth of July!"

"Mike," said the old gentleman on Sabbath evening, when, according to an almost forgotten custom, he gathered the children of the household to hear them say the catechism, "when you gave your five dollars to save that little baby's life, did you think how 'even Christ pleased not himself?'"

"Just a little, sur. Mother used to tell me in the ould country, but"—with a tone which disclaimed praise—"I mind it most because I loved her."

"Father," said his daughter Alice from her seat in the corner, "don't you think that was just why He pleased not Himself?"

TEMPERANCE.

INTEMPERANCE AND LABOR.

THE GREAT ENEMY OF THE WORKINGMEN.

One of the most valuable contributions to the discussion of the great question of the day in America is an article under the caption of "Intemperance the Enemy of Labor," in the current number of the Catholic World. The author, Rev. Dr. Conaty, of Worcester, Mass., is one of the ablest men of his communion in America, and enjoys wide popularity on account of his connection with the Irish Land League movement and his efforts to promote the Parnell tribute fund, of which he was the American treasurer two years ago.

Dr. Conaty does not discuss the subject from a sectarian point of view. He deals with it as an economist. He tersely states the close relations existing between labor and capital by saying: "If labor is the soul, capital is the body of commercial life." The capitalist seeks a fair profit for his investment, and, generally speaking, is content with such fair profit unless he is allied with monopoly. The workingman seeks a reasonable share in the profits he creates. He organizes with his fellows for that purpose. Dr. Conaty holds that the workingman is both a capitalist and an earner, his capital being bodily health, energy, industry and skill. Intemperance constantly impairs this capital and lessens its earning power. If a man loses his health through indulgence in strong drink, Dr. Conaty says, he is bankrupt. Health is "his source of strength and happiness, and, humanly speaking, almost his only one. The interests of home, family and society press upon him so closely that he must protect his labor by protecting the soundness of his body. . . . The workingman whose habits are not temperate is wasting his capital, is squandering every element of value that he can contribute to any enterprise so as to secure a remunerative share of profits." The intemperate man's labor is worthless, or nearly so. Intemperance, therefore, is the great enemy of labor, as it wastes the producing power, and it also enfeebles those organizations of workingmen that try to exact justice from capital, plus monopoly.

Even moderate drinking hurts labor, inasmuch as it not only depreciates the capital, but also wastes the earnings thereof. It is an underestimate to say that the moderate drinker spends one month's wages every year on strong liquor.

"Suppose it costs," says the article, "fifteen cents per day. That would pay the interest on a mortgage of one thousand dollars; it would purchase many an article of household furniture; it would bring into the home many comforts now unknown; it would at least pay many a bill which cannot now be met. Add to this what is spent in a protracted spree, the time lost to work and the wages unearned, the sickness often resulting, and it is safe to say that intemperance robs labor of more than enough to give a decent home to every workingman."

If the capitalists who employ workingmen were to announce a reduction of fifteen cents per day in wages the workingmen would strike, and would issue a boycott against the capitalist. Concerning this phase of the question Dr. Conaty asks:

"Then why not protest against the blood-tax which intemperance collects? Why calmly submit to this reduction of your small wages? Why not strike against this great enemy of labor and boycott rum? It is like a grinding capitalist; it crushes man's life, picks his pockets and uses his hard earnings as a bludgeon to destroy him. Cry out against the corporations that poorly pay your labor, unite against monopolists who seek to get the most possible work for the least possible pay; but cry also for protection against this master Intemperance, who, whip in hand, lashes worse than ever overseer tortured slave."

But, as the writer points out, so far from the workingmen boycotting the rum power they are its steadiest supporters. It is mortifying, he says, to see labor protecting and defending the liquor traffic in political life. "Capital is called selfish because it seeks to enrich itself, but in enriching itself it helps to enrich others. But for pure, unadulterated selfishness commend me to the saloon where men grow rich by impoverishing their friends and succeed by trampling others under foot."

Those who are thus enriched by the traffic become "political magnates who dictate public policy, make and unmake public men and public laws, and name the candidates freemen must vote for." And the nominees of those liquor men never, once they get into office, vote for any measure to ameliorate the lot of the workingmen. "The representatives of the liquor men in the State Legislatures elected by the votes of the workingmen may be absent every day except when it is a question of liquor-law amendments, and then they must vote against any and every restriction or be exposed to political decapitation; and it is the same whether it be a question of high license in New York or an anti-tenement liquor bill in Massachusetts."

Dr. Conaty has done well to call attention to those pregnant facts. His article should be widely distributed among workingmen, especially among those of his own communion, though it will appeal, as the production of a Catholic priest, more directly to Catholic than to non-Catholic workingmen. If American capitalists would but follow the good example of their British brethren in such matters, articles of this kind would be scattered by the million among the manufacturing and industrial establishments of the land.—Chicago Tribune.

At a meeting of the English-speaking section of the Chicago socialists, held a few days since, Mr. T. J. Morgan, who assumes to be the leader, read a paper apologetic of the workingmen on the drink question. It was addressed to the Women's Christian Temperance Union and the ministry and clergymen of Chicago. It goes into quite an elaborate discussion of the subject and claims that injustice has been done the laboring men of the country by wholesale and exaggerated charges, which he proceeded to confute. The charge that the wage-workers are responsible for half the amount expended for liquor in this country is repudiated and an attempt made to show that it is unfounded. A denial is also interposed to the charge, assumed to have been made, that the wage-workers are more intemperate than other classes of society. Any intelligent observer knows that in this the paper is wrong. We have known many practical facts bearing upon the question. One of them—of which there are many more like it—is this: A large rolling-mill in this city failed a few years since. The twelve or fifteen hundred men employed scattered. Soon the saloons, and they were many, which lined the streets in the neighborhood began to close, the rest of the community did not sustain them. A small village of five or six hundred inhabitants, whose business was derived principally from coal-mines, had forty-six saloons. The mines for some reason were abandoned. The wage-workers departed and the saloons soon followed them. Look at the men going into saloons in Chicago. In most cases, seven-tenths are wage-workers of some description. The paper also enters into a philosophical discussion of the question, "Why laboring men drink?" The principal answer given has the usual fault of reversing cause and effect; that is, giving as a reason why a laboring man frequents saloons the very things which are produced by drinking habits. There are, however, some good and suggestive things in the paper worth considering.—Standard.

There is no use in cutting down the day's labor from ten to eight hours, if the two hours gained are spent in a rum-hole. There would be no use in making arbitration compulsory, if one of the parties was likely to be kept from obeying the decision by liquor. There would be no use in banding over all the property in the world to laboring men, if they drink as they do now. They would soon dissipate it, and add nothing to the store.—N. Y. Nation.

The consumption of beer in Germany is reported to have amounted to 41,325,000 hectolitres in 1885. This would give an average of ninety litres (about 200 pints) a year to every man, woman and child in Germany.

WHEATON COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT.

The twenty-seventh annual commencement of Wheaton College occurred on Wednesday, the 22d inst. The exercises of the week began on the Sabbath preceding with the Baccalaureate sermon by President J. Blanchard. His text was: "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor." It was a masterly presentation of the truths that all really valuable honor comes from God, and is bestowed upon those who serve Christ. Rev. C. C. Harrah, of Galva, Ill., was expected to give this address, but through misinformation he did not reach Wheaton till Tuesday evening.

In the evening the address before the Society of Missionary Inquiry was given by the Rev. W. H. Brewster, of Benton Harbor, Mich. His theme was: "The Coming Kingdom of Christ," and his text, Matthew 6: 10, "Thy kingdom come." The speaker, now past his 74th birthday, was some eighteen years ago pastor of the College Church, and many of the older residents heard his excellent sermon with interest and delight, and marked that he had lost none of his old-time vigor and fervor.

On Monday afternoon a class of twenty were graduated from the Preparatory School. The members of the class all presented exercises which were a credit to themselves and Prof. D. A. Straw, the principal of the department. The School of Fine Arts had four graduates, who received their diplomas at the same time. Mrs. Nutting, the principal of the Art School, had a very fine display of her class work in the studio, in all more than 100 pieces being exhibited.

The Board of Trustees held on Tuesday at 10 o'clock A. M. a pleasant and harmonious meeting. The business was chiefly routine, the only matter of public interest being perhaps the election of Prof. Elliot Whipple to the chair of Natural Sciences, made vacant by the resignation of Prof. R. T. Morgan, who was during the past year elected County Superintendent of Schools. Prof. Whipple was for several years a valued instructor in the College. He has been all his life engaged in teaching and during the past year has been principal of the Ramona Indian School at Santa Fe, New Mexico.

At the annual banquet of the Alumni Association Tuesday afternoon nearly sixty were seated. The post-prandial speeches by O. N. Carter, fresh from his success as prosecutor of the celebrated express-robbery and murder case on the Rock Island road, by Miss Breckenridge, Mrs. A. E. Stoddard, Pres. J. Blanchard and others, were happily conceived. At 8 o'clock in the College Chapel a literary programme was given, consisting of an address from Prof. A. R. Dodd, principal of Houghton Seminary, New York; subject "Problems," and an essay by Miss Frances S. Carothers, M. D., Des Moines, Iowa; subject, "Social Gravity." After the reading of the essay by Mrs. Charles A. Blanchard, sister of the essayist, who was unable to be present, the annual business meeting of the Alumni Association was held.

Wednesday was the day of days for a college commencement. The breeze came cool and bracing as if direct from an Alaskan glacier, and nobody feared the imprisonment of a crowded hall so long as there was no dread of a swelter. The decorations of the College hall told of the drouth in the land. Instead of the profusion of evergreen festoons and garlands of flowers, several fine oil paintings from the Art School were arranged with a happy effect and the class motto "Vincit qui se vincit," with designs of sword and pen testified to the good taste and ingenuity of the Junior Class.

The Faculty, the Board of Trustees, one of whom was Mrs. L. H. Plumb, the lady banker of Streator, the Schubert Quartette, the graduating class, and numerous distinguished visitors, among them the singing evangelist Charles Herald, Rev. C. C. Harrah, Rev. Wm. H. Brewster, Rev. Albert Ethridge, Prof. A. R. Dodd, Hon. Chas. P. Bent, Rev. Geo. F. Milton, Rev. Walter E. Ferris, resident pastors, and others. Pres. C. A. Blanchard presided and was moved to begin the exercises with a simple Gospel song by Mr. Herald who had many warm friends in the audience. The formal programme opened with prayer by Rev. A. Ethridge, State Evangelist for the Illinois Home Missionary Society. The Schubert Male Quartette sang, "Lead Kindly Light," and the real work of the day began.

The members of the class of '87 were but two, but their fellow students held them to be each a hero. W. W. Breckenridge of New Windsor, Ill., pronounced the first oration on "The Present Truth" without the formality of the usual salutatory. His subject was the social and moral questions raised by the labor movement and the test it brings upon our present social system; whether it will not be too inflexible to endure the strain, and so give way to some Old-world socialistic measure tainted with atheism and finding the end of its road in black anarchy. He happily turned from these fallacious solutions to the one which has stood every test of logic and experience for eighteen centuries, and which the Christian gladly accepts as a great gift of the great Master. Mr. Lovett spoke on "Reverence for Law." The personification of natural laws were the ancient objects of worship, but a profounder and more rational respect may be given to laws regulating human conduct while they are founded upon eternal principles of justice revealed in the Word of God. Both young gentlemen spoke with ease, and the maturity of their thoughts and force of their arguments lost nothing of their effect from weakness or hesitation in their utterance or from inelegant gesture.

Dr. C. E. Starrett was prevented by illness from giving the Master's Oration, and Dr. P. S. Henson of the First Baptist Church, Chicago, gave one of the most popular annual addresses ever heard in Wheaton or anywhere else. It was a masterly production which will never be forgotten by that audience. "I am a citizen," he began, "of no mean city—at least it is not so mean as it was. We are purifying the Augean stables and have got some of the cattle tied up. The Egyptians are going under, and I hope we shall see them no more forever." He announced his subject to be "Gunnery," and made three divisions: Gun-metal, Ammunition and Aim. "Every man may be said to be a gun, or at least he is often called the 'son of a gun.'" Gun-metal is the stuff a man is made of. The iron must be well worked to get its tough fibre. Things that amount to most are longest in fashioning. Jonah's gourd grows up in a night and droops in an hour, but the cedars of Lebanon lay hold with tough roots upon the firm ledges of the mountain for they must wrestle with tempests. He appealed to students to do more thorough work, and if they went through two colleges not to be like the calf that sucked two cows. But the gun is worthless without ammunition, powder and ball. He believed powder a product of civilization, for it had entirely superseded the old butcher style of warfare when men hacked each other in pieces. Men need more explosive force in them.

The ejaculations of a good old Wesleyan brother turned the doctor aside for a moment to give a word of praise for the hearty ways of our Methodist brethren in which he told his experience with old Aunt Sarah, a colored woman, who used to hear him preach in Virginia, and when raised to the proper pitch had to go out into the woods to relieve her pent-up feelings. But once the crowd was too great and at the Dr.'s suggestion she let go and the roof could hardly withstand the power of her hallelujahs. This anecdote was hardly more enjoyed than when speaker told of Deacon Willard, one of the best known of the Christian workers in Chicago and a familiar feature in the Farwell Hall meetings where he often sits in the very front with his ear trumpet. Dr. Henson said the deacon always sits right under his pulpit with his trumpet turned up, and he often delighted to let himself out for the deacon's special benefit, and pour it into the old trumpet until he could hear it gurgle down into the delighted soul of the old brother. Beecher and Spurgeon were contrasted; the theology of one was rotten, the other sound. Speaking of their preparation for intellectual efforts, nothing escaped them; they ate omnivorously fish, flesh, or fowl; Beecher especially fowl, and Spurgeon, fish.

The aim is the last necessity to make perfect the operation of the human weapon, and the speaker waxed more eloquent, and the audience wiped away the tears of convulsive laughter while their souls were aglow with the fire of holy purpose rekindled by the fervent oratory of the speaker.

President Blanchard in rising to confer the degrees made several announcements and spoke of the project already taking shape for the construction of a new building or adding a final wing to the present structure, which is becoming too narrow for the needs of the college. Already $2,600 has been contributed and $10,000 must be raised before the work will begin. The degrees were conferred in due form, the diplomas given, and the Schubert Quartette sang with such fine effect that they were recalled. An instrumental trio was also a noticeable part of the programme.

In the afternoon Rev. C. C. Harrah gave the address which had been expected on the Sabbath. It was of great interest and power on the theme, "Christian Education must lead in the Reforms of an advancing Civilization." Pres. C. A. Blanchard introduced Mr. Harrah as a friend of the slave, an enemy of the lodge, a promoter of woman suffrage and an opposer of the rum traffic—in short, one who had adopted the spirit of the Christian religion. The audience unanimously voted for the publication of the address.

The Senior's Concert in the evening by the Schubert Quartette, assisted by piano and violin soloists, drew out a large audience, whose satisfaction was so immense and unanimous that the performers had not the least doubt that their efforts were pleasing in the highest degree. In all, it was one of the most popular of Wheaton's twenty-nine commencements.

WHEATON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY.

The real work of the Seminary closed several weeks ago when ten or more of the young men in the institution went to Nebraska as evangelists. A tent and outfit had been procured for them through the enterprise of Mr. I. R. B. Arnold, and they started for their work with confidence that God would add his blessing to their efforts. The annual sermon before the Seminary was preached by Rev. Joel Martin of Hillsdale, Mich., president of the Michigan Wesleyan Conference, from the text, Matt. 28: 19, 20, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," etc.

The graduating exercises were held on Monday evening. Two young men composed the class, who were greeted with a good audience. William H. Hazlitt spoke on "The Minister's High Calling," in which he maintained a high ideal of the vocation to which he gives his life. Michael Albert, on the topic "National Security," made a spirited address in which he followed the beaten track of national history in the past, deriving lessons of wisdom for the present. Pres. L. N. Stratton followed with a brief address, and conferred the degrees. The vocal music was furnished by solo and quartette singers from the Methodist Episcopal church, and was of unusual excellence. Revs. Joel Martin and A. J. Chittenden assisted in the exercises of the evening.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. Dr. George F. Pentecost spoke at the Farwell Hall noon meeting in this city Monday. He is on his way to Nebraska to begin revival work.

—A Gospel tent, capable of seating 1,200 people, has been set up in the northwest part of Chicago by Maj. D. W. Whittle. Rev. George F. Pentecost, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., one of the greatest evangelists of our day, preached Monday night; and Ben Hogan, the converted pugilist, will probably speak each evening this week. This tent work thus far has been a success, and many applications have been received from churches to have its services near them. Ten churches in the vicinity of its present location have united in issuing a card upon which is given the location of the churches, name and address of the pastors, and hours of service of church and Sunday-school. The Bible visitors from the Chicago Evangelization Society are placing these cards in all the homes in that region so that every family is personally invited to these services.

—The Prospect Street Congregational church, Elgin, Ill., with thirty-one members, was organized June 21, by a council called for that purpose, and Rev. Geo. R. Milton was installed pastor over the same. Rev. A. H. Ball delivered the sermon, Rev. C. H. Abbott the charge to the pastor, and Rev. W. S. Ferris the charge to the people. This is a strong and vigorous daughter of the first Congregational church of the same city. The parent is justly proud of her. By a little help from her strong mother she will go on her way rejoicing without aid from any other society.

—Isaac F. Gibson, Secretary of the Peace Committee of the Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends, announced last week that Iowa Friends hold their annual Bible School Conference at Pleasant Plain from the 24th to the 26th, inclusive; also, their annual Peace Convention, beginning 10 o'clock A. M. the 27th inst. Senator James F. Wilson will deliver to the latter the opening address. Subject: "International Arbitration."

—The Augustana Synod of the Swedish Lutheran church has been holding its annual meeting in the Sedgwick street church, Pastor Evald, Chicago, from June 17th to 28th. The Synod was well attended and full of interest. In the debate on educational matters it was decided that the Augustana College and the Rock Island Theological Seminary be the institutions of the Synod, and that no conference or section of the Synod shall be permitted to establish or support any other. The Kansas, Nebraska, and Minnesota Synods will support their own colleges by paying one-half their contributions to those institutions. Strong resolutions against Freemasonry and similar lodges were adopted, and all members warned not to be in any way connected with the labor lodges.

LODGE NOTES.

Michael Kennedy has brought suit against Michael Casey, John Clifford, and others, charging them with conspiracy because they would not work with him. All are carpenters, but Kennedy is a Knight of Labor, while the others are members of the Carpenters' union, which does not affiliate with the Knights.

The Voice of Masonry of Chicago and the Voice of Masonry of Los Angeles, Cal., are having a nice family row over the insignificant matter of a name. They both exemplify the beautiful sham brotherhood of the lodge in a striking manner.

A New York telegram says: "The Home Club of District Assembly No. 49, Knights of Labor, which has caused so much trouble among the other district assemblies of this city, is said to be fast disintegrating. The matter which is causing the internal trouble, and from which it is said to be in greater danger than from outside attacks, is the failure of the auditing committee appointed last October to report on the financial affairs of the assembly."

It is said that Walter S. Condon, Grand Secretary and Treasurer of the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, at Kansas City, Mo., is a defaulter in a large amount. He has disappeared, and is believed to be in Canada.

The brickmakers along the Hudson River have found it necessary to organize themselves for their mutual protection against the interference and despotism of the Knights of Labor. Employers have an unquestionable right to do so; and this is perhaps the shortest and surest remedy for the evil of which they complain. It is simply "fighting fire with fire."

The Christian's Secret or A Happy Life. 28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets the doubts and difficulties of practical men, and shows the broad and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sets out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Christian Advocate.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it disarms criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical, so much that, if read, will make our lives happier, happier and more useful, that the intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life with Christ in God can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delightful and profit. It is not an theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to text."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incidents. It is a book that is a most important lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Church Union.

The edition is a beautiful large 12mo volume of 240 pages.

Price, in cloth, richly stamped, 75 cts.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles.

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in this direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some undisciplined and more selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable alike for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he criticizes his adversaries by means of their own statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasons to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. Read only subscribers his name to the letter, but ATTACHES HIS AFFIDAVIT TO IT. In closing his remarks he says: 'I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the "Morgan excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of "secret societies." The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote.' (Chicago National Christian Association.) Single copy, 5 cents.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR, Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D., (Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army, who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints, and help as to the way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and cheerful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

an organization whose object is "to expose, withstand and remove Secret Societies—and other anti-Christian Movements." Able writers from all parts of our own and from foreign lands, and from the different denominations, contribute to its columns. The claims an advanced position among the advocates of Christian Education, Temperance, Government Reforms, Sabbath Observance, and Bible Holiness, to which it adds a thorough exposition and critical analysis of Secret Societies, pointing out both the evils and the remedy. In brief, it is the paper having opinions on all practical living questions and the courage to express them.

It emphasizes the fact that political action should be directed by conscience enlightened by the Word and Spirit of God, and that Christ must be acknowledged KING OF NATIONS, and presents a platform epitomizing the science of civil governments based on the supreme authority of the Divine Word.

In addition to these features, it contains a choice selection of wholesome reading for the family, from oldest to youngest, with religious and secular news, market reports, etc. TERMS: $3.00 per year; special terms to clubs. Send for sample copies.

HOME AND HEALTH.

CARE OF THE BABY.—A traveling companion remarked to me recently, with emphasis, that "there needs to be about one child killed on every train to make people take proper care of their children." While strongly tempted to ask Artemus Ward's question, "Be you a parent, Miss Peaselee?" I refrained, for I knew well she was not; knew it by the way she started every time a perverse but attractive little fellow in the forward end of the car climbed on the back of a seat and balanced there; knew it by the way she held her breath when he approached the car door. Later in the day her words took on new meaning, and seemed to have a good deal of force. A young woman, and one who was evidently her mother, were traveling with a baby—a little creature in a long white dress, but with no wraps whatever over it, though the mother and grandmother both had on winter cloaks and hats. The baby was fed from a bottle, and at different times during the day the mother had gone out to the lunch room by the way and had the bottle filled. About four o'clock in the afternoon, the interest I had felt along in the trio deepened; the baby, who had mildly resented the treatment at various times during the day, became more energetic—in fact, it cried as hard as it could cry. When it had cried for twenty-five or thirty miles, the mother was so overcome that she cried, too, and gave the baby to the grandmother, who danced it up and down till my head grew dizzy and ached for sympathy. Then the mother took it and tossed it still, up and down, and grandmother tried dextrously to insert the drinking apparatus into its mouth. An accomplished acrobat could not have swallowed a mouthful at the rate of speed the boy was going up and down. Probably at this stage of proceedings there was not a woman in the car who did not believe that she could quiet that baby by loosening the clothing over its aching stomach, wrapping it up in a warm blanket, and cuddling it at her side. A motherly-looking woman came to them and said, "Let me take the baby," but she was glad to return it soon, saying, "This boy is cold; that is reason why it cries; its hands are like ice, and its head, too." "I should like," said a gentleman behind me, "to get a kind of a cheap child, not one of my own, and see if it could not be brought up as it ought to be; do you suppose that is necessary over there?" Night came on, and as the call to "change cars" rang out, above this and the noise of the moving feet the continued protest of that poor, ill-treated babe sounded in our ears. "Who didn't suppose," said the motherly-looking woman, "that everybody knew that a baby's hands should be kept warm, and its clothes loose, and that two or three kinds of milk meant colic and distress to a child of that age?" The "enlightenment of the masses" is not even yet complete.—Selected.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that flow like melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the prurient literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more percent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"Even his failings lead to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—*Inter Ocean.*On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Chicago Tribune.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHINGAY, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "The volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and organization. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist (Chicago, Ill.)"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist (Philadelphia.)"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D. in Christian Instructor (Philadelphia.)"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository."The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a reek-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fantastic though he be."—Nebraska Watchman."Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secretism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian (Pittsburgh.)"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and neat. I know of no book in print that leaves the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure (Chicago, Ill.)

A Few Books of Special Worth

IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Rev. James Stalker, M.A. Arranged for study, 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.

This work is in truth "Milton in Parvo," containing within small compass a vast amount of most helpful material, so admirably arranged that the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole revealed record of our life-work from its origin in a nutshell, and with a minimum of study.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES, as Seen in the Tabernacle and Its Service. By Rev. J. H. Brooks, D.D. New Edition, enlarged. Cloth, 75 cts.; paper, 50 cts.

The story of this delightful life-giving work was opened up a rich vein of truth, and in a remarkably suggestive style has presented the typical teachings of the Tabernacle service. The book is really fascinating.

FARM NOTES.

OPERATING THE MOWER.

Take up the wear of the boxes, by removing the stuffing. If the journals have too much play they cut fast. But if the boxes fit too closely, they will heat. The thickness of newspaper all around each is sufficient play. Examine all the nuts and tighten any that are loose. A loose nut will cause the machine to wear or break; and will lose off in the field, causing a vexatious delay at the least. If any nut is very loose, place a leather washer under it, and sink the nut in. Assure yourself that there is no weak place in the whiffletrees. They always break at the wrong moment, and may allow the machine and your team to mire down in a muddy spot. Mind the sickles. Every mower should be provided with three sickles, so that as soon as one becomes dull, another may be put in its place. A dull sickle does "ragged" cutting, and will increase the wear and draft of the machine, one half. Observe if the sickle bar is not warped; and if the points of the sections are in a perfectly straight line. A section out of line will wear fast and increase the draft. Try the sections, and tighten any that are loose. A loose section is apt to cause a breakage. A loose guard will produce the same result. See that the tool box contains claw-hammer, pinners, file, sections, rivets, bolts, wire and nails; the lack of these will often require a trip from the field to the tool house. If any journals have rusted, use coal oil, every few minutes, for the first half hour, driving slowly; and it will wash away the rust occasionally on the track of the sickle, to clear off the gum that gathers from the grass. The machine oil often sold is poor stuff; it is often necessary to add castor oil to give it body. If too much of the latter is used, however, it will gum. We have never used anything that gave higher satisfaction than lard (unsalted) with castor oil added to give it a little body. If the lard is taken to the field hot, in the morning, the sun will keep it liquidified during the day.—American Agriculturist for July.

A METHOD OF IMPROVING CORN.

Allowing the pollen from barren corn plants to pollenate the silks of fertile plants is much the same perhaps, as placing a poor scrub bull among a herd of good cows. If we wish to prevent a given kind of corn from suckering, we plant year after year the seeds only of the plants which do not sucker. The suckering propensities will be over in time. We can show one example of this, though ten years have been required to effect the change. If we desire that a given kind of corn should bear its ears lower, we select the seeds of such plants. And so selections should be made to change corn in any other respect. If it is desired to increase the productiveness of corn it is not sufficient that the best ears should be selected, the parentage also must be looked to. Sterile plants ripen more pollen than fertile ones. The tassels are larger. As in the majority of cases a given corn plant is not fertilized by its own pollen, it is just as likely to receive the pollen of sterile as of fertile plants. Hence it is that though we select the best ears, they may have been sired by sterile plants, and the effect will certainly appear in the progeny. It is almost impracticable for a farmer to go over a large field and cut off all the tassels of plants which bear no sets. No better method occurs to us than the one we have often recommended to our friends, viz: growing a little patch by itself as far as possible removed from other corn. In this little plot all tassels of faulty plants may be selected from the main field and shaken over the silks (pistils) of the best plants of the isolated plot. It is none too early to select the best seed, or for the grower to select a corner of his field as the best substitute for thus improving his seed corn for another year. We have practiced this plot system of improving corn for ten years or more, and we propose to continue it as long as we live. The changes wrought are now very marked, and there is no other experiment at the Rural Grounds which interest our farmer visitors more.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition attested by J. O. Doebergh, Past Master of U. C. No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written at various times during the residence of the late Mr. Adams in the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masons; and an able Introduction. This is one of the most telling anti-secrecy works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, in cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper cover, 50 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished, with engravings showing the lodge-room, degrees of candidates, signs, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Pres. Adams murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Finney on Masonry. The character, aims and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles G. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney, in "Bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Confuted. This is a book of three times. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. As a conclusion to his argument, the author has adopted a manner in which they are put, being drawn from Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister of religion will find in this tract all the arguments, 207 pp., postpaid, $1.00; per dozen, $10.00.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. L. Kellogg. Contains the opinion of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Odd-fellowship Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templar Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange" and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic" are sold bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District Northwestern Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second edition. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Knight Templarism Illustrated. A full illustrated ritual of the six degrees of the Council and Commandery, comprising the degrees of Royal Master, Super-Master, and Knight Templar, and the Knight of the Red Cross, Knight Templar and Knight of Malta. A book of 341 pages. In cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper covers, 50 cents; $4.00 per dozen.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a LEAGUE WITH THE DEVIL. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Elkhart, Indiana, for refusing to accept a reversed Freemasonry; and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that Freemasonry is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Thirteen Reasons why Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully, and any one of the thirteen reasons, if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Infidel. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the infirmity of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

United Sons of Industry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the secret trade-unions of the above name, giving the signs, grips, passwords, etc. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. A clear, cutting and accurate account of the ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic, and the ritual of the Machinists and Blacksmiths' Union. (The two bound together.) 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Mah-Hab-Bone; compiles the Hand Book, Master's Carpet and Freemasonry all in one. Bound in one volume. This makes one of the most complete books of information on the workings and symbolism of Freemasonry extant. Well bound in cloth, $2.00; per dozen, $18.00.

National Christian Association,
221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Othello. By Capt. Wm. Morgan. "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan." "Morgan's Confession of the Murder of Wm. Morgan." "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan Times," and Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees. 504 pages. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00.

In the Collar; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United States minister, vividly portraying the workings of Secrecism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are being mastered by the hidden workings of the lodge. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.00 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mysteries of Odd-fellowship (old work)" by a Member of the Craft. The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. In cloth, $1.50 each; per dozen, $14.50. The first part of the above work, Light on Freemasonry, 410 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen, $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, and to the clergy. It contains the following contents: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eusebian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Washington a Mason? Fillmore and Webster's Deference to Masonry, A Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The History of the Grand Lodge of the United States, Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secret Societies. This is a republication of Governor Joseph Ritner's "Vindication of General Washington from the Signs of the Signs of Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, March 28, 1837, at their special request. To this is added the fact that the high Masons were the only persons who opposed a vote of thanks to Washington on his retirement to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him an ancient Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Pres. J. Blanchard, at the Monmouth Convention. The Un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proven by the testimony of its own authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Baal Worship identical. Explains the true sources and meaning of the ceremony of the Master's Carpet, and proves that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries" of Paganism. Bound in fine cloth, 420 pp., $1.00; per dozen, $10.00.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to civilization, to religion, to the American government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (author of a second edition of 21 degrees. This is a very telling work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Confuted. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowshiped by the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian Church. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and accurate illustrated ritual of the 33 degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; comprising the degree of Dejah's Daughter, Ruth, Esther, Martha and Elizabeth, and known as the 33 degrees, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 20 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Stearns' Inquiry into the Nature and Tendency of Freemasonry. With an Appendix explaining the truth of Morgan's Exposition and containing a number of various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of exposing the lodge. 338 pages: cloth, 60 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan by Samuel D. Greene. One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. A. Chas. Illustrations with engravings showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees of "Freemasonry." To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonry, the candidate takes half-a-million horrible oaths. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.50.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Masonry. This is a thrilling narrative of the incidents of Morgan's life, and the history of Free Masonry. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Freemasonry Contrary to the Christian Religion. A clear, cutting and accurate account of the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

NEWS OF THE WEEK

CHICAGO.

Shortly after 4:30 o'clock Sunday morning the most destructive fire in the history of the Stock Yards broke out in the mammoth packing-house operated by the Chicago Packing and Provision Company and located in the central part of the packing district. Had the wind been strong the Stock Yards would have certainly caught fire, and the loss would have been millions. A territory 500 feet long by 300 feet wide was burned over. This was mainly covered by four-story buildings and wings, each floor filled to its utmost capacity with smoked and pickled pork, hams, bacons, shoulders, sides, all thoroughly cured and inflammable as oil—the floors all soaked with fat and lard, huge tanks of unrendered grease, the fattened carcasses of several thousand hogs and as many more well-fed porkers—all added their part to the flames. The fire destroyed property to the value of a million dollars and resulted in the death of one fireman and injury of several others. A part of the property destroyed consisted of about 20,000 barrels of "cornered" pork.

Dr. McGlynn, of New York, arrived in Chicago on Saturday and delivered a lecture at Central Music Hall on "The Cross of the New Crusade."

Ex-Mayor Carter Harrison has dismissed the two libel suits he brought against the Inter Ocean, aggregating $235,000.

COUNTRY.

The Bank Examiner Tuesday closed the Fidelity National Bank, of Cincinnati, and appointed a receiver. On the same day Vice President Harper, Cashier Ammi Baldwin, and Assistant Cashier Ben E. Hopkins were arrested by the United States Marshal and taken before the United States Commissioner, and admitted to bail, Harper in $75,000, and the others in $10,000. Harper has made an assignment of his property, and his liabilities are placed at $4,000,000. The Union National Bank of Cleveland began suit against Fidelity National to recover $87,131, alleged to be criminally incurred. The charges upon which Harper, Baldwin, and Hopkins were arrested are for unlawful application of funds aggregating over $800,000, and it is understood the affidavits do not cover all transactions of that kind. It is not believed that the Fidelity National Bank will be able to pay a fair percentage of its debts. Its assets are figured at $1,800,000, and its direct and indirect liabilities $5,500,000. Thursday Harper and Hopkins were surrendered late by their sureties. This action vitiated the bonds and released all the bondsmen. The effort to get new bondsmen revealed the startling fact that the man who a few days ago was accounted a millionaire had been deserted by his friends. Both of the arrested men gave up hope of securing bondsmen, and at their own request they were taken to jail.

The failure of the Fidelity Bank of Cincinnati has disturbed business quite extensively in New York, and other causes have resulted in temporary stringency. The failures for the past seven days were 171 in the States, in Canada 26; total, 197; as compared with 213 last week, and 162 for the corresponding week last year.

A slaughter-house is to be equipped at New York by the New York Hog-slaughtering Company with machinery capable of killing 2,000 hogs per day, the purpose being to compete with Western concerns.

Four hundred employes in Chinese laundries at New York have struck for advanced wages.

Fire broke out Friday evening in the Gould & Curry Mine, Virginia City. All the miners escaped with the exception of six who were employed on the 1,500 level of the Best & Belcher Mine. Five men are imprisoned in the 800 level and four men in the 400 level of the Gould & Curry Mine, making in all fifteen miners imprisoned. The bodies of four were recovered; the rest could not be rescued.

The murderers of Kellogg Nichols, the Rock Island Express messenger, Schwartz and Watt, were lodged in the Illinois Penitentiary Thursday.

Edward Sneed, who while drunk committed a murder in Kansas City, was executed Friday afternoon in the jail at Independence, Mo.

Two acres of buildings in Louisville, Ky., were destroyed by fire Saturday. Several tobacco warehouses were burned. The loss is estimated at $500,000.

One of the boilers of the Standard Oil Refinery at Lima, Ohio, exploded, wrecking three others, demolishing the building, and fatally injuring several workmen.

Fire destroyed Zang & Metz's Rocky Mountain Reduction Works, at Denver, Col., loss $30,000; also a brick block at Jacksonville, Fla., damage $50,000; the Puck building, New York, damage $45,000; and Congressman West's freight house, at Ballston, N. Y., loss $50,000.

Steve Peer, a local celebrity who out-did Blondin, fell from a rope and was drowned in the Niagara River. He was drunk.

A movement is on foot to have the National Colored Exposition held at Atlanta. It is thought that Congress will make a liberal appropriation to the enterprise, and in that case the exposition will open in November, 1888.

About eighteen miles north of Denver, Col., while prospecting for coal, the workmen came upon natural gas. The Chamber of Commerce will make arrangements to have it piped to the city.

While an artesian well was being drilled at a point three miles northeast of Ft. Worth, Texas, petroleum was struck at a depth of 240 feet.

The steamship P. H. Walters went down in a storm off Black River, Ohio, Tuesday, and eight lives were lost. Capt. Gillespie's wife and two children were drowned, the mate and captain and two boys being the only ones saved.

An unknown person exploded a bomb in a doorway of the residence of Dr. T. E. Buck, at St. Louis Thursday night. The house was partly wrecked, and adjoining buildings were slightly damaged.

The Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Company's locomotive and repair shops at Watertown Junction, Wis., were destroyed by fire early Friday morning. The flames wiped out the entire plant, the loss being estimated at $200,000.

By a decision of the New York Supreme Court, Friday, touching the new Sunday law, hotel-keepers may sell liquor to guests with their meals Sunday, but the saloons must remain closed. Sunday liquor flowed freely all over the city.

By an explosion of gas in Mine No. 4 of the Squehanna Coal Company, near Nanticoke, Pa., Thursday, four men were killed and four seriously injured. The gas was set on fire by powder.

FOREIGN.

A London dispatch of June 26 says, "The time set for signing the Egyptian convention expires to-morrow. It is asserted that if the Sultan does not sign the document, Sir Henry Drummond Wolff, the special British envoy, will depart from Constantinople instantly. The Morning Post says: 'The Egyptian negotiations have reached an acute stage. France threatens to break off diplomatic relations with the Porte and resume her claims regarding the protection of the Oriental holy places, if the convention be ratified, while Russia demands recompense in the direction of Erzerum. The Porte, therefore, asks England whether, in the event of the ratification of the convention, Turkey can rely upon the effective fulfillment of the convention relating to Cyprus. A reply to this note has not yet been received at Constantinople.'

German dispatches announce that measures for the repression of the French element in Alsace Lorraine have been forced upon the Berlin government, and the position of Germans in France, owing to social persecution, has become barely tolerable.

Dispatches from England announce that the government will push the Irish land, supplementary crimes and other measures, and the attitude of the Parnellites is said to savor of irreconcilable insurgency. Parnell is believed to be suffering from a cancer in the stomach.

The letter of Secretary Gault on REFORM IN THE EAST in the present number must call for the serious consideration of all who pray for the success of our principles. A wider interest but no less serious will be given to our Bombay letter, MISSIONS SWAMPED BY THE LODGE. It is providential that these have come in so close connection with Mr. Harrah's discourse. For next week we have a portrait and sketch of the revered BISHOP HAMLINE, and promise that there are many temperance workers who will be then as impatient to read MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD's letter on SECRET SOCIETIES, and a reply by an esteemed lady contributor of the Cynosure, as they are glad of ST. JOHN'S manly note herein.

We have seen nothing from any of our Chicago churches on the subject, but the Central W. C. T. U. must be commended for its Christian vigilance in protesting last week against the races at Washington Park, which were attended with the worst form of gambling, to which were added drunkenness, prostitution and suicide. The Union appeals to all good men to denounce this business, to good women to refuse their presence or influence in any way to such immoral pastimes, and to the Christian ministers to make their voices as defenders of public morality heard against this "monster vice." The new State law against pool-room gambling caused the closing of all those betting places in Chicago last week, and Gambler's Alley is now deserted. The gambling at the race course will only be the heavier, and this protest should be made so strong and so loud as to break up the whole shameful business.

The retirement of Prof. John Bascom as head of the State University at Madison, Wisconsin, at the late anniversary of the institution, caused no surprise. The fearless and Christian spirit with which he has attacked the liquor power could not forever be tolerated by the politicians who figure as regents of the institution. There are few, also, who doubt that Prof. Bascom's severe speech, in which he reviewed the course of these regents toward himself, with no excuse except hatred of his principles, is anything but simple truth. His convictions against the lodge may have also had some bearing on the case, but being seldom given to the public, probably were not made of much account. Over in Iowa—prohibition Iowa, they have the same trouble. Three esteemed and competent professors were lately asked to resign by the Board of Regents: Professors Fellows, Leonard and Parker. The first two have been prohibitionists, but not third-party men. They have been active, but not unduly zealous for the enforcement of the State laws. The other case is attributed to a low political deal. It is worth noting that the members of the Board who seem to have brought about this business, are editors of local papers, and of course engaged in politics. There is much popular indignation at the summary removal of these gentlemen, and the good people of Iowa are learning—as we all should—that State Universities are not safe in the hands of politicians—and no more so is our local press.

The liberal party in Canada has a new leader, a Mr. Laurin, who succeeds Mr. Edward Blake of Toronto. It is sincerely regretted throughout the Dominion that Mr. Blake's ill health compels his retirement from the public labors he has so long and ably and satisfactorily performed. To the last commendation there needs to be a modification in respect to the secret orders, which have not forgotten Mr. Blake's great speech in Parliament in March, 1884. This speech was in opposition to the incorporation of the Orange lodges, and condemned in high and patriotic terms the whole secret system. This speech was in part reprinted in the Cynosure of April 17, 1884. Mr. Blake is respected by the Canadian press for his commanding abilities, but some of them do not forget to strike back at his arraignment of secretism, and charge him with trading upon the rivalries of race and religion. Now that Mr. Blake has laid aside the arduous labors of politics he may be able to give his countrymen much sound advice on their complicity with secret societies.

Saturday was the day set by the Pope to hear Father McGlynn in his own defense in Rome. The ex-priest is yet in New York as defiant as ever, showing no signs of fear, confident in the popularity of his course in a land where speech is free, and sure of the sympathy of so considerable number of followers that any personal attack upon him would be a louder call for his new crusade than he or Henry George has been able to lift up. The Pope may now at leisure and at a safe distance issue his excommunication. There was a time when disobedience to the papal hierarchy, even so slight an offense as sending children to a school not approved by a bishop, would have been condemned without a hearing, and the disobedient parent sent bound to Rome to be tried by Inquisition. While priests assert their independence, as McGlynn has done, such times will seldom recur. It is by a far different, but more dangerous policy that Rome will gain over America. Cardinal Gibbons, on returning home to Baltimore, spoke of the deep interest felt by the Pope in America, and in the most honeyed words of patriotism rejoiced in the blessings of the Republic, and the duty of all who share them to maintain institutions which give liberty without license, and wield authority without despotism. Very true, but American institutions can no more be administered on the theory of Romanism or the lodge, than the country could have existed part slave and part free.

During his late western trip Dr. McGlynn spoke very emphatically at Buffalo of his view of Roman aggression in America. With due allowance for the exaggeration of a deep and hostile feeling, there is yet much in his words which needs our careful consideration. The close and friendly relations of our President with Cardinal Gibbons, and the dispatch of a United States vessel a year ago to meet a messenger from the Pope, cannot be forgotten as we read Dr. McGlynn. He says: "The Roman machine is anxious to have an accredited ambassador at Washington who would be in the Italian ring, and his presence would be a fruitful source of corruption and enslavement to the Catholic Church of this country." "The Pope is also trying to have diplomatic relations with Queen Victoria, in order, as he is alleged to have said, to be able to get accurate information about Irish affairs. What must our Irish friends think of this? The fact is that the best way for Catholic people, whether here, in Ireland, or elsewhere, to get proper treatment from the Roman machine is rather to defy it than to be submissive to it." We hope there is as much exaggeration in this as in the cablegram sent by McGlynn's friends to Rome the other day, which said, "One hundred thousand Catholics in mass meeting in this city, June 18, have denounced the threatened excommunication of Dr. McGlynn," when in reality there were barely five thousand. But we fear there is too much truth in the statement.

MISSIONS SWAMPED BY THE LODGE.

A VASTLY IMPORTANT LETTER FROM INDIA.

DEAR EDITOR:—There are many persons in foreign lands who are greatly interested in the peculiar conflict which the Cynosure has in hand, and not only because of the prevalence of the evils of secrecy in civilized lands, but also for the reason that modern secret societies have extended very largely into most foreign countries, and necessarily affect the work of Christian missions. Several of your publications show the heathenish ancestry of most of the popular secret societies; but your readers in the Christian lands of America and England cannot well conceive the effect such societies have in our mission fields. Secret orders which originated centuries ago in the mysteries and mummeries of ancient idolatries, grafted upon an apostate Christianity, have been dressed out in a partially new garb by modern civilization. They are now taken up by evangelical Christians because of the novelty of secrecy, tinsel by a glittering glamour of antiquity, and sadly linked, by an unholy compromise, with the Christianity of this generation.

This strange mixture exactly suits the educated and higher classes of natives in foreign countries. Secret orders have the appearance of ancient mysticism, which is one of the leading thoughts in all Oriental religions. They have just enough of theism and whitewash of morality to administer an effective opiate to an awakened conscience. Men whose eyes have been opened by Western education to see the absurdity of much of their mythology, at once find in these secret orders that which takes the very cream of their old religions (a compound of mysticism and morality), puts away the excrescences of more vulgar idolatry, takes in their place a high-sounding ritual and gaudy paraphernalia of uniform, and so the awakened minds of thousands of educated natives in foreign fields are lulled to sleep again by this secrecy poison, administered by the hand of professed Christians!

There are three things, in addition to the above, which make secret orders specially acceptable to the educated classes in non-Christian communities.

First. The fact that God is generally spoken of in an indirect manner. The idea of a personal, holy, sin-hating God is diluted down by a train of elastic terms. Instead of a loving, heavenly Father, seeking to save us from our sins, they speak of a "great architect," the "first cause," and other cloudy terms which leave everyone quite at liberty to think and do as he pleases in regard to the "great unknowable."

Second. Of course everybody is quite pleased to have Christ left out of the programme. A Christless Christianity can be popular in any part of the world. People of all religions can endure to have much said about Christ, provided you only call him a "great teacher," a "good man," a "mighty reformer," etc.

Third. About the greatest attraction of these secret orders is their popularity, and the personal preference which one gets by joining them. People who are separated by position, race religion, etc., can beg and bribe their way into these charmed circles, and there they meet with "brethren" who are pledged to each other's interests, right or wrong, to the bitter end.

We cannot in this letter go into details; with your permission I shall mention some of them hereafter. But now let me put some questions to your readers who see the necessity of earnest, united and continuous effort against those wily evils in your Christian land. Will you study the statement above made, and will you take any action in this matter? You believe in foreign mission work: you love it. Probably every one of you has contributed to send the glorious Gospel to foreign lands. Are you now willing to give some special help toward contending against these evils in foreign mission fields? A very few persons are trying to circulate abroad the literature which is published by the National Christian Association. The editor and the manager of the India Watchman have for some years made efforts to circulate such literature, and now wish to do so more than ever. Our means are very limited; we can only circulate units where thousands are needed. Our wants are so apparent that this suggestion should prove appeal enough to ensure a hearty response. We want a large supply of the publications of the National Christian Association, and that society will gladly send them to us if you will furnish the means. Persons who wish to communicate with us directly may write to the following address, THE MANAGER, "India Watchman," Bombay, India.

STAND FOR THE RIGHT.

Be firm, be bold, be strong, be true,

"And dare to stand alone;"

Strive for the right, whate'er ye do,

Though helpers there be none.

Nay—bend not to the swelling surge

Of fashion's sneer and wrong;

'Twill bear thee on to ruin's verge,

With current wild and strong.

Stand for the right: though falsehood rail,

And proud lips coldly sneer;

A poisoned arrow cannot wound

A conscience pure and clear.

Stand for the right, and with clean hands

Exalt the truth on high;

Thou'lt find warm, sympathizing hearts

Among the passers by.

Stand for the right: proclaim it loud,

Thou'lt find an answering tone

In honest hearts, and then no more

Be doomed to stand alone.

MORAL HEROES.—NO. VII.

BY REV. C. C. POOTE.

HORACE MANN AND JONATHAN BLANCHARD.*

In selecting subjects for my themes thus far, I have consulted proximity, i. e., I have joined persons of the same State. In this number I unite the East with the West. I do this because of so many remarkable coincidences and like characteristics in the persons I have undertaken to describe.

My last article closed with a brief record of Horace Mann. In his Congressional speech I find a page of unequalled beauty, and of practical utility and weight, by the perusal of which I am sure every reader of the Cynosure will be delighted:

"Of all the remorseless and wanton cruelties ever committed in this world of wickedness and woe, I hold that to be the most remorseless and wanton which shuts out from all the means of instruction a being whom God has endowed with the capacities of knowledge, and inspired with the desire to know. Strike blossom and beauty from the vernal season of the year, and leave it sombre and cheerless; annihilate the harmonies which the birds of spring make vocal the field and forest, and let exulting Nature become silent and desolate; dry up those fountains of joy and gladness that flow unbidden from the heart of childhood, and let the radiant countenance of youth become dull and stony like that of age—do all this if you will, but withhold your profane hand from those creative sources of knowledge which shall give ever-renewing and increasing delight through all the cycles of immortality, and which have the power to assimilate the finite creature more and more nearly to the infinite Creator. Sir, these blows to children the acquisition of knowledge, works devilish miracles. If a man destroys my power of hearing, it is precisely the same to me as though, leaving my faculties of hearing untouched, he had annihilated all the melodies and harmonies of the universe. . . . Just so far as he disables and incapacitates them from knowing, he annihilates the objects of knowledge; he obliterates history; he destroys the countless materials in the natural world that might, through the medium of the useful arts, be converted into human comforts and blessings; he suspends the sublime order of Nature, and thus prevents the blows to those wonderful relations of cause and effect that belong to her unchangeable laws. Nay, there is a sense in which such an impious destroyer of knowledge may be said to annihilate the Creator himself, for he does annihilate the capacity of forming a conception of that Creator, and thus prevents the soul that was created in the image of God from securing the image it was created to reflect. Such a destroyer of knowledge dims the highest moral splendor of the universe."

Before uttering these sublime sentences Mr. Mann had said, "Out of New England schools there is going forth a nobler band of young men and women than ever before conferred intelligence, virtue, refinement and renown upon any people or community upon the face of the globe."

In the outfit of a reformer are certain indispensable qualifications: 1. The certain knowledge of a life of persecution; 2. A willingness to have his justification postponed to the world to come; 3. To deem the fact that God has called him to be a reformer as honor and pay enough for this present world; 4. "Full assurance" that God has thus called him; 5. Assurance that fidelity is success.

I first met President Jonathan Blanchard during his brief visit at Oberlin, fifty years ago less by one, where, by invitation, he delivered an address before the Society of Inquiry. I began to know him through the columns of the Cynosure.

By the Morgan murder I had learned to hate Masonry with all my might, and I fell in love with the man who dared to expose it. An undertaking of Herculean proportion was this. All the world, well nigh, "thought favorably" of the hellish fraud. Masons were proud, aggressive, boastful, impudent, threatening and murderous. The men who hated it were few in number, and spoke of it with bated breath, fearing, lest at any moment, they might be "Morganized." When the prospect was thus hopeless, God raised up a man for the conflict to whom he had given the needful and peculiar qualifications—a man already battered and scarred by years of service in the battle of slavery. This man found this den of devils, and into it he descended, exploring its inmost recesses, and coming forth like Daniel from the den of lions, revealing to the utmost the unutterable abominations he had found. Tell me not that God would commission a man of ordinary mould for such a work, to become a leader in such a war. Such is not the record of history. Enough have I read, heard and seen of President J. Blanchard to know that what he needed God had furnished him with, traits that make him a marked man among the million: idiosyncrasies and idiocrasies like great promontories reaching out into the ocean depths; qualities, that so far as they have exercise, cannot be imitated; and therein render their possessor unlike most men. He wields a pen of such athletic antagonism as is seen in no other writer in the columns of the Cynosure. Every blow goes straight to a vital part and is intended to kill.

His confidence, his boldness, his earnestness and perseverance in the face of hostility, that would be deemed by most men reason enough for beating a retreat, are the result of the certain knowledge of the character of the enemy he aims to destroy. No other man has exercised such power, or made so deep and wide-spread impression on the nation in the Anti-masonic reform as has he. No other man lays hold of his subject with such a grasp. His knowledge of the entire philosophy (if it may be so called) of secretism is thoroughly exhaustive. See his address at the Chicago National Christian Congress as published in the Cynosure of June 2nd; a paper that should be read and re-read until it is thoroughly mastered. What he sees and knows he feels. To see the right with him is to do it. What is this rampant system of sworn secretism? Is it an evil of sufficient magnitude to challenge the life-long labors of such a man? It is such a conglomeration of contradictions, selfishness, lies and blasphemies that no definition or description can do it justice. It is the converse of the Ten Commandments. It is the greatest insult ever offered to the human understanding; an infamous absurdity; twin-brother to the "sum of all villainies." It would seem that no people, not struck down by moral paralysis, would tarry a day before rising in their might and smiting to the death such a monster.

Can any one doubt at this late day that President Blanchard is as truly called of God to reveal the character of this offspring of perdition, and to warn the people of the peril to which the church and the nation are exposed as was Elijah of old called to his mission? Who in all our ranks is so thoroughly qualified? By the scars he received, and the conflicts he encountered in the anti-slavery war, do not the honors of a veteran justly belong to him? Do not the fruits of his pen prove him to be a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed?" How searching, how scathing, how withering.

In earnestness he is a Paul. In his rebukes of wayward disciples he is as loving as a John. In intellect he is not a giant? In force of character is there not a sublimity to be coveted? If he has peculiarities, no marvel, his work is peculiar. Is he not called to unveil secrets that were deemed sacred, and that it was deemed fatal to reveal? His faith in God and his protection is as profound as his being. How wide-spread have been the fruits of his labors. He is a profound thinker, an able reasoner. He has large logical discriminations. He has moral intrepidity. And what a master of means to ends! What a reach into the future was that which placed him at the head of two colleges! He saw from the beginning that the conflict against great wrongs was to be long and desperate and that armies of men would be demanded, hence he set himself to the work of gathering recruits whom he might qualify for the conflict. Some of our best workers are his pupils.

In a word, President Blanchard was most manifestly reared up of Providence for the great work in which he is likely to end his life. In the world to come a rich reward abides him for the sacrifice he has made and the toils he has endured for the good of others.

FATHER CHINIQUY AND SECRECY.

In a commendatory notice of Father Chiniquy's "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome," printed in the Free Methodist of June 22, I observe the following paragraph:

We were sorry to see the attempted defense of secrecy in its dedication, and thought if Father Chiniquy had one-half the opportunity to learn the nature of Masonry that he has had to learn the system of Catholicism, he would never have written what he did concerning Masonry. We trust that item will not harm our readers while a faithful perusal of "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome" will be of incalculable benefit to them.

In addition to the foregoing, Father Chiniquy will do well to read the following extract from "The Master's Carpet," by Edmond Ronayne, which will serve to enlighten him concerning the intimate connection between Romanism and Masonry:

"The Church of Rome is fiercely opposed to all secret societies outside of her own communion, and more especially to the Masonic; but her opposition to the latter arises not because of the anti-Christian and infidel doctrines of Freemasonry, for the religion of Rome is equally false and unscriptural. Neither has the antagonism between the two systems arisen because of the principle of secrecy, for Romanism is as much of a secret combination as Freemasonry is, if not more so. We know that the Jesuits, the Jansenists, the Carmelites, the Paulists and the various other orders of monks and ecclesiastics within the Romish Church, not counting such organizations as the Ancient Order of Hibernians, are all of them as much secret institutions as the Masonic fraternity; and hence the opposition to Masonry by the Church of Rome cannot have originated on the simple ground of secrecy alone. From the fact that the two are rival institutions, both being so much alike, one would be almost led to suspect that perhaps jealousy has something to do with the conflict between them, and that Romanism is opposed to Masonry on the principle expressed in the old adage, that 'two of a trade can never agree'; but the real cause of their opposition to one another is the confessional. That is the great machinery by means of which the Romish Church carries out all her plans and purposes. . . . Because the Freemasons of France and Germany rebelled against the power of the confessional, and utterly refused to submit to the infliction of priestly penances, Pope Clement VIII. issued his famous bull against the institution, and from that time on the chapel and the lodge have been opposed to each other. But the contention between them is not for truth and purity, but for power and supremacy. It is a mere conflict of authority and nothing more. The Pope, or sovereign pontiff, is the Pontifex Maximus, or the Jupiter of pagan Rome, and represents the god of Romanism, while the Worshipful Master is the personification of Hiram Abif, or Osiris, or Baal, which was the name of Jupiter in Egypt and Phœnicia, whence the Masonic philosophy has come, and is the representative of the god of Masonry. But as every worshiper of the Romish god must reveal, or confess to the priest, who alone is to be the custodian of all secrets, while every worshiper of the Masonic god must conceal and never reveal, but must himself be the keeper of all secrets, and is therefore exalted above the priest, both systems cannot harmonize, and hence the bitter antagonism which rose between them in 1738. But notwithstanding this apparent wide gulf thus separating these two terrible powers of despotism and falsehood for the present, yet should an emergency ever arise when it would become necessary for men to array themselves on the side of righteousness and to defend the pure principles of Gospel truth and the full freedom of an open Bible, untrammelled either by Jesuit cunning or lodge duplicity, it is very greatly to be feared that, forgetting their petty differences for the time being, Romanism and Freemasonry would make common cause and stand shoulder to shoulder, the very embodiment of the works of darkness." (Pages 145-147.)

I have also somewhere seen it stated that, the mummeries of the first three degrees in Freemasonry are repeated in the initiation of the members of the Society of Jesus of the Romish Church. At all events, the world would be better without either institution, and the perpetuation of man's moral free agency would then be more definitely secured. Father Chiniquy should have no affiliation with either the one or the other.

OLD AMERICAN.

Chicago, June, 1887.

* NOTE.—In justice to President Blanchard it must be said that this article was conceived by the author solely, but the assistant editor has been drawn into a "conspiracy" not to mention it; so that the editor-in-chief must pay the penalty of overconfidence in the two, by knowing nothing of this eulogy until he sees it in print.

EDUCATION AND REFORM.

CHRISTIANITY'S MISSION SHOULD BE TO PROMOTE EDUCATION THAT BRINGS ABOUT REFORM.

ADDRESS OF REV. C. C. HARBAH, OF GALVA, ILL., AT THE COLLEGE COMMENCEMENT, WHEA-TON, JUNE 22, 1887.

"Every plant, which my heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up."—Matt. 15: 13.

The plants referred to in the text, and which should be rooted up, were the teachings and traditions of the Pharisees. These false doctrines were fetters to the truth. They did not produce in the lives of those who accepted them, the fruits of love and good works. The principle of the text is wide in its range. It is an attack upon every thing which is incompatible with the fundamental principles of our humanity, with the institutions of God, or with the demands of our moral nature. The text was a declaration by our Saviour, that what does not proceed from God is not tolerated by God.

To carry forward the work which he began, Jesus Christ planted in the world a church. Its work is educational. It is a school in itself; and it establishes schools of all kinds also, where minds are carefully trained to mould and lead the thought of the world. If there is evil in the land, it would seem that these churches and institutions of learning ought to see it, and to tear it up by the roots. It would seem, under the leadership of their Master, that this kind of service is the very thing for which these pious and educated minds are called into his kingdom. Therefore it is plain that the work and responsibility of the church are such that the religious educational forces of the country should lead in the reforms of an advancing civilization.

The text is authority for this proposition, and I take it as a subject to which I invite your attention. It would be a very difficult matter to show that the churches and religious education are of any use as forces to save the country from impending evils, only as they are Christ's instruments to bring about such changes that the civilization of the land may be cleared of all that is objectionable to God and which harms his creatures.

It is proper that I should call the attention of young men and young women, who have sought the advantages of a college to fit them for life's work, to such a subject as this; because of the duties that lie in the pathway of every responsible soul of the coming generation of citizens. It suits the popular taste to talk about the wonderful progress of the times in which we live; and there is indeed much that we may boast of, and which should give us hope for the future. This is an age of action, of benevolence and of moral progress. But was there ever an age that had in it more of peril? Almost all the forms of error and sin which have cursed the world at any time, exist in this generation. Wealth has always been attended with great dangers. It never was so abundant as now, or was sought with such greed. There is a prevalence of selfishness, luxury, licentiousness, intemperance, injustice and infidelity, attendant upon this increase of wealth, which gives no very encouraging outlook to the student of history who has learned to associate these evils with the degeneracy of a people and the downfall of nations. There is hardly a reformer who has not more or less solicitude as to what the future of our country will be. At every period in our history, the wisest statesmen have not hesitated to avow that Christianity is the fundamental law of the land, and that all the legislation of our State and national governments is based upon it. It is our duty to inquire whether Christianity is pervading and directing the institutions of our country as it should, so that the land may be saved from its perils. There never was a time when the religious and educational forces had such facilities for exerting their power, or could have more influence than now: so that if evils are permitted to grow, and the civilization of the country is not guided aright, these forces are responsible for the harm that will follow.

In considering this subject, that the religious educational forces should lead in the reforms of an advancing civilization, let us inquire, in the first place, as to Christ's thought of the work of his church as an instrument of human progress. It is very clear from the Scriptures that the work of the church is two-fold: First, it is to provide for and promote the worship of God, nurture all good influences, save mankind to Christ, and witness to the world the union of all who love the Saviour. Second, it is to attack evil, root up every plant that our heavenly Father hath not planted, and destroy the kingdom of darkness. How strange has been the course of those who have satisfied their convictions of service in this last direction by sectarian debates about questionable doctrines, while they have treated with indifference popular sins which were undermining faith in Christ, poisoning the life blood of humanity and dragging souls down to death. It is proof that the church is unfaithful to Christ when such sins are not reformed and uprooted.

The world is not good enough yet, so that the work of the church may no longer partake of the nature of a warfare. Christians are not permitted to seek their own ease, and in their life-work court the approval of men who hate the reformatory spirit of Christ, and who would crucify him if he were now in the world. The devil is as much against Christ now as he ever was, and he has no angels more loyal to him than are the sin-blinded multitudes of earth. Though it is done at the cost of persecution, or even the blood of martyrs, evil must be opposed and the testimony must be borne to the truth. Christian love impels the church to bear this testimony, though the world may crucify it; because there is no other way by which the world itself can be saved. If the church withholds the truth and the world is left in its sins to go on without its corrective aid, then war or plague will appear as the outcome of the evils which the church and the people let alone, and Providence will accomplish what the church is responsible for not accomplishing by means of the truth. All are informed how the demon of slavery said, "Let me alone;" and the churches generally let it alone until the storm of heaven's wrath broke upon it, and it had to die. All know how the alcohol demon has said, "Let me alone and be content with your 'moral suasion' work, that is more becoming for a church." And many have accepted the suggestion and gone on dilly-dallying with moral suasion, while ten drunkards were being made for every one reformed. The churches now are talking of killing the beast right out. They had better do it and do it quickly, for heaven's decree with reference to every rebellion of sin is that it must be put down, "peaceably if we can, but forcibly if we must." The Christian, like a good gardener, is equally careful to cultivate the good plants and to hoe down the weeds, which if permitted to grow, would choke the plants and render them unfruitful.

Sometimes the church that men see and know, has been the opposite of a reformatory institution. Instead of uprooting the evil, it has hugged to its bosom that which in the end brought ruin to itself and much suffering to the world. Practices have been favored and institutions encouraged and customs and laws sanctioned, which outraged every principle that actuated the life of Christ. In the matters of mercy and justice, the reputed skeptics have sometimes been nearer Christ than the professed believers. The student of history does not read very long until he loses respect for the so-called church. From this church which has made its record in history, the honest student turns to the few noble souls in each generation that kept the light of truth burning, to find the true representatives of Christ. The church of history is not always the church of Christ. It has at one time and another been the friend of bigotry, hate, persecution, greed, injustice, slavery, intemperance, war and Anti-christ. Where reformers have appeared in the church both in the past and the present, sometimes they have been so busy cutting off the branches of the tree of sin that they did but little good. When God said, "pluck up the plant," they were content with "regulating" it. The reform against license laws, whether they relate to the selling of liquor as a beverage or to any other evil, must be alluded to in order to get an illustration. With what zeal all now denounce Tetzels for going through Germany and selling indulgences to sin. But the principle on which he acted is essentially the same as that of those who advocate the licensing of any sin. It was the barbarism of the past that men went to the officers of the church and paid for the privilege to commit sin. It is the barbarism of the present that they go the officers of the state and buy a license, which is their indulgence to practice wickedness under the sanction of law. The prohibition of every evil that the state gives its sanction to by license, is as essential to the life and purity of the nation, as the reformation under Luther against the sale of indulgences was to the life and purity of the church. The method of Christ and the apostles was to strike at the root of the tree of evil, and the trunk and the branches came down together.

Now does the church accept this mission of attacking and plucking up whatever is defective, corrupt, depraved or vicious? If so, it takes its true place in the world as a reformer. The earnest souls of the true church of Christ in every generation, have been the reformers of that generation. In all this they have followed their great Leader, and no one can follow him without being a reformer. Christ's religion is a life, and it makes the one who receives the life the foe of all that is bad and the friend of all that is good. How sad it is that so many have not thus received the Gospel! It is accepted as a system of doctrines about which men may contend, like the devotees of opposing schools of philosophy. It is a peculiarity of the New Testament, that all ought to understand, that no doctrine is ever presented merely for the sake of the doctrine. The writer always has in view in presenting the doctrine one of two ends, either the growth and general spread of a spirit of worship, or the cultivation of moral qualities.

This way of presenting doctrine makes Christianity a religion of the life, and so of necessity a religion of reform. No one can truly understand the religion of Christ who does not study it as a reformation, and no one can truly understand the life of Christ who does not study him as a reformer.

Pause to consider this important thought for a little. Jesus began by preaching repentance, and it was established from the very first that repentance is a necessary requirement of his religion. That settled the question that Jesus, the same as John the Baptist, was a reformer. There is no such thing as repentance unless it is attended with a radical reformation of morals. To inspire all to make such a reformation, he told them that the kingdom of heaven was at hand. Sinners that he saved, turned to a pure and holy life. They were created anew in Christ Jesus unto good works, to the end that selfishness, lust, cruelty, war, slavery, intemperance and crime might be abolished from the face of the earth, and that the world might be filled with love, purity, peace and happiness. Christ's doctrine of sin was a revelation to men, and carried with it the elements of a reformation as complete as it would be universal. The Greek and Roman worlds had no clear idea of sin, and there are no words in either the Greek or the Latin to express more than what we would call physical evil. The object of their sacrifices, prayers and festivals was the removal of a defilement, not considered as a moral but as a physical stain. The will might remain consciously inclined to evil. They had no word which, when expressed, awakened the soul into the consciousness of responsibility. There either was no guilt in an action, or the deity was to blame, or the action was irresistible. One could be virtuous if he would follow nature, but to be vicious was only madness. Christ's doctrine of sin made man a lost soul, alienated from the life which God gives, and a rebel against God. When men apprehended Christ's teaching about sin, they cried out from the feeling of guilt and responsibility, "What shall we do?" This one great truth was calculated to transform society, and work everywhere a complete reformation.

In the same way we might speak of the reformatory tendency of our Lord's teaching of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, also of his teaching of personal responsibility and accountability, into which he put an awful meaning by emphasizing the fact of an immortality where the conduct of this life is to be suitably and justly rewarded or punished. We also might speak of the teaching in regard to his kingdom, which he founded on the basis of self-denial and self-sacrifice. He made it impossible for any one to become his disciple and serve in his kingdom without these qualifications. In the truth he gave to the world, Christ laid a broad basis for the most aggressive work of reform that mankind had ever known. And if the church had always been faithful to his truth and loyal to his spirit, it would indeed be fit to be lifted up to the heavenly Jerusalem, when the angels come to inspect its record.

Now as we look upon Christ's own great work of reformation and the meaning of his Gospel, we are compelled to hide our faces in shame, because so many of the churches stand with open arms toward the world and boast of their success in pleasing it. They are weak in their testimony against evil, where the testimony would make them less popular. They measure their success, not by self-denying services for Christ's kingdom and loyalty to truth and duty, but by the numbers which they count; and which numbers they multiply because of the low plane on which they live. I do not mean to be harsh; but I deplore a condition of things, which is painfully common, where ministers are praised and honored, not for their faithfulness in plucking up what God has not planted, but for their ability to draw the crowd. I deplore a condition of things, which is too general, where religious interest in the churches takes the direction of selfish sectarian loyalty, instead of service as Christian reformers. Christ has been, and ever will be, the Prince of reformers, and reformers generally have acknowledged him to be their leader. It is a poor, apostate church that, under Christ's leadership, is not ready to help every movement which as its outcome will uproot evil from the world and permanently establish the good. We grant to each other liberty of judgment as to the things our heavenly Father has not planted, and as to the best way of uprooting the evils; but when in the use of the best light we can get, it is certain that a thing is an evil, there is only one course for a Christian to pursue—he must be a reformer.

It must be confessed that correct thought upon this subject does not give much comfort to the ministry and the membership of the churches, whose notion of the Christian life and service is that of ease and popular applause. A thoughtful author has truthfully said: "If the angel Gabriel were to come down from heaven and head a successful rise against the most abominable and unrighteous vested interest which this poor world groans under, he would most certainly lose his character for many years, probably for centuries, not only with upholders of the said vested interest, but with the respectable mass of the people he had delivered. They wouldn't ask him to dinner, or let their names appear with his in the papers; they would be careful how they spoke of him in the palace or at their clubs." However the world may receive us or our message, there is only one course before a soul that will be loyal to truth and Christ—he must be a reformer.

Having considered now the object of the church, I want to make plain to you, in the second place, the educational intention of the truth and institutions of the Bible in the direction of a reformed, humane civilization. There is hardly any principle which Christ taught, or any custom or ordinance of religion, that has not a clear reformatory, educational intention. By accepting these principles and appointments of religion, mankind put themselves in a school where a work of education begins, and gradually they are changed for the better. There is no true advance in human civilization without education along the lines marked out by the truth of the Bible. If this were generally accepted and acted upon, all Christian educational institutions would qualify their students for the work of the world's reformation. When a student graduated from college, he would go out into the world with the purpose of service to make it better. The principles of religion would be taught at home and in the church and in the schools, with reference to their bearing upon the world's advancement. Religion would be understood as a practical force, to form characters and to improve customs and laws.

Let me illustrate now from the Bible, how its truths and appointments have an educational intention in the direction of a perpetually advancing civilization. Christ's teaching of sin, of repentance, of personal responsibility and accountability, which I have already alluded to, are educational forces which will continue to push the world in the directions of reform as long as there is evil in it. But there is more that ought to be said in reference to this perpetually working reformatory, educational intention of the truth and appointments of the Bible, which anything I have said would not lead one to suspect. Every man and woman who goes forth from a Christian school, ought to understand the full meaning of the truths of his religion. The Bible example which I will take to illustrate my thought, is the law requiring the observance of Sabbath. Some look upon the Sabbath as an arbitrary arrangement, of local value and individual convenience. They have no conception of its great value as an instrument to promote justice among men and to advance a humane civilization.

I think it can be shown, if one had time to do it, that the Sabbath laws of the Bible embody every important principle of the modern labor reform movement. The commandment made it a day of rest, and forbade greedy masters and employers to consider only their own advantage. The law was just as stringent in its provisions for the rest of the man-servant, maid-servant, stranger, and even the cattle, as for that of the master himself. The Sabbath laws were the most humane provision for the poor and the oppressed that could have been adopted. By the extension of the provisions of this law to the seventh year many advantages came to the dependent classes. The Sabbath day was a key note to a scale of sabbatical observance consisting of itself, the seventh month, the seventh year and the year of Jubilee. The seventh month was not characterized by an entire cessation from labor; but it was a time of religious feasts, and a kind of holiday season for the laboring people. The seventh year was a year of rest. By it, the greed of avaricious men was checked; and rights were given to dependent people that otherwise they would not have had. It is explicitly stated that a reason for its appointment was "that the poor of thy people may eat." The vineyards and oliveyards continued to bear their fruit, and there was always quite a harvest in the grain fields from the seed that was scattered while gathering the crops of the previous season. The ownership of all this was vested in the man-servant, the maid-servant, the stranger, and what they left the beasts of the field were to be permitted to eat. By these laws the rich Hebrew was debarred from the thought of the absolute ownership of anything. No poor debtor was required to make any payment during this year; and it is a question whether his debt was not forever canceled, if he was not able to pay it at the opening of this seventh year. Hebrew bond-servants were released at any time when a seventh year from the beginning of their service came around. They could not, in the first instance, sell themselves to others for a longer time than that. The fiftieth year was a part of the same sabbatical system. Then every poor man and woman had an equal chance with the rich to the land of the country, as it was originally portioned out to the families by Joshua. A sale of land could not extend beyond this time, when all the families returned to their original possessions. All slaves were freed, and everybody was happy in the possession of his liberty and his inheritance. The spontaneous productions of the earth, for both the forty-ninth and this fiftieth year, went to the poor and helped them to start in business for themselves. None of the evils which grow out of the opportunities for sharp, gifted men to accumulate property beyond the masses, could have any dangerous development under such a system of laws. The sabbatical laws worked perpetually in the direction of reform, and relieved those whom misfortune or fault had reduced to poverty, and prevented the accumulation of wealth in the hands of the few.

Labor must have some such advantages in this country. When the reform comes, many will be surprised to find that the principles of it always were in the Bible. I have thought that the best approach, in one important direction, that we can make to these beneficent provisions, is to enact laws which put a graduated tax upon the incomes of large accumulations of capital, and especially upon property that one leaves at death. In this way it should be made impossible for wealth to continue to increase in a family, through generations. The government that protects a man in so many ways in order that he may accumulate a large property, has some right to the property as well as the man; and especially when the man by death no longer has use for the property, and the government needs it to relieve the poor of taxes. This principle of a graduated tax on legacies has received the approval of eminent jurists; and if put into operation, would bring to the poor of our land some of the benefits that the sabbatical laws of the Old Testament brought to the poor among the Jews. The laws worked among the Jewish people a perpetual reformation—modifying and correcting the inequalities and excesses into which a rich nation are likely to fall. While the nation had a Sabbath, it was impossible for the poor to lose their rights and become absolutely subject to the rich. The desecration of the Sabbath and the oppression of the poor went together. (Isa. 58.)

It is a hopeful sign of our times that the laboring classes are waking up to the benefits our Sabbath laws give to them. The laboring men and women of the country have a right to the rest and freedom of the Sabbath day; and if corporations were compelled to respect that right, it would do much to promote every righteous demand of the labor reform movement. The first Sunday laws that were enacted after Christianity spread into the Roman empire, were enacted in the interest of the laboring classes. We see from all this the way reform is wrought into the institutions and truth of the Bible.

Instead of the Sabbath laws, I might have taken as examples to illustrate my thought, the laws relating to hygiene, or heredity, or holiness. The laws and rites relating to these subjects, as well as the great principles of civil government taught by Moses, show not alone a benefit for the present, but an educational, reformatory intention, which would continue to advance civilization and work evil out of the world. The gradual working of the reformatory truth of the Bible, and especially the reform work begun by Jesus Christ, is apparent now in the advance of civilization, notwithstanding the unfaithfulness of what we have known in history as the church.

We talk about the Roman republic and the Grecian democracy; but both of them were wanting in our republican, Christian conception of human rights. Man as an individual was nothing, and the state was everything. In referring to the traditions that had supplanted the laws of the Sabbath, our Lord said: "The Sabbath was made for man, not man for the Sabbath." That was a new revelation of the worth of man, and from which we get the great principle which is the corner-stone of our republican liberty, that the state is made for man and not man for the state. I have not been able to find that any one ever expressed this fundamental idea before Jesus Christ.

The time requires me to speak too briefly for the proper treatment of such great matters. I must be content with the points I have made, and the imperfect way in which I have presented them. I hope that I have now made it clear to you, not only that the church is Christ's instrument placed in this world for the very purpose of leading in reform, but also that the working of the truth and institutions of religion were intended to be in the line of reforms. This marks out, to my mind, the duty of Christian educational institutions as well as the duty of churches. And my conclusion is, that everyone who is educated by the church and by the Christian school or college, ought to have no other thought only that he is to go forth into the world as a reformer.

That this is not the case, in so many instances, I must attribute to the superficial way in which the principles of the Bible and the life of Christ are presented. There is plenty of religion in the colleges, as there is in the churches; but it is too much of that kind which is content with what is called "the salvation of the soul," and does but little to save the whole man, body as well as soul, and for time as well as for eternity. The business of Christian education is to make men, who shall reform the world because first they have reformed themselves. Jesus, the apostles, the prophets, and the men and women in all ages who have been of any account to advance a humane civilization, were reformers; and Christian schools have no business to send forth any other than the reform type of manhood. The religious, educational forces of the country are abundantly able to raise up men and women who shall lead in all the reforms and make our civilization thoroughly Christian; and the homes and the churches and the schools are responsible for the loss to the world, if they do not furnish the needed men and women of character and of action.

Young men and young women: You are educated for a mission in life, and your mission is that of reform. You are certain to occupy influential positions in your communities and in the world; and with love to God and love to man inspiring you, be true to the reformatory example of Jesus Christ, and to the precepts of the Bible, in the use of your influence. The world and the flesh and the devil will all make bids for you as soon as you offer yourselves on the market of life's activities; but you cannot afford to sell yourselves for any price that they are able to pay. If you cannot be bought, then be not deceived into a patch-work religion, which is of no use to either God or man. It may be called Christianity, but it serves only to satisfy conscience and to please the devil, and has no more of the great saving and reforming and life-giving and sin-destroying Christ in it, than any other of the time-serving and world-pleasing idolatries of earth.

Profit by the experience of the past. Your professors can recall the time when it was boldly declared, out of wicked compromise with the prevailing public sentiment, that slavery was a divine institution. Now, one would hardly be guilty of such folly and wicked falsehood, in the very heart of the South. But God's truth was just the same thirty years ago that it is now. Why did not all Christians declare it? Every Christian ought to be jealous for his influence and give it only for God and the eternal truth. He cannot afford to sanction that which the reformers of the future will witness to be a lie, and root up as a plant that our heavenly Father has not planted.

If the name Christian has lost its meaning to you, so that it no longer signifies the giving of yourself up for others, then, with a reformer who has lately spoken, I ask you to be as a Christ to the world. You may think yourself a Christian as a result of your conversion at some past time, but you cannot be a Christ unless you continue in Christ's spirit. It is only by effort to help the troubled and the oppressed, and to get the evil out of the world, and to nurture the good, that you can be a Christ to mankind.

If you will accept so high a mission, eternity only can unfold the success of your career. The treasures of Egypt are nothing compared with the value of the recompense of your reward. The blessings of heaven through you will come down to this world. The omnipotence of Eternal Love will make you strong in duty and faithful in service, by giving to you a spirit of courage, and assurance that he that puts the truth in gear for mankind will have the Almighty to turn his wheel.

Not until God has no kingdom, and his throne perishes from the universe, can the world overcome the church made up of such spirits. With the power and glory of an invincible army it moves on from victory to victory. Each victory is the triumph of another reform, and additional blessings come to mankind, and the world is pulled along in its civilization. This is the church redeemed by Christ from all iniquity, purified unto himself, a peculiar people, zealous of good works. It was of it that Garrison wrote, in the words with which I shall close:

"Church of the living God! in vain thy foes
Make thee in impious mirth, their laughing stock,
Contemn thy strength, thy radiant beauty mock;
In vain thy threats and impotent their blows—
Satan's assaults—Hell's agonizing throes!
For thou art built upon th' Eternal Rock,
Nor fear'st the thunder storm, the earthquake shock,
And nothing shall disturb thy calm repose.
All human combinations chance and die,
Whate'er their origin, form, design;
But firmer than the pillars of the sky
Thou standest ever by a power Divine;
Thou art endowed with immortality,
And can'st not perish—God's own life is thine."

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—An Eastern city was once besieged. A woman within offered to open the gate and betray the city. She asked as a reward that the soldiers should give her what was on their left arm (referring to the golden bracelets which they wore). When she opened the gate and the soldiers filed in they threw their shields at her until she was crushed and buried under the heap. Her treachery was rewarded with death. Every voter in this land who sells his vote betrays our citadel to the enemy. Every politician who buys a vote opens the gates to the foe. May the righteous indignation of our Christian citizens bury them beneath an heap of shields mountain high.

Sabbath morning I preached in the First United Presbyterian church of Xenia, Ohio, Rev. J. F. Wright, pastor, on the "Moral Accountability and Responsibility of Nations." At 2 p. m. I preached in the Wesleyan Methodist colored church on the moral reforms of the day; and at 8 p. m. a union service of the three United Presbyterian congregations was held in the First Church, where I preached on the Mediatorial Dominion.

Monday evening I lectured in Antioch College, before the Summer Normal. President Long received me cordially and announced himself in favor of the amendment to the Constitution.

Tuesday evening I spoke on the kingly office of Christ, in the Cedarville Hall. Rev. W. H. French, D. D., of Cincinnati, was present; Rev. J. F. Morton, D. D., acted as chairman; Rev. T. C. Spruill led the singing. The people here can sing Psalms without the book. We think we have persuaded Mr. D. S. Ervin to give a carload of lime to the National Reform work, and his brother, Robert Ervin of Yellow Springs, a load also. As the temple we are erecting is for the King of kings it will require the best material in the market. On Wednesday evening I lectured in the Jamestown United Presbyterian church, Rev. J. B. Robb, pastor. They are excited over their gas wells in this county.

Natural gas is a wonderful discovery. Dr. Strong's words with reference to our coal fields are intensified. "When storing away the fuel for the ages," said he, "God knew the place and work to which he had appointed us, and gave to us twenty times as much concrete power as to all the people of Europe. Among the nations ours is the youngest, the Benjamin; and Benjamin-like, we have received a five-fold portion. Surely 'He hath not dealt so with any people!'" But material resources are of no avail unless there be moral character behind it. Our only safety is in educating the public conscience.

On a monument to Horace Mann, in Antioch College campus, are inscribed these words: "I beseech you to treasure up in your hearts these, my parting words: Be ashamed to die until you have won some victory for humanity." The Roman moralist Terence said: "I am a man, and nothing that concerns humanity is alien to my breast." These sentiments are the watchword of the National Reform Association. They will conquer by-and-by.

The Baptist, Christian, Methodist, and United Presbyterian pastors were present at the Jamestown meeting. Drs. Carson and Morehead were out at the union meeting in Xenia Sabbath night. They listened without uttering a word of dissent. Dr. Watt told us that he was occupying the pew in which Mr. John Alexander sat when he drafted the first resolution which led to the organization of the National Reform Association in 1863. He sat at the time in the pew just back of him, and seconded his resolution.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

WENDELL PHILLIPS.

"Fanatic!" the insects hissed, till he taught them to understand That the highest crime may be written in the highest law of the land.

"Disturber" and "Dreamer" the Philistines cried, when he preached an ideal creed,
Till they learned that the men who have changed the world with the world have disagreed;
That the remnant are right, when the masses are led like sheep to the pen;

For the instinct of equity slumbers till roused by instinctive men.
—John Boyle O'Reilly's "Wendell Phillips" in "In Bohemia."

I had just determined to write for my "Boston Letter" a few words concerning Wendell Phillips, the idea having been suggested by Rev. C. C. Foote's brief eulogy in Number V. of his excellent series of "Moral Heroes," when my friend Mr. John Boyle O'Reilly placed in my hand his latest poetic work, "In Bohemia," and almost the first poem to attract my attention was one bearing the title, "Wendell Phillips," which abounds with true Irish sympathy, and though manifestly eulogistic, is wholly untainted by characteristic "blarney." There can be no doubt that Mr. O'Reilly wrote from the heart. Rev. Mr. Foote truly said that Mr. Phillips "was one of the heroes to whom a debt of gratitude remains yet unpaid." The substance of that heroism Mr. O'Reilly further graphically describes in this couplet:

"A sower of infinite seed was he, a woodman that hewed toward the light,
Who dared to be traitor to Union, when Union was traitor to right."

The debt, however, is not forgotten. Several organizations have jointly undertaken the erection of a handsome building in this city, to be dedicated as a memorial to Wendell Phillips, which is to be used, rent free, by any reform organization. A committee of seven was chosen as follows: J. H. Wolff, president of the Wendell Phillips (colored) Club; Mrs. Harriet R. Shattuck, Woman Suffrage Party; John Howes, Labor Organizations; S. E. Fay, in behalf Temperance Cause; P. O'Neill Larkin, National League; Warner Johnson, Financial Reform; N. E. Chase, member at large.

One of the dearest names to a thorough-going Bostonian is Wendell Phillips. He was a genuine Bostonian. "The silver-tongued orator," is the pet cognomen which we love to apply to the great agitator of anti-slavery, anti-tyranny, anti-rum, and last, but not least, anti-snobbery. "Golden-mouthed Bostonian," some have called him. We, of course, don't object to it, but we are certain that the great anti-aristocratist would protest against its aristocratic ring. Silver would be far more agreeable to his plain method of thought and living.

From boyhood up, I have always admired Wendell Phillips. There was always something in his calm, Quaker-like appearance which always inspired peace. Many times, when a boy employed in a small-ware store on Winter street, I have sold him tape, presumably for MSS. I remember that he always selected a sort of Quaker drab, and was very particular about the width. Whenever I saw his tall and slightly stooping form enter the store the tape box was immediately in readiness for his inspection. I never knew him to purchase anything in that store except tape. I always waited upon him for I knew just what his wants were. Being brought in such close contact with him, our heads almost touching, I had excellent opportunity for close examination of the features and lineaments of his face. It was seldom there ever came in conjunction a grander head and a greater numb-skull than on those occasions. One could not help feeling his own inferiority. I often met him on the street, usually between seven and eight o'clock in the morning, coming from a neighboring bake-shop with a loaf of bread under his arm, a la Franklin. Several years before he died he moved from his residence on Essex street to an exceedingly plain brick house on Common street, just opposite the writer's city home on Tremont street. Here he continued to do his own errands at the neighboring stores.

I have intimated that Mr. Phillips resembled the Quaker, which resemblance was doubtless enhanced by the plain gray coat and wide-brimmed, white felt hat which he always wore. He ever appeared to be in deep thought, seldom raising his eyes from the sidewalk. His well-shaped face, which was always remarkably serene, became radiant when he smiled, —and such a smile! I shall never forget it. That wondrous smile is beyond the power of my feeble pen to describe. It seemed as though one could bask in its sunshine forever. It seemed to magnetize—enchant. After experiencing that smile, wonder at the almost miraculous power he displayed in calming the frenzy of the mob would cease.

CORRESPONDENCE.

HOW ST. JOHN STANDS WITH THE LODGE.

PONY CREEK MISSION, BROWN CO., KANSAS.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

DEAR BROTHER:—Enclosed I send you a correct copy of all the correspondence between our ex-Governor St. John and myself. Each letter in its order as follows:

SABETHA, Kansas, Feb. 13, 1885.

Hon. John P. St. John,

DEAR SIR AND BROTHER:—I have had the honor to vote and work for your election three times, if my memory does not err. The last time I never was so vilified, but I stood by the polls all day urging the ticket,—straight Prohibition, with yourself and Daniel at the head of it and Phillips for governor—for I cannot vote unless it be as I pray.

Recognizing the fact that yours is a mind of keenest perception, it, therefore, approximates a work of supererogation, if such a work be possible, to call your attention to the incompatibility of oath-bound, penal secrecy, with the discharge of the duties of American citizenship, and especially those duties pertaining to membership in the church of Jesus Christ.

A simple comparison of the covenant of the lodge to the Initiating Apprentice Mason and the "Twenty-first Landmark" of Masonry is sufficient to illustrate the invalidity of such obligations, while their effect on the judicial proceedings of our country subverts justice, and is diabolical in the extreme. Therefore, in behalf of a very respectable portion of your former majorities, permit me to direct your attention to the fifth plank of the American party's platform. Should you endorse this plank, you can certainly count on the same support in future.

I would not cast such a reflection on your intelligence as to assure you that Freemasonry is thoroughly exposed, for I am certain that you know this fact. Therefore, as "it is a fraud to conceal a fraud," and as Freemasonry is the most gigantic fraud of the age, it follows that such a reflection would only be surpassed by the insinuation that you possess neither the moral sense to endorse this plank, nor the grace to repudiate the system to which it stands opposed.

"For God shall bring every work into judgment with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil."

Believe me, we are your friends, and have been all through. And we have neither threats to compel you to pledge yourself to this issue, nor promises if you ignore and reject it. In short, we trust that we can cast our next presidential ballots for President John P. St. John, succeeded Royal Arch Mason. You then will reach the climax of your accumulated iniquities, and complete the list of your enviable appellations in being pronounced "a perjured villain," "Of whom I am which." Very cordially yours,

Geo. T. DISSETTE,
Succeeded Master Mason.

To the above our esteemed ex-governor responded in a private letter from the law office of St. John & Pickering, as follows:

OLATHIE, Kansas, April 1, 1885.

Geo. T. Dissette, Sabetha, Kansas,

MY DEAR SIR:—Your letter of the 13th of February did not reach me until day before yesterday, owing to the fact that I have been absent in the Southern States for the last two months.

I was once a Mason, having passed to the Royal Arch degree. I have not been in a lodge for about sixteen years; have paid no dues, and am in no manner connected with the order, and never shall be again. I have made this statement to at least a hundred different persons, and supposed my position touching the matter was thoroughly understood.

I am seeking no office, nor do I desire a nomination for any office. I am in my humble way engaged in the fight against the liquor traffic, and propose to make the suppression of that great curse one of the paramount aims and objects of my life. Very truly yours,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

[Permission being personally given by Gov. St. John to the Cynosure to print the above letter, it appears by the favor of Bro. Dissette.—Ed.]

The friends of reform, and, therefore, yourself, can rely on the above as a verbatim transcript of the correspondence in question.

Language cannot express the contempt with which all good people here feel toward the legislature of this State in its action respecting St. John county. But perhaps that body wished to signalize itself ere its members returned to their farms and their merchandise, no more to meet in such official capacity. Or, perhaps, some of them are looking longingly toward Congress, and judged this to be the preliminary step and open door. Be this as it may, St. John will never be dead as long as "Logan county" is written, or buried so deeply as such enemies. We expect them to be "snowed under" in a Kansas blizzard at election-time. Yours in the Gospel,
GEO. T. DISSETTE.

BENJAMIN LUNDY.

A CORRECTION AND INTERESTING HISTORICAL FACTS.

CARTHAGE, Rush Co., Ind., June 17, 1887.
ESTEEMED FRIEND:—I wish to call attention for a moment to my article on "Moral Heroes" in the Christian Cynosure of May 12, in which B. Lundy is stated to have commenced his labors by publishing the Philanthropist in 1818, etc. Perhaps that is correct, though I believe Charles Osborn was the publisher of that paper. It was not far from that time that B. Lundy went to Tennessee and it was there he first published the Genius of Universal Emancipation at Greenville under the auspices of the Manumission Society (or Association), James Jones, president, and Thomas Doan, secretary. Some members of this association bought a press expressly for the purpose of printing such a paper. My father was one of those men.

Lundy's paper was a monthly, and the 36th number was dated 12th month, 1823. From this number I have reprinted the "Slaveholder's Prayer," composed by my grandmother's brother, Thomas Doan (secretary as above). It was accompanied by a very significant but coarse wood cut, drawn by T. D. and engraved by some young man in Greenville, representing the slaveholder on his knees with his rawhide over one shoulder and a large chain in the other hand passing over the other shoulder and around "Cudgog's" neck standing behind him. After Lundy left East Tennessee, the press and types were taken to the residence of James Jones and remained till after his death. At the next annual convention, I think in 1829 or '30, held at Lost Creek in Jefferson county, it was determined to move the press to New Market, and the New Market Telegraph was printed on it a few years, when the office was burnt. I was in attendance at that convention, and think it was the last one or at least the next to the last ever held. The 36th number alluded to was preserved in my father's family and sent to me a few years since by my brother.

Elihu Embree doubtless published the first paper that was wholly devoted to the anti-slavery cause, at Jonesboro, Washington, Co., Tenn., but he died about 1820.

The anti-slavery sentiment was pretty strong in East Tennessee, in those early days, and men spoke out their sentiments, though their numbers were not very large.

I have thus made free to write in reference to a subject that was one of interest from my earliest recollection. I remember well the large petitions for the gradual emancipation of the slaves, that were sent from East Tennessee to the constitutional convention in 1833 (I believe). Please excuse my freedom and length of letter. I was an advocate for freedom in the midst of slavery in Tennessee and in North Carolina, and now am enlisted for another conflict against secret societies, etc. With my prayers for the success of truth and righteousness I am truly thy friend,
DAVID MARSHALL.

PITH AND POINT.

TO THE PERMANENT COMMITTEE OF THE CHRISTIAN CONGRESS.

BRETHREN:—Can you not "see your way out" to issue the proceedings of the Congress in book form? The addresses certainly ought to go into our libraries in a permanent shape. We want our children to read these in the textbooks on secretism and how to handle it.

Friends, let us rally to the committee's aid and subscribe for the work. Put down my name for two copies. Yours for pure Christianity,—C. E. WALKER, (U. B. Pastor), Grey Eagle, Minn.

THE BATTLE NE'ER GIVE O'ER IN OLD GENTRY COUNTY, MISSOURI.

We printed a paper for a year, then closed it out, not however, until we had changed political matters somewhat in Gentry county. The independent vote for a seceded Mason on the temperance ticket undoubtedly defeated the Republican candidate for the legislature. One of the county judges is a staunch Anti-masonic temperance man. On the whole our effort was gratifying in the outcome. The Republicans were especially bitter against the independents, and blamed our paper for all their troubles. A "Sir Knight" Republican editor forced us into a personal encounter and even went so far as to draw a revolver on me, and went off swearing he would get even with me. But enough of this. Success to you.

M. N. BUTLER, Darlington, Mo.

ADJOURN DIVINE WORSHIP FOR A LODGE MEETING.

The secret empire captured the Congregational church in this place on this wise. The G. A. R. announced a memorial service in a public hall and asked all churches to suspend services on Sabbath evening, May 29. The question was presented to the Congregational society on prayer-meeting night by the pastor, J. L. Kelsey, and when the motion was made to suspend I arose and told the church of the inconsistency of a Christian society adjoining to attend an anti-Christian society, etc. But the Masons who were present with their friends voted to adjourn, thus denying their Lord, when like Peter a moment before they confessed him. The pastor, who in private speaks in denunciation of the secret empire, did not raise his voice either for or against. Let us have an Elijah who will show Israel her Baal worship.—W. O. NORVAL, McCook, Neb.

STRENGTHS RENEWED.

I notice as the years go by the friends and workers in the cause of reform seem to increase in strength and wisdom. It is indeed wonderful to see the onward march of the cause and the undaunted courage of its advocates in the face of so much opposition. I think the murders, the threats, and the boycotts of the opposing party will tend to their own destruction rather than that of the reform; for the Word of God declares "the wicked shall not live out half their days." May the Lord still strengthen and encourage the hearts of those in the work and increase the number. Respectfully yours,—MRS. RUTH E. SUTPHEN, Evansville, Wis.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON III.—July 17.—John the Baptist.—Matt. 3: 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance.—Matt. 3: 8.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The message of John the Baptist. vs. 1-3. John the Baptist was born with the mantle of his prophetic office already resting upon him. As the Bible expresses it, "he was filled with the Holy Ghost from his mother's womb." His mission was to be a reformer—in the fullest and widest sense, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children; a passage which has been variously explained, but is now taken in a figurative sense by the best commentators and rendered, "He shall bring back the ancient spirit of the nation into their degenerate children." This is the true office of the ministry—to sound the warning message, Repent ye! The nation needs to be turned back from its perilous path, to be taught that the only stable foundation of national greatness is national righteousness, that wealth and culture and mere material grandeur may be but the millstones around its neck to sink it lower in the day of ruin if it neglects God's great rule for nations as well as individuals, to do judgment, to love mercy and to walk humbly before the Lord. If the pulpit has lost its old time power with the masses it is because it has ceased to warn men of their sins and point to the kingdom at hand. And if the Lord does not come in power to the churches it is because they have forgotten to prepare the way before him by putting down known sins, and most especially the sin of secret false worship—the burning of the strange fires of lodge idolatry in the very place of his sanctuary.

2. Earnestness and self-conservation the power which draws the masses. vs. 4-6. A self-indulgent religion will never attract men. A minister who likes fine clothing, delicate fare, and the smiles of the wealthy and aristocratic cannot expect that the multitude will follow him. It is contrary to the instincts of human nature. But this desert prophet with his hermit's dress and his fare of locusts and wild honey had what humanity always demands as the first attribute of a religious teacher—complete self-conservation. This was the power which drew the thronging multitudes from metropolis and village and wilderness solitude to be baptized of him in Jordan. Genuine earnestness always tells, and never so much as in the office of a preacher. What a man wants others to believe he must believe himself, and a truth he wants to make the world see he must be willing to stake his life on.

3. The solemn warning. vs. 7-12. The true preacher is no respecter of persons. Not to the publicans did John say, "O generation of vipers!" but to the Pharisees and Sadducees, the wealthy, the aristocratic and cultured. It is they who need most to be plainly dealt with. They fill responsible positions. They are looked up to as leaders. They should bring forth fruit meet for the golden sunshine of their superior opportunities. ¶ There is a lesson here for the native American who prides himself on being a son of the Pilgrims. It is vain as the boast of the old Jews, "We have Abraham to our father," if they are recreant to those early examples and false to that spirit which sacrificed all earthly good at the shrine of duty. Would they have compromised with the saloon as so many of their children are willing to do? Would they have tolerated the secret hand of the lodge, corrupting courts of justice, cheating the poor of their earnings and teaching another way of salvation than the ancient paths they trod so heroically? God was able of the very stones to raise up children unto Abraham, and the true child of Pilgrim sires is the man who breathes their spirit wherever born.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"And saying, Repent ye." It means, as both Count Zinzendorf and Dr. Adam Clarke, though somewhat dimly, perceived, Re-view, Take a new view, Change your view. The Baptist, in calling on his fellow men to make ready for the coming of the great King, began at the beginning; he called upon them to think. But the cry was not simply, Think! It was, Think again! Think back upon your ways! Review! Go back step by step into the details of your bygone life; connect your thought with (meta) these details, till all that is within you is stirred and roused, and you feel ashamed and heart-broken, and constrained to flee from your own selves to God, the propitious and forgiving God. Such was the import of the Baptist's cry. The word involves the idea of repentance, penitence. It involves, too, the idea of reformation; but it flashes light upon the mental process by which moral reformation is reached. If the English word repent had been derived, as Hinton falsely supposed, from the French repenser, to think again, it would have expressed, with remarkable exactitude, the idea of the original Morison. Now, there are four parts of repentance (contrition, confession, faith and amendment of life), which, being set together, may be likened to an easy and short ladder whereby we may climb from the bottomless pit of perdition into the castle or tower of eternal salvation.—Homilies of the English Church.

Each individual soul needs a John the Baptist. The Holy Spirit convinces us of sin. God's providence makes us see the awful danger and guilt of a worldly life. The voice comes to us, Prepare ye the way of the Lord. (1) Fill up the valleys, the sins of omission,—defects of prayer, of faith, of love, of work. (2) Bring down the mountains of pride, sin, selfishness, unbelief, worldliness. (3) Straighten out all crooked places, crooked dealings with others, crooked ways of sin; settle difficulties; confess sins. (4) Smooth the rough places, the harshness of temper and manner, the lack of courtesy, the coldness, the fault-finding, which are the little foxes that spoil the vines, the flies in the precious ointment, the spots in our feasts of charity, that mar the beauty of holiness.—P.

"O generation of vipers." This was especially addressed to the Pharisees and Sadducees (Matt. 3: 7), who came to be baptized, but not to repent; they were ready for a new ceremonial, but not for a new life. The phrase is perhaps interpreted by John 8: 44, the serpent being a Jewish symbol of the devil; they are characterized as offspring of vipers in contrast with their ancestral pride as children of Abraham.—Abbott. Like all great leaders, John could read the characters of those he addressed. The smooth, varnished hypocrisy of the Pharisee or Sadducee could not deceive him. His sentences strike, swift and glittering, like lightning flashes amidst the roll of judgment day thunders.—Geikie.

PRACTICAL.

Ver. 1. God raises up peculiar men for his special work.

True teachers are a voice, calling attention, not to themselves, but to their message.

Ver. 2. Of all acts is not, for a man, repentance the most divine? The greatest of faults is to be conscious of none.—Carlyle.

True repentance flows from a sight of Christ—from a sense of his love.—Henry.

A new life is the best and the most sublime penitence.—Martin Luther.

Ver. 4. It is the duty of every one to prepare the way of the Lord, both in his own heart and in the community.

Vers. 5, 7. Bold, earnest preachers, condemning sin, awakening the conscience, fearless in declaring the truth, will draw many to hear them, even into a wilderness.

If a man can't go truth-hunting except out of curiosity, God bless him; for there's many a curious saint. We should always be children, if we weren't curious children. The young Saul hunted for asses, and found a kingdom.—Christian Union.

Ver. 8. True repentance is proved by the fruits of the Spirit, brought forth in the daily life.

Ver. 9. Religious ceremonies, a good home, outward advantages, surface morality, will save no one.

Men's hearts are like stone,—hard, cold, and dead; and yet God is able to make them his children.

If those who can and ought to do Christ's work will not do it, God will raise up instruments and means from unexpected places.

Ver. 11. We need a baptism of fire, God's power and love that will consume our sins, make our hearts warm and burning with love, and with that peculiar power which comes only when we are filled with the Holy Spirit.

Ver. 12. All persons are either wheat or chaff. We can decide which we will be by the help of Christ.

There is no possible way to escape the unquenchable fire but to cease to be chaff, and no way to enjoy heaven but by becoming God's good wheat.

MARRIED.

At Worcester, Mass., June 23rd, by Rev. Dr. David Merriman, assisted by Clarke L. Seelye, D. D. President of Smith College, Professor William Jewett Tucker, of Andover, and Charlotte Barrell Cheever, daughter of Rev. Henry T. Cheever, Worcester.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY EMINENT TESTIMONY.

PRES. A. A. SMITH, Northwestern College.—There can be no doubt that when secrecy is adopted as a rule of action, it has a demoralizing tendency.

MATILDA J. GAGE, a leader in the Woman Suffrage movement.—Masonry excludes women, not for any great secrets it may have, but because of shame for its indecent ceremonies.

REV. T. D. POST, D. D., of St. Louis, in an address before the Pilgrim Memorial Convention, Chicago, 1870, spoke of the lodge as setting up the hollow forms and titles of king-craft and priest-craft, that those hated foes of humanity might creep back into their shells.

REV. JOHN G. STEARNS, well-known author.—Masonry will by no means die of itself; nor will it separate itself from the church of God. No! it will cling to it, like the deadly scorpion to the victim on which it fastens. The church must therefore separate from that.

PROF. ROBISON.—"But not only are secret societies dangerous, but all societies whose effect is mysterious. The whole history of man is proof of this position; in no age or country has there ever appeared a mysterious association which did not in time become a public nuisance." Proofs of a Conspiracy.

BISHOP STEVENS, (Protestant Episcopal) in an address before Pennsylvania diocese, 1874, said he "had refused to receive at the holy communion young men who belonged to secret societies existing within the church, as the machinery of these organizations was used to advance the interests of ritualism and Romanism."

REV. DR. KRAUTH, President of Lutheran General Council.—"They strike at the root of the three divine institutions. They bring disturbance into the family, the church and the state, claiming for themselves what God has conferred on these alone. If the church cannot break down, by the truth, the oath-bound secret societies, they will break her down everywhere."

MRS. C. B. MILLER, Syracuse, N. Y., daughter of Victory Birdseye, Esq..—"My father died in 1853. Had he lived to see the rebellion of 1861, I have no doubt that he would have said that Freemasonry in common with slavery should bear the responsibility of that terrible war; for by undermining Southern loyalty it brought about a state of things without which the rebellion would have been impossible."

PRES. H. A. THOMPSON, Otterbein University.—"What a farce to think of Christ organizing an oath-bound association, admitting members by a solemn pledge, in a secluded room, in some lonely place, with sentinels outside and inside to protect from the vulgar gaze, in order to help men to a purer life; to induce them to reform and forget their past misdeeds and begin anew. If this is the best method of saving men, why did he not adopt it instead of, or make it a part of the Christian church which he himself instituted."

DR. ADAM CLARKE.—"Have no fellowship" means have no religious connection with heathens or their worship. The "unfruitful works of darkness" probably alludes to the mysteries among the heathens and the differing illustrations (symbols) and rites through which the initiated went in the caves and dark recesses where these mysteries were celebrated; all of which he (the apostle) denominates "works of darkness," because they were destitute of true wisdom; and "unfruitful works" because they were of no use to mankind; the initiated being obliged on pain of death to keep secret what they had seen and heard and done.—Commentary, Eph. 5th chap.

How then could they keep up the profession of Christianity or pretend to be under its influence while they had communion with darkness, concord with Belial, and partook with infidels?—Com. 2 Cor. 6.

HON. SOLOMON SOUTHWICK, New York.—"Freemasonry must and will be banished from the earth, which has drunk so deeply of the blood of her martyrs."

HON. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, at a Yale alumni address, 1873, reported by the Hartford Courant: "He did good work to-day in speaking against the evil effects of secret societies."

HON. TIMOTHY FULLER.—"In a free country no secret societies can be required for the public good. Purposes which require combination and secrecy are just objects of suspicion."

VICTORY BIRDSEYE, Esq.,—Depend upon it, there is a screw loose somewhere! Organizations for purposes undeniably good, don't burrow under ground. They are willing to stand upright upon their merits before an intelligent community.

DISRAELI, British Premier.—"Secret societies are hurrying the civil governments of the world to the brink of a precipice over which law and order will ultimately fall and perish together."

GEORGE WASHINGTON.—"Hon. John C. Spencer, in an address before court denied that George Washington was ever a Royal Arch Mason, and he said he had not attended a lodge for twenty years previous to his death, and that he virtually renounced the institution in his Farewell Address."

GOVERNOR SLADE, of Vermont, writes his conviction of Freemasonry, not merely of its uselessness, "but of its pernicious tendency—of its incompatibility with the genius and spirit of our free institutions, and of the duty of all Masons not excepted, to unite in exterminating it from the country."

HON. WM. M. EVARTS, Yale alumni dinner, 1869.—"Separate inclosures are found necessary, which they call, not separate pens, but 'secret societies.' Until Yale College outlives that folly, it will deprive its graduates of a good part of the education that you and I had the happiness to get there."

PATRICK HENRY, in Virginia debates.—"Give us at least a plausible apology why Congress should keep its proceedings secret. . . . They may carry on the most wicked and pernicious of schemes under the dark veil of secrecy. The liberties of the people never were and never will be secure when transactions of their rulers may be concealed from them."

HON. JOHN C. SPENCER, Sec'y of State, of War, and of the Treasury.—"In one word, I consider Freemasonry in direct hostility to the Government in all cases where it cannot control it—as demoralizing in its very nature, making bad men and citizens of all who adhere to its obligations—creating injurious distinctions in society—giving privileges and advantages to one set of men over others equally meritorious—exercising a most potent influence upon our elections, by secret, and, I fear, corrupt means, and altogether more dangerous to our country and its government than any standing army, however numerous it possibly could be."

JUDGE PLINY MERRICK, Worcester, Mass.—"It is true that a Royal Arch companion (to which degree I have been admitted and the highest office of which I have sustained) does swear that he will espouse the cause of a companion when engaged in any difficulty so far as to extricate him from the same whether right or wrong; and that he will keep his secrets inviolable when communicated to him as such, murder and treason not excepted. I know these most odious clauses are part of the obligation of that degree, for I believe that I received that obligation and know that I have so heard it and as high priest of a chapter have so myself administered it to others."

HENRY DANA WARD.—"The Masonic fables are told to cover the meanness of Freemasonry's origin; for she, too, sprung from a confederacy of lawless plunderers; and it mortifies the pride of the high priests, it tops the vanity of the Grand Masters, and makes the puissant sovereigns of Freemasonry to tremble for the security of their thrones, to be told that their boasted order sprung from the mire of the Rosicrucians, and spread over the face of the earth upon the licentious cupidity of its speculative fathers,—that it originated in the 18th century among men capable of the most atrocious falsehoods, and base enough to sell their reputation for money, and to barter a good conscience for the delusion of a lodge room."

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 7, 1887.

TEARS are more at home in our globe and our race than smiles. The earth is reserved to dissolution by fire; the men that are upon it, by death (2 Peter 3: 7; and Heb. 9: 27). It is twice recorded that Jesus wept. It is never said that he smiled.

"THE POOR shall never cease out of the land" (Deut. 15: 11), was said of a civil polity, the most democratic the earth has ever seen. Once in seven years there was an entire release of debts, a bankrupt law in the Constitution which could not be repealed. And though the chief ruler, when popular, had his son succeed him, God set aside the hereditary principle when David was anointed; and the people often disregarded it and "made" their kings by acclamation. Atheistic Socialism makes the strong man "the sword and the law;" while God is the friend of the unfortunate, and the patron of the poor. The early New England fathers took control of all who were paupers through ignorance, indolence, or incapacity, and enforced the precept that says, "If any man will not work neither let him eat." And as the country fills up, our cities, towns and counties must return to that primitive custom to keep cities and towns from raising paupers and criminals till society breaks down under the load. The only effectual preventive is supreme love to God and equal love to man. That will do it.

THE W. C. T. U. AND THE GOOD TEMPLARS.

The Union Signal, awhile since, with the understood approbation of Miss Willard, published an admirable letter from Miss Flagg, urging the W. C. T. U. to create another department or bureau of labor, and to put it in charge of some suitable person, to free Christianity and philanthropy from the secret methods of bandits, viz.: signs, words, grips, oaths and imprecations. Other ladies, it seems, have corresponded with Miss Willard on the subject, and we shall give next week a letter of Miss Willard, written with her accustomed ability, which she suggests should be published in "those papers which have criticised her course" with the Good Templars, Knights of Labor, etc., who profess to seek worthy ends by their labor in secret lodges.

Our readers will rejoice as one man if, by a free interchange of thought and argument, the increasing hosts of temperance can be brought together on one broad prohibition platform under the open heavens. The hour that sees this "consummation devoutly to be wished" accomplished, will witness a triumph of American principles mightier even than when Know Nothings, Abolitionists and Gradualists became united on the Republican platform. The slave power was doomed from that hour, and its doom followed.

TIMES OF JUDGMENT.

"And there were lice in all their borders." The witty and profligate Dean Swift took the above terrible plague of Egypt, the first which the magicians could not produce, as his text to preach before the merchant tailors. This was poking fun with the wrath of God. The terrible drouths in various places this year, by which cattle have died in herds as by murrain in Egypt, are, as drouth usually is, attended by insect pests. A new contemptible worm stripped the currant bushes; hens die on their nests by swarms of almost invisible lice. And the earth is not yet done shuddering at earthquakes and cyclones. The judgments of God are in the earth but the people do not "learn righteousness." During the cholera pestilence we were in Montreal when forty dead were taken up in the streets in a single morning. The plague was in the air, earth and water. Martins fell dead from their high nests, frogs died in swamps, and gardens flowers died by blight or were devoured by swarms of rose bugs, and the army worm stripped forests. It is amazing how differently the religious press treats these wrath-tokens from the method of the Bible. Five prominent books of the Bible treat these natural scourges as judgments of God to turn nations who had left or corrupted his worship back to him. But the religious press of to-day is more stupid than enlightened pagans. Homer, the Shakespeare of the Greeks, reflects the average sentiment of the masses at that day when in the Odyssey he regards the afflictions of Ulysses and his men as punishment of their impiety. Instead of attributing all to "the laws of nature" he sees divine vengeance in, under and behind those laws.

"Now from her summits tremble Ida's woods,
And from their sources boll her hundred fountains."

And when they had trespassed by slaying the oxen of the sun:

"Then heaven gave signs of wrath; along the ground
Crept the raw hides and with a bellowing sound
The dead limbs roared."

Better this than to attribute the judgments of God to "law" with no lawyer or guide. For "when Jupiter forsook the skies virtue forsook the Roman senate and people." Besides, these phenomena are ever shifting. As when God struck the false worship of Egypt frogs, lice, locusts, darkness, storms, and death took their turns in setting up the worship of the true God against Pharaoh and his magicians who mimicked God as Masons enforce church discipline.

THE MASONS ASTIR.

We have given, and shall give, our readers due notice of the movements of the hosts of darkness, as they come up from their dens to the surface of society. The New York Grand Lodge has seized the property and quashed Prudence Lodge for receiving infamous characters, jail-birds, plug-uglies, brothel-keepers, gamblers and monte-men. The motive they assign is not justice, truth, and the general welfare, but that these characters disgrace the lodge. Five years ago the Grand Lodge of Missouri declared saloon-keeping "a Masonic offence;" and now Grand Master Geo. R. Hunt of that State issues "an edict," which, Mackey says, must be "obeyed without examination," warning every saloon-keeper in Missouri, who belongs to the lodge, to quit his business or quit the order, or else he, Grand Master Hunt, will expel him if his local lodge does not.

This is a matter of rejoicing to good men, as when Philiistines, Moabites, Ammonites, etc., began to slay each other before the hosts of Israel. But let no one be deceived; all those men were heathen idolaters. Though in slaying each other they slew the enemies of Israel, none of them were Israelites, worshipping God in the only way possible, through a Messiah or Mediator. In our late long national agony, the Pope, like Masonry, was on both sides. He had "edicts" against slavery, and was yet the first power to recognize the slavery rebellion as a respectable "belligerent," or quasi nation.

The lodge will not promote temperance. It says nothing against drinking liquor, or making or importing it. But the saloons are unpopular now, and saloon-keepers disgrace the lodge by walking in processions arm-in-arm with those "frogs" of the Apocalypse, preachers who are at ease in both church and lodge, as frogs are in air and water. Some twelve or fifteen years ago the Grand Orient, which sent Stephen Morin to Charleston, S. C., to set up "a Supreme Council of Sovereign Grand Inspectors General," in 1801—that same Grand Orient erased from its articles the name of God and the doctrine of the immortality of man. At once there was a virtuous out-cry; and old Blue lodges, their chapters and consistories, which had acquiesced in cutting Christ's name from the Bible, since it was done by the York Rite, a thousand years ago,—all as one, cried out that the Grand Orient and its adherents must be cast out of Masonry as atheists. Yet, to-day, the Grand Orient and French Masons are in as good standing as ever.

Now almost three-quarters of a century ago, godly and brave men began to preach and practice total abstinence. In the light of this holy teaching, grog-selling has become a disgraceful occupation; and now those who worship devils verify the old familiar adage and begin to put on the garb of temperance. They

"Steal the liver of the Court of Heaven
To serve the devil in."

This same game has been played, wherever a popular evil has been successfully assailed. The secret of this lodge anti-saloonism is seen in the official report of the Grand Lodge of Pennsylvania, 1886, last year, which shows, "Initiated, 1,471; suspended, 746; resigned, 366; died, 374," which, taking no account of those transferred from other lodges, who were already Masons, shows an actual loss in Pennsylvania Masonic lodges. Doubtless other States make a worse showing for the lodge. Hence we see by the Chicago dailies that Grand Masters and Past Grand Masters representing twenty-three States, Canada and Manitoba, have just held a secret congress, in Chicago, sitting several days, to discuss the situation of Masonry in the United States and the British possessions. They are in trouble.

We read in the Revelation that unclean creatures, "like frogs" proceeding from the mouth of the dragon, beast and false prophet, "are the spirits of devils which go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty." (Rev. 16: 14.) Whatever these weird and terrible symbols mean, in their application to literal facts, we know that if they mean human characters, they must mean amphibious characters, alike at ease in different elements, pure and impure, as frogs live in air and mud; and which croak loudly in the air till, approached for examination to see what their croaking amounts to, they plunge and hide themselves in the mire of the lodges. They are unclean, deceptive agitators, deceiving nations and their rulers to bring on the battle-day of God.

THE N. C. A. BOARD at a meeting on Friday afternoon authorized the opening of a Foreign Fund to secure a wide distribution of our literature in foreign lands; instructed the treasurer to secure a distribution of the same at the approaching Lake Bluff Convocation; requested Pres. C. A. Blanchard to visit Washington in pursuance of the resolution of the Annual meeting; and gave instructions to the General Agent respecting the engagement of another lecturer in the South, and the organization of another Lecturers' Institute.

THE DISCOURSE to which we have cheerfully given an ample space in this number is one to be read and read again. It gives in a calm, clear argument some of the fundamental principles which have given life to our reform—and to every other. A considerable portion of it was published in the Inter Ocean more than a week since, and we hope to see it reprinted in other papers and in other forms, until its readers number millions. Mr. Harrah is the author of other documents which have been esteemed very highly, and widely scattered in tract form. Mr. Hall, business manager of the Woman's Temperance Publication Society, is issuing two tracts by him, one on "Children in the Church," another on "Jesus the Emancipator of Woman." The first named was a paper first presented to the Illinois Congregational General Association, and voted to be printed.

ANOTHER FUND.—Dr. J. E. Roy names the new fund to aid in the distribution of literature in foreign countries THE FOREIGN FUND. One reading of the letter from Bombay, India, will show the need of such a fund and give an enthusiasm in sustaining it. The Association has in years past sent a few packages to Rev. William Hazenber of Cape Town, South Africa, and to Rev. C. S. Ward, of Secunderabad, India. It is at the urgent request of Missionary Ward, and the brother associated with him in the publication of the India Methodist Watchman, that the N. C. A. at last takes up this work in earnest, and invites every Christian in America, who wishes to aid in this holy work of saving our missions from heathenism, to aid us in sending abroad among the millions of English-speaking foreigners, the printed testimony for Christ. Contributions have already been sent in for this purpose; let the goodness of the object swell the sum to thousands.

—Elder Rufus Smith, our irrepressible Missouri brother, was among the visitors at the Reform Presbyterian Synod at Newburg, N. Y., and addressed the body one evening.

—Among the Cynosure acquaintances who are expected to be at Lake Bluff Convocation are Revs. M. A. Gault and R. C. Wylie, district secretaries of the National Reform Association, Rev. C. C. Harrah and Mrs. J. P. Stoddard. Secretary Stoddard, Pres. C. A. Blanchard, and some others from this office may also be present a portion of the time.

—Father Rufus Stratton, a venerable and beloved brother, whose cheerful face has been welcomed in several newspaper offices of Chicago for years, died last Friday night, after a prolonged, but not painful illness. He has for years gathered up exchange papers and circulated them in the county hospitals, and other places where they would be read and valued. He was a corporate member of the N. C. A., and a most thorough Christian reformer. The funeral services were at the house of his son, on Park Avenue, Sabbath afternoon, Secretary Stoddard giving a brief address.

—The N. C. A. publisher sent some 1,100 copies of the Cynosure to Omaha to be distributed in the Presbyterian General Assembly and the Lutheran General Council. This work was entrusted to Mr. J. F. Helin, a faithful and fearless reformer of that city, who undertook the work with a willing spirit, engaging the assistance of two or three others. After obtaining permission of one committee to distribute the papers in the hall, he was forbidden by the chairman of another to do so, but finally prevailed over the objection. Many other papers were distributed, and the janitor was not a little restive under the burden of clearing them from the hall. But he assured Mr. Helin that he found hardly a dozen copies of the Cynosure left behind.

—There are a score or more of national conventions where a like good work may be done as in Omaha, and as it costs the Cynosure a considerable sum to supply extra papers, there are many friends who would be glad to share in so good a work. Paper and printing for extra editions costs from $12 to $15 per thousand copies, a sum which many of our readers can well afford for such a work, and no doubt many will be glad to send, and thus put into the hand of thousands, who will read it, a copy of our national organ.

—Rev. M. L. Holt, for several years president and financial secretary of Gates College, Neligh, Nebraska, has resigned. The trustees at their late annual meeting accepted the resignation with much regret, and a testimonial to the usefulness of Mr. Holt. He has for some time desired to be more with his family, his labor for the college having called him away for a large part of the year. His efforts for the new college have been highly successful, and a strong body of patrons has been secured to aid it in its early struggles.

—Louis H. Blair of Richmond, Va., writes an article to the Independent on the status of the Negro at the South. Speaking of the eagerness of the colored man to vote he makes a comparison which the lodges will scout as fanatical, but reasonable men will accept as pertinent and just. He says: "That the Negro dearly loves to vote, as dearly as Tommy Moore is said to have loved a lord, requires no proof; he loves to vote as dearly as the white Knight Templar delights to array himself in his harlequin garb; and he no more neglects to turn out at an election than does the same Knight Templar fail to parade, decked in plumes, tinsel and mock swords, to be admired by the rabble and small boys; and when he fails to attend the polls and vote we may be sure there is some deep cause actuating him."

STATE ASSOCIATIONS.

One great need of our reform is vigorous young men who are thoroughly enlisted in the cause to work in the States under the direction of State organizations. The N. C. A. offers twenty-five dollars per month in new subscriptions to the Cynosure, and Ezra A. Cook offers donations in books which can be utilized and made available in support of the agent and the furtherance of the cause, and there are many who are willing to contribute monthly or quarterly in support of the cause. Iowa has tried this plan with Bro. Hawley for its agent, and made it a success. Illinois has kept agents in the field a great part of the time with gratifying results. I. R. B. Arnold is doing solid work which the opposition cannot gainsay, and which receives, as it deserves, the universal commendation of friends. Ohio, with W. B. Stoddard as agent, has secured its $25 per month from new Cynosure subscribers, and a liberal donation in books from E. A. Cook, and has effected the canvass of a considerable portion of the State. The list of Cynosure readers in Ohio has been increased to five hundred, and a healthy aggressive sentiment awakened, which assures greater and more decisive results.

Friends in every State should be encouraged by these examples and put their organizations in working order for a fall and winter campaign. Bro. M. N. Butler, whose ability and labors are well known, is ready to enter the field, and several men younger and less experienced are willing to make a trial of their fitness for this kind of service.

There are several things that ought to be done:

1. Each State organization ought to move for a meeting as early as practicable so as to start in with the beginning of the lecture season.

2. Some person (the best that can be had) ought to be secured by correspondence or otherwise to attend these meetings, with a view of entering the work as a colporteur or lecturer, as he may be able.

3. Friends should send in money or pledges to their State treasurers so that their employees may have something in hand to start with.

4. The executive officers of each State association should write me here, and we should so arrange a programme of meetings that they can be reached in their order with the least possible expenditure of time and money. If State officers will attend promptly to the above suggestions, and friends generally will second and vigorously co-operate, we may witness rapid advances and close the most successful year of our work June 1st, 1888.

REFORM NEWS.

COLORED CHURCHES AND LODGES IN WASHINGTON.

The work of Brethren Hinman and Cole.—The pastors becoming converted.—A notable presentation.—The lodge comes to the altar and captures a meeting.—J. P. Newman as a Hiramite.

WASHINGTON, June 27, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since Bro. Cole and I came from Baltimore we have been busy in arranging for and holding meetings in the colored churches of this city. A native African can get a hearing and say things which would be inadmissible from one of another race.

The first meeting was in the 19th Street Baptist church. This is the largest Baptist church in the city. Its able pastor, Rev. W. H. Brooks, has been here six years, and eminently successful. He came here from New Orleans, where he commenced preaching. He said that when in that city he was persuaded to join the Odd-fellows for the sake of increased influence and for help in a rainy day. He soon found that the system was under the control of selfish, worldly men, and that its influence was decidedly demoralizing. He withdrew, and has never joined any other lodge, though the orders are all well represented in his church. Bro. Cole lectured there on Thursday, the 23d, to a very large congregation, on the Relation of Secret Societies to African Civilization and the Destiny of the Negro.

On Sabbath, the 26th, he preached at 11 A. M. in the Israel C. M. E. church (near the Capitol), one of the large fine churches of the city. The pastor, a young man of fine abilities, comes here from Texas, where he, too, was an Odd-fellow, and prominent in the order. Since he came here he has found that the practical working of the orders is injurious to Christianity and public morals. He has preached against the system, and determined to send back his regalia and dissolve all connection with the order.

Bro. Cole preached for an hour on Hindrances to Christian Progress. He said that where polygamy prevails there can be no true conjugal affection, for the love is divided. So a heart that is divided between Christ and the lodge can have no real love to him; and that to profess to be married to Christ, and then go into the temple of Masonry and enter into another covenant with the ungodly, was spiritual adultery. He said also that not only did such a covenant make void the covenant with Christ, but not less truly the covenant of each husband with his wife. When he swore to conceal his lodge secrets from her they twin were no more one flesh. He described the heathenism of drinking wine from a human skull, swearing under death penalty, and pretending to kill a man and then raise him from the dead. It was throughout so blended with Gospel truth that they could not resist it.

Sunday evening he preached in the Asbury M. E. church to a large congregation. He spoke at much length on the folly of sending men to convert the heathen who practice substantially the same heathenish rites as the heathen to whom they go. He told of a young man in Africa whom he tried to persuade to become a Christian, but he would not agree to give up his Purroh and Kofong, because he said "that is African Freemasonry, and the white missionaries are Freemasons." If the system was right and good for the white man, he argued that it could not be wrong for the African. Heathenism is no better, and far less excusable in America than in Africa.

The pastor, an excellent man, who has never joined any secret society, said that in concluding there would be "a presentation." Accordingly there came forward to the altar the members of the "Asbury Fountain," a new secret society that was in need of being advertised. They were all clad in their regalia, and evidently intended to make a sensation. The "sister" who was mistress of ceremonies had $145 in nice new bills, which she handed over with a flourish to a sister in the lodge and proceeded to make an elaborate speech "for the good of the order." She said that any person of good, moral character, who was not a drunkard, could be admitted, and by paying small sums regularly could be entitled to the same benefit the sister had received. She said "the foundation of the order was faith, hope and charity, and that it was next to the church and would help them be good Christians." She was prepared to give charters, and that they could organize other "Fountains" and name them what they chose. She concluded with an earnest exhortation to join the society.

On inquiry I found that the pastor knew nothing about it, and that it was only one of the great multitude of orders that, like the frogs of Egypt, have come up into the kneading-troughs of the people.

Nor is this pleading for Baal confined to the colored churches. On a recent occasion Rev. Dr. J. P. Newman, of the Metropolitan M. E. church, had a Masonic funeral in his church. He took occasion to parade his connection with the order and to highly commend it. The man, who had not been known as a practical Christian, was declared to have been taken from his "apprenticeship below to his home above;" and the master and members of the lodge went through their heathenish ceremonies both in the church and at the grave.

Other work is being planned, and there is reason to think that an effective protest against the lodge system will be made in nearly all the colored churches of the city, and that it will be heeded at least to some extent; for already most of the colored pastors are with us. Yours in Christ,

H. H. HINMAN.

REFORM IN THE EAST.

WAUKESHA, Wis., June 25, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I recently spent a few weeks in New York attending our annual meeting of Synod at Newburg, and visiting the city, preaching in three of the churches on Sabbath. I was strongly impressed with the idea that the East is far behind the West in the agitation of reform questions. The moral reform temperature was so cold that it had a perceptible influence in toning down the sentiment of Synod. While the wealth of our church is ten times larger in the East, yet their contributions fall far below those of our congregations in the West for National and other reforms.

I preached in one of our churches in Newburg in which, perhaps, $4,000 would not cover the contributions for extravagant silks and millinery, while their annual contribution for National Reform, the distinctive work of their denomination, only amounted to $9.00; and there are members in this congregation whose monthly income is $1200. I never realized so much the truth of our Lord's words, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven."

When a Covenanter minister invited me to preach for his people in New York, he requested me not to preach on National Reform, for it would not be agreeable to his people,—and this in spite of the fact that New York city has been robbed during its history, as Howard Crosby says, of one hundred million dollars by corrupt politicians, and the fact that it is more cursed by liquor, secret lodgism, and Sabbath desecration than any other city in the Union. The street cars and elevated railroads groan and creak on Sabbath under the crowds of pleasure seekers, thronging the parks where base ball clubs hold high carnival. I feel that it is too late to attempt reform work in our large cities. The tide of worldliness, sensuality and intemperance is so overwhelming that nothing short of an earthquake, moral or physical, can arrest the current.

Our Synod spent one evening and most of a day session discussing the anti-secret issue. Most of the members took radical ground, while some were disposed to argue that the lower secret orders, such as the G. A. R., the Good Templars, and Knights of Labor, were not to be condemned. I was surprised to hear a G. A. R. notice read from the pulpit of one of our churches in Newburg, on Sabbath. One of our members had united with the G. A. R., and claimed before session that our Synod had not condemned that order. Some of our members in the East have united with labor leagues.

It is a noticeable fact that the working National Reform element in our Synod are all in deep sympathy with the National Christian Association, and nearly all of them are Cynosure readers. It is also a note-worthy fact that those ministers who have left our church, and have gone into the larger and more popular bodies, have, without exception, been those who have taken the least interest in National Reform. Even our Bro. David Gregg, who was chairman of the National Reform committee last year, never enthused in that cause. He was ambitious for popularity, and to achieve literary note, yet by no means identified himself with the laborious, self-sacrificing National Reformers. I made an effort to get him to subscribe for the Cynosure at our Rochester Synod, but he depreciated that paper. He had a Covenanter pulpit, as broad, and free, and high as any in the land, but he left it for the Park Street pulpit, Boston, where he is handicapped and cramped by a congregation full of secret society members, and members involved in Sabbath-breaking institutions and other popular evils. It is commonly reported in the East that his predecessor, Dr. J. L. Withrow, now pastor of the largest Presbyterian church in Chicago, resigned Park Street pulpit,

THE HOME.

THE WAY OF THE RAIN.

I heard an old farmer talk, one day
Telling his listeners how
In the wide, new country, far away,
The rainfall follows the plow.

As fast as they break it up, you see,
And turn the heart to the sun,
As they open the furrows deep and free,
And the tillage is begun,

The earth grows mellow; and more and more
It holds and sends to the sky
A moisture it never had before,
When its face was hard and dry.

And so, wherever the plowshares run,
The clouds run overhead;
And the soil that works and lets in the sun,
With water is always fed.

I wonder if that old farmer knew
The half of his simple word,
Or guessed the message that, heavenly-true,
Within it was hidden and heard?

It fell on my ear by chance that day,
But the gladness lingers now,
To think it is always God's dear way,
That the rainfall follows the plow.

THE PLEASANT HISTORY OF SQUIRE JACK AND THE PARSON.BEING A SHORT STORY IN TWO PARTS, WITH A CON-CLUSION AND MORAL.

CHAPTER I.

How Squire Jack's Chickens scratched up the Parson's Peas.

Not that Squire Jack was engaged in the poultry business, any more than the other members of the Hickorytown church. His neighbors, like all good people in country villages, kept chickens, turkeys and geese, and so did he, of course. Nor was Squire Jack peculiar in keeping a flock of moral fowls; for all his neighbors, like all other mortals, did the same. What Squire Jack was specially noted for was, that in his flock of moral fowls, which all his lifelong had gained their livelihood by scratching among his neighbors' faults and failings, there was one bird, a noble, high-stepping, long-spurred cock, which, singular to relate, while he let other people's gardens alone, could scratch up the Parson's early peas more perseveringly and more effectually than any other cock in the country.

The Hickorytown church was, as the English would say, "poor living;" whether because the people were poor, or because they were close-fisted, matters not here to relate.

But so it was, that pastors were often changed. And when a new parson had settled in the place, to see Squire Jack's famous long-tailed game cock walk over into the Parson's yard and tear up his early peas, and scratch up his garden and make it look like the abomination of desolation, and cry cock-a-doodle-do over it all, was a sight to make all Hickorytown shake its sides with laughter. Squire Jack's bird was a famous fowl indeed; but he came home to roost one night in plight so sad, and so be-draggled and so belittled in his own eyes and estimation withal, that he was never thereafter, to his dying day, known to mount a fence and crow. How and by what means this sad misadventure befell the poor cock we shall now proceed to relate; or, in other words, we shall tell, firstly, how Squire Jack's chickens tore up the Parson's peas; and, secondly, how Squire Jack's chickens came home to roost.

Squire Jack had a hobby, as who has not? and he rode it hard, as who had a better right? But alas! one day his horse lay down and—died. Squire Jack's hobby horse, or, as, in another figure, we have termed it, his game cock, was this to-wit: Squire Jack read his Bible, and there were one or two chapters which had a peculiar fascination for him. These were the tenth of St. Matthew and the tenth of St. Luke. Of reading and expounding these, especially in the presence of a new parson, he never wearied, as indeed he was never defeated in his forcible exposition of them. A self-made theologian was Squire Jack, and great indeed was he in the department of Exegesis; especially in so far as it concerned our Lord's instructions to the apostles as to the manner in which they should go forth into the world, and the means by which they should be supported. He was "dead set agin preachers hevin' a selery. Let 'em work as Paul did, an' earn their own livin'."

Some ten years back the Hickorytown church had been about to take steps to buy a parsonage, but Squire Jack threw the whole meeting into helpless confusion by a powerful speech, in which he challenged any man in Hickorytown to give the Scriptural authority, chapter and verse, "fer preachers hevin' personages. He'd like to know whether Peter ever hed a personage?" The "personage" was never got.

"No, my friends"—thus would he, time and gain, begin his harangue in the village store of winter nights, and in none the lower tone because the Parson was by—"No, my friends, I ain't agin the preachers. Preachers is all good enough in their place. What I am agin is this thing of preachers gettin' personages, an' wearin' shiny black coats, an' hevin' white hands like a woman, an' gettin' from four to six hundred dollars a year. I'd like jest once in my life to see the Scripeter authority fer that. Did Paul hev a personage? Did Peter hev a shiny black coat? Did Thomas or Philip or any of the rest of 'em ever hev any selery? No, sir! they hed nothin', an' the Lord told 'em they shouldn't take nothin'; not two coats, nor a purse, nor money, nothin' at all, but maybe a staff. That's the way they was to go out, with their lives in their hands, an' trust in the Lord to keep 'em. An' now, what I want to know, an' what I've been askin' every preacher we've hed here in Hickorytown fer the last twenty year—an' we've hed right smart of 'em in that time—is this: is preachers now-a-days better'n the apostles was?"

It was a telling speech. It was a knock-down argument. It scratched up the Parson's peas most effectually, and crowed cock-a-doodle-do over the whole forlorn garden. Many was the tilt Squire Jack had run with the preachers, and always with the same result—the Parson was invariably unhorsed and ingloriously defeated and put to shame in the eyes of all Hickorytown. In vain did the preachers argue that these instructions to the apostles could not reasonably be applied to their successors, nor were necessarily intended to be so applied, on the ground that times and circumstances had so greatly changed since the apostolic period, that it would plainly be impossible to adhere to the strict letter of the text. Squire Jack was proof against the historical argument, and would none of their refined theological lore; he was a plain man, and could understand plain words, and there it was in the Bible, in black and white, and as plain as the nose on your face, and you couldn't and shouldn't get out of it, twist how you might. "Was preachers now-a-days better'n the apostles was?"—that's what he'd like to know! Thus it chanced that, for full twenty years past, Squire Jack's famous game cock had been scratching up a long succession of Parsons' peas, with no man to clip his comb or cut his spurs for him.

CHAPTER II.

How Squire Jack's Chickens came Home to Roost.

It happened about this time that there moved into Hickorytown a new pastor of Hickorytown church—the Rev. Solomon Sly, a quiet, unobtrusive kind of man, with nothing remarkable about him but his poverty and a queer kind of merry twinkle in the corner of each eye. With wife and three children he moved into—not the parsonage, for Squire Jack had set his foot on that—but into the last house in the village street, which was to be had at a low rent, partly because it was in a dreary and unhealthy locality, a commons being on one side of it, and a duck pond on the other; and partly because it was commonly reported to be a favorite resort of "spooks." Here the Rev. Solomon and family lived, or tried to live. They all came very near dying of fevers before all was over; and though they saw no ghosts, they got much ghostly advice and counsel during their afflictions, and from no one more than from Squire Jack himself. So that it was no wonder that after a year's residence the Rev. Solomon determined to seek another field; nor need any reasonable person be told with what gratitude he discovered that another field was awaiting him.

But before making his purpose of leaving known to the people, Squire Jack's chicken, the famous high-stepping, long-spurred game cock, came over one day, as he often had done before, to scratch up Rev. Solomon's peas. It was in the village store, the scene of many a victory for Squire Jack, that the Rev. Solomon was again assailed by the usual exegetical battery, winding up with the usual coup-de-grace—"now, what I'd like to know is, is preachers now-a-days better'n the apostles was?"

The Rev. Solomon said he did not think they were; acknowledged there was great force and much truth in what the Squire had said. It was—he confessed it with shame—a subject which he had never thought much about before coming to Hickorytown, and which he had never, certainly, seen in this strong light before meeting with his good friend Squire Jack. He promised the good company to examine the subject carefully and prayerfully, and let them know the result, if at all possible, in some way or other. Whereat they were all right well pleased.

A few days thereafter, all early in the morning, while Squire Jack was yet lingering over his pipe in the kitchen, there was a loud, sharp rap at the front door; on opening which the Squire beheld standing on the porch the Rev. Solomon Sly with his wife and three children. Before the Squire could say "Good morning," and without, indeed, waiting for any invitation to enter, the Rev. Solomon, reverently stretching forth his right hand, said, in a grave and impressive voice—"Peace be unto this house!"—and walked in, followed by his wife and children. Now, although the Squire could not help but notice something unusual in the manner of his reverend guest, a strange, self-confident air, as it were, amounting almost to boldness, yet still he regarded this visit of the reverend family as only a matter of usual occurrence, a pastoral visit, as it were, on a large scale. And such, indeed, it eventually turned out to be. Only, before all was over, the whole occurrence presented itself to the mind of the Squire rather in the light of a pastoral visitation than of a pastoral visit.

For the Rev. Solomon and family had evidently come to spend the day. The morning was spent in pleasant conversation by the old folks, while the children played and romped on the lawn. Dinner came, and a right royal dinner it was, to be sure; for the good Squire, however he might praise fasting as a pious practice befitting the successors of the apostles, never once thought of numbering himself among the herb-eating weaker brethren, but believed in good beef as profoundly as the best Englishman that ever carved a roast. After dinner, Rev. Solomon, excusing himself on the plea of pastoral work to be done in the parish, left wife and children to the care of Squire Jack and family, remarking as he put on his hat in the hall, that he would be back to tea at five o'clock. After tea, they stayed and stayed, and stayed, until it became seriously evident that the whole Parson's family had come to spend not only the day, but also the night! Such, indeed, was the solemn and unavoidable truth. They did spend the night, and a right comfortable night it was, to be sure, under the roof of Squire Jack's commodious mansion.

Prayers and breakfast over the next morning, Rev. Solomon asked to be shown to some quiet room, some "prophetic upper chamber," where he might devote the morning hours to meditation, prayer and study. "To be sure," said he, "I have no books or library with me; nor, indeed, do I need any. None of the apostles had a library, nothing, in fact, but a Bible, if even so much as that; and after due consideration I have arrived at your conclusion, Squire Jack, that preachers now-a-days are not a whit better than the apostles were; and it is now my fixed and settled purpose to follow their example to the very last letter." With which words the Rev. Solomon ascended, with slow and solemn tread, to the upper chamber of the prophet.

Squire Jack was too thick-skinned intellectually to see the full drift of all this at once; and it was not until two, three, four, five days of pastoral visitation of this sort had elapsed that he began to suspect, as he remarked to Mrs. Jack, "that this here pastor of our'n ain't got his name of Sly fer nothin'!" and so, wondering what all this strange procedure might mean, and when and where it was all going to end, and after sundry spirited internal debates with himself, to say nothing of frequent scoldings when alone with his wife, he determined at last to seek an interview, and ask an explanation from the Rev. Solomon himself.

Which, accordingly, came off on the front porch, on the morning of the sixth day; when and where, after many ineffectual hints the worthy Squire managed, after much clearing of the throat, to ask in plain English how long the Rev. Solomon and family were going to tarry at his house? To which honest inquiry the Rev. Solomon replied, with a merry twinkle of the eye, which he could not for the soul of him repress, that he purposed to abide under the shelter of good Squire Jack's mansion until he took his journey hence—in short, so long as he remained pastor of the Hickorytown church. "What! hev ye giv up livin' in the parsonage?" said Squire Jack. Yes: the Rev. Solomon had given up the parsonage, and would never occupy it again, for he intended to adhere rigidly to the practice of the apostles, "none of whom, you know," said he "ever had any parsonage." At which, when Squire Jack expressed his wonder, and asked whether his salary was not sufficient to enable him to live without going around in this way, the Parson interrupted him with, "Salary, sir! I have given up my salary and shall never receive another cent from the Hickory-town church, as it is my solemn purpose to inform all the people in open meeting to-morrow (Sunday) morning. For none of the apostles ever had any salary, and ministers now-a-days are not one whit better than the apostles were. If they had no salary, then I will have none. I am about to sell off all my little household furniture, have already given away all the goats I have, except the one on my back, and mean, so long as I remain here in Hickorytown, to do precisely as the apostles did."

"Well," said the Squire, "to be sure, that was all right. But if he was goin' to tak to boardin' round, he would see Deacon Smith and neighbor Boggs, whether they wouldn't keep 'em a week or so." "Alas! good Squire," said Parson Sly, "I am positively forbidden to do anything of the sort, much as I desire it. For on this point my instructions are very positive and plain. I am not to go from house to house. 'Into whatsoever city or town ye enter, inquire who in it is worthy, and there abide till ye go hence.' That is Matthew. And Luke says: 'and in the same house remain, eating and drinking such things as they give * * * go not from house to house.' I should greatly, indeed, desire to relieve you of the burden of keeping me and mine by having others share the burden equally with yourself; but my instructions on this point are clear; their sense is plain; board around I cannot; here, under your ample and hospitable roof I must remain till I go hence."

What was to be said or done? Turn the Parson out of doors he could not and dare not, lest he shake the dust of his feet for a testimony against him. There was nothing for it; he was caught in his exegetical trap, and twist how he might, and grit his teeth as he would, he could not escape. He had found a practical, and quite uncomfortable application of his own doctrine which he had preached for twenty years past, that "Preachers now-a-days wasn't a bit better'n the apostles was." His chicken had come home to roost.

The next day the Rev. Solomon resigned, and shortly left Hickorytown for good and all. People often wondered, but never quite discovered, why Squire Jack never again preached in the village store from his favorite text, that "he'd like to know whether preachers now-a-days was better'n the apostles was?"

CONCLUSION AND MORAL.

Firstly:—Exegesis is an edged tool, sometimes very sharp, and often cutting two ways.

Secondly:—Never keep a flock of moral fowls to scratch up the Parson's peas, lest,

Thirdly:—They come home some night to roost.

STORY OF FRIESLAND.

More than a thousand years ago, the "Golden Hoop" held back the waters of the surging North Sea from the low-lying marshes of Friesland or Friezeland, as it is sometimes called. The "Golden Hoop" was the name that the Frisians had given to the long line of dikes that they had with such toil placed between themselves and the tides that were ever longing to steal, bit by bit, all the soil of the Frisian mainland.

A sturdy, independent race these Frisians of the olden time seem to have been. Their very name is said to have meant "free." They were bold sailors who did not fear to traverse the dangerous North Sea in their little vessels, and whose descendants even at the present day are counted among the best seamen of Europe.

But, in spite of their bold characters, the Frisians were idolaters. And this fact greatly troubled some people who had only a short time before this heard of Christianity themselves, and turned from the worship of false gods. Just across the sea from Friesland lay the island known to us now-a-days as England. The Anglo-Saxons on this island had heard and believed the new Gospel of Christ, and to them, as to one of old, had come the command, "Go home to thy friends and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee." For the Frisians lived on the same side of the sea from which the Anglo-Saxons had originally come, and they spoke a language so like the Anglo-Saxon that no interpreter was needed when two of these separate nations spoke together.

So it came to pass that one day there came to the island and marshes and "Golden Hoop" of Friesland, an English missionary named Winfred. The "gans," or different districts into which Friesland was divided, did not know what a blessing had come to them that day; but they, with many in the near land of Germany, soon heard the Gospel and turned, as the Anglo-Saxons had done, from darkness to light. Pippin the Short, who ruled over the neighboring Franks, believed that the Christians were right, and did all he could to help the work on. But after a time Winfred and the missionaries who worked with him became aware that Christianity had an enemy in the land. This enemy was not a person, it was a tree, an oak that had always been held sacred to the heathen god Thor, the god of lightning and thunder. Strange as it may seem to us, even the persons who had become Christians and renounced the worship of Thor were afraid of that oak tree; but then we must remember that these people had but just been converted, and perhaps we should have been afraid of Thor's oak, too, if we had been taught to honor it ever since we were children.

But Winfred resolved that he would teach the Christians and the heathen, too, that they need not fear Thor.

"If Thor is a god," said Winfred, "he will defend his own tree."

So one day Winfred assembled all the other missionaries, and together they went to the great oak tree.

Winfred took an axe, and raised it. Thwack! went the blade into the trunk of Thor's great, sacred oak.

The Frisians must have looked with awe up at the sky and down again at Winfred.

"Surely," they must have thought, "the great god Thor will blow from his red beard the lightning and strike this man; or perhaps the god will throw his hammer, the 'Crusher,' at this Englishman who dares insult the 'God of Thunder.'"

But no flash of lightning laid Winfred in the dust. Steadily the chopping went on, and the chips flew from the huge trunk, and the sound of the blows went up through the air, and yet the Frisians waited like the Israelites on top of Mount Carmel, and Thor made no sign, and "there was neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded."

"Crack!" went the mighty oak. It bent, it leaned over farther, farther yet, and then, as the last stroke of Winfred's axe echoed through the air, crash came great Thor's oak to the ground, and with it fell Thor's dominion over the people. For although we are not told that the half-heathen that saw Thor's prostrate oak, "fell on their faces," as the children of Israel did at the end of the trial on Mount Carmel, yet surely in the heart of every one of them there must have been a voice that said: "The Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God."

And so Winfred, who was called by the name of Boniface, or "doer of good," worked on among the heathen of Northern Europe, till he was an old man. Many Christian people heard of his labors, and leaving England came across the sea to help Winfred teach the heathen.

Still, since the country was poor and uncultivated, a great deal of the time Winfred was obliged to labor to support himself, in addition to his work of preaching. He could say like Paul, "laboring night and day, because we would not be chargeable to any of you, we preached unto you the Gospel of God."

At last, one day, the missionary, now seventy-five years old, had pitched his tent beside a river called the Borden, that separated East and West Friesland. He had promised to wait beside the river till a number of persons who had just been converted from heathenism should come to see him.

But while he waited, suddenly from the woods there rushed upon Winfred's camp, not the Christians he expected, but a horde of angry heathen, who were enemies of the old missionary and his workers. The heathen were armed with lances and shields, and Winfred's servants tried to make ready to fight.

But Winfred saw in the attacking band only those for whom he had left his English home to carry the Gospel across the sea, and he could not find it in his heart to command his followers to kill any of these unrepentant heathen.

"Children," said Winfred to those about him, "forbear to fight. The Scripture forbids us to render evil for evil. Hope in God, and he will save your souls."

And then, as the savage heathen rushed upon him, Winfred held up the Gospels above his head with his expiring strength, and fell dead upon the soil of Friesland, the country for the salvation of whose inhabitants he had labored and prayed for so long. But, although those among whom he had gone preaching the Gospel of God saw his face no more, yet the old missionary's influence lived after him, and one writer has said of him: "No man before Charlemagne had a greater influence upon the destinies of Germany than Boniface."—N. Y. Observer.

TEMPERANCE.

THE TRUTH NOT IN THEM.

Compunction is impossible in drunkenness, and the inebriate indulges, unrestrained, in a swarm of vices. Amongst these, none is more audacious or contemptible than lying. No matter how "fine a fellow" the drunkard may be, his word is taken with suspicion or protest. Yet, it is not presumed that drunkenness strenuously seeks out falsehood. It does not take much pains to seek any thing. The drunken man simply seizes the shortest and easiest way to solve any and every problem presented to him. His moral imbecility is so great that he holds truth in cheap estimation. He is incapacitated from analyzing its nature, for he is incapable of feeling it; and he is very liable to employ falsehood in all emergencies that will, in his opinion, subserve his interest or contribute to his ease. This is especially the case in things that relate to the gratification of his propensity for intoxication. In pursuit of this object, there is a pretty constant resort to some kind of deceit and misrepresentation.

Only a few days ago a man who is a frequent and furious spasmodic drunkard, and who had recently pledged himself to total abstinence from liquor, called to see his sick mother. Having satisfied his mind that there was not likely to be any sudden crisis or emergency in her case, he informed her that he had very pressing business in two or three of the neighboring towns. He solemnly declared to her that she need not be uneasy about his drinking, as he had not the least desire to indulge in liquor. He started for the depot, and before reaching it was well filled with whisky. In two days he returned, bloated, shameless and defiant. His "business" was all a lying pretext. Such men often form their schemes for a season of drunkenness with great elaboration and cunning; beginning their approaches from afar, and never hesitating to employ a mountain of lies in furtherance of their object.

The chronic drunkard is apt to become habitually false on all subjects and on all occasions. He is prone to indulge in stories that are silly as well as incredible, and that, too, with great precision of statement and detail of circumstance. I knew a physician who had for many years tampered with alcohol, and morphia, and chloral. He lived in the capital city of a Western State. On a visit East he busied himself in recounting wonderful stories. He informed some friends that "it was a curious fact that drugs were cheaper in the Western cities than in the Eastern. Take quinine, as an example," said he, "I purchased an ounce out West, and I was surprised to learn that the price was only fifty cents. I told the druggist," he continued, "I would take two ounces at that price, but he replied that if I took a dollar's worth he would make it three ounces for that money"—and much more in the same strain.

This habit seems often to be a kind of automatic representation of the long-existing moral deficiency inseparable from drunkenness. It is the unconscious outcome of prolonged moral hebetude in relation to many essential elements of a useful life, and especially in relation to the cardinal virtues of truthfulness. It is, however, an incident showing the innate tendency of drunkenness to vice and crime.—Journal of Inebriety.

POWDERLY ON RUM.

From his recent Boston speech: Now, a word about the great curse of the laboring man—strong drink. Had I 10,000,000 tongues, and a throat for each tongue, I would say to each man, woman, and child here-to-night: "Throw strong drink aside as you would an ounce of liquid hell." [Tremendous applause.] It scars the conscience; it destroys everything it touches; it reaches into the family circle and takes the wife you have sworn to protect and drags her down from her pinnacle of purity into that house from which no decent woman goes alive. [Applause.] It induces the father to take the furniture from his house, exchange it for money at the pawn-shop, and spend the proceeds in rum. It damns everything it touches. I have seen it in every city east of the Mississippi, and I know that the most damning curse to the laborer is that which gurgles from the neck of the bottle. [Cheers.] I had rather be at the head of an organization having 100,000 temperate, honest, earnest men than at the head of an organization of 12,000,000 drinkers, whether moderate or any other kind.

Mr. Powderly, in his recent speech at Lynn, Mass., said: "In one Pennsylvania county in a single year $17,000,000 was spent for liquor, and it was estimated that $11,000,000 of the amount came from working men." He urged working men to keep clear of the liquor saloon. Compliance with this advice will do more to improve their condition than all the strikes they can get up in a century.

The National Association of Wholesale Liquor Dealers has become very anxious, as well as the National Association of Brewers, about their future. They say: "The prohibition amendment in Texas will be voted upon Aug. 4. Then prohibition in Tennessee comes to a vote on September 9, and it must be met. West Virginia, Oregon, Dakota, Wyoming Territory, to say nothing of Michigan and Missouri, are causing the liquor men trouble." An assessment of ten cents a barrel on old rye and bourbon whisky was ordered. Gentlemen, this is only the beginning of your trouble. The more trouble you have on this score the greater will be the blessing to the country.—Independent.

NEW YORK SUNDAY LIQUORS.

The general term of the Supreme Court has reversed the judgment of the lower court in the hotel men's test case, and ordered the release from custody of James H. Breslin, proprietor of the Gilsey House, and Charles N. Vilas, of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, who submitted to arrest in order that a judicial construction of the act of 1887, prohibiting the sale or gift of spirituous liquors on Sundays and special or general election days might be had. The two hotel proprietors sold liquor to their guests at Sunday meals. They were arrested by Police Captain Williams, and then, through writs of habeas corpus and certiorari, the matter came before the Supreme Court, which decided against the hotel-keepers, and the matter went to the general term with the above result. As matters stand now saloons must remain closed on Sunday, but hotel-keepers may sell liquor to guests with their meals.

LAKE BLUFF.

The event of July in Western Prohibition circles will be Lake Bluff Convocation, which will be held from July 6th to 19th. It is the tenth anniversary, and uncommon interest is felt. This occasion derives its importance from the fact that leaders gather, and out of it have grown some of the most important results. A reference to the programme will show that there is a grappling with living questions which conference and conventions are slow to mention. The National Training School of the W. C. T. Union has a session in the forenoon of every week day. These sessions are open to the public and they furnish occasions where the foremost women of the age may be heard at their best. It is quite a mistake if any imagine that these meetings are simply of interest to women.

The afternoon of each day is devoted to a mass meeting where addresses are made by national leaders, and persons specially fitted for the discussion of the themes indicated. The list of speakers embraces Gov. John P. St. John, M. V. B. Bennet, Geo. W. Bain, John Sobieski, A. A. Hopkins, C. H. Mead, the Silver Lake Quartette, W. D. Satterlee, "Joe" Critchfield, Walter Thomas Mills, Dr. J. G. Evans, Hon. Alonzo J. Streeter, J. H. Gambrell of Mississippi, Louise S. Rounds, and Clara Hoffman. Dr. A. A. Miner and Miss Frances E. Willard will be present though assigned no place on the programme, and ready to contribute their powerful aid to the occasion. The evenings will be devoted to the "Free Parliament." This will afford not only a discussion of the themes presented in the afternoon mass meetings, but also give opportunity to present others.

It is to be regretted that considerable prominence has been given on the programme to George C. Christian, a lodge worker in the name of temperance, who was dropped from the State Prohibition Committee for good reasons, and also of John B. Finch, the head of the Good Templars. There should be in the evening discussions an opportunity to ventilate the lodge methods in temperance, or perhaps it should more properly be called temperance methods of advancing lodgery.

About midnight a laborer named Michael Maloney, drunk and bespattered with blood, came to the Chicago Avenue Police Station and stated that he had cut the throats of his daughter and son. Officers proceeded to the man's tenement and found that the two children had attempted to put Maloney to bed. He angrily resisted, and, drawing a knife, plunged it into his son's neck. Maloney's eleven year old daughter rushed between father and son, only to receive a slash under the arm. The boy's wound is probably fatal, but it is believed the girl will recover.

Boston, because, after preaching truths against secret lodges and Sunday newspapers, he was warned by officials of the church not to repeat such sentiments. Dr. Withrow wished to be his own judge as to what truth he should preach, and so resigned.

It was interesting to see the ministers of Newburg come into our Synod and listen patiently to our discussions until we took up the anti-secret issue, then they vanished and we saw them no more. Dr. Findley of the United Presbyterian church was the only city pastor who stuck by us to the last. After that discussion our Synod became the target for both the Newburg and New York papers. It was surprising that our little Synod should unlimber so many of those city papers; and some of the good brethren in the city expressed the opinion that we should have allowed that issue to rest, rather than to have provoked such opposition.

There is every evidence that the most orthodox churches in the land are beginning to heave with the ground swell of the coming storm, that will loosen and set adrift everything except that which cannot be shaken, and that alone will remain.

THE CALCIUM-LIGHT TURNED UPON MASONRY.

KISHWAUKEE, Ill., June 24, 1897.

DEAR EDITOR:—It was my privilege to be an eye witness of the exhibition of I. R. B. Arnold at Stillman Valley last week; also we were favored with being guests, remaining one day and night in the family tent. The influence of the family is that of being saved of Jesus from sin and worldly conformity, and scattering the Spirit's influence wherever they go. The whole course of seven lectures were very interesting and instructing, consisting of a fine selection of pictures, artistic and complete in representing life. Something to please and instruct the little boy and girl, the middle aged and the old.

The last two evenings were full of interest in the subject of natural religion and Baal worship. The last night the tent was well filled. As the pictures moved along on the large canvas, we could but think it the grandest exhibition of Baal worship given in this country. The pictures were very expressive, but the lecture on each was such as did justice to this cause of reform, especially the explanations on the large print quotations from different Masonic authors. The pictures were moved along on the canvas with an air of fearlessness which becomes an old-time reformer, such as our brother is, and also with respect to and for all present. A minister present stated during the day before the last lecture, "Masonry is going to get a hard rap to-night." Bro. Arnold's work, public and private, has been such as to bring one to decide to publicly renounce the work of Baal worship. Sunday evening Bro. Arnold held a very interesting Bible reading in the large tent, upon the subject of prophecy and fulfillment.

There were many expressions of regret from the people of Stillman Valley that Bro. Arnold must leave them after so pleasant an acquaintance. To all interested in the work of reform, if a large tent and two small ones come your way, just look at the bottom of the bill and see if it is I. R. B. Arnold who is accompanied by his family and two Wheaton students, and you are safe in arranging to put in the whole week with him. M. D. GRINNELL.

The chief chemist of the Brooklyn Health Board calls the attention of the health commissioner to the fact that brewers are largely using salicylic acid to prevent their bottled beer from fermentation. And the honest brewers claim that it is such a healthy beverage!

Mr. Ingersoll sent some whisky to a friend the other day, and accompanying it was a note in which he said: "In it you will find the sunshine and the shadow that chased each other over billowy fields, the breath of June, the carol of the lark, the dews of night, the wealth of summer, the autumn's rich content, all golden with imprisoned light. Drink it, and you will feel within your blood the star-dawns, the dreamy, tawny dusks of many perfect days." In this simple manner Mr. Ingersoll has exposed his idea of heaven. It is made of stone and holds two gallons.—Daily News.

—The reports of four great Bible societies show that during the present century 120,000,000 of copies of the Scriptures have been published. The agents of the Bible society at Tokio, Japan, have been unable to meet the demand for the Bible in that city. The Finns have had the New Testament for some time, and now the Old Testament is to be translated into their language.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

PRESS AND PLATFORM FOR CHRIST.

A GOOD HALF-YEAR'S WORK.

H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, has returned from his trip in Great Britain, arriving in New York by the Etruria, Saturday, June 18. During an absence from Boston of seven months and seven days, he has traveled perhaps ten thousand miles, has delivered two hundred and forty lectures on infidelity and Gospel addresses in public halls, churches and chapels of various denominations, and elsewhere, especially in connection with the Young Men's Christian Associations,—numbers of the lectures being illustrated with magnificent lime-light views of ancient monuments and the most recent modern discoveries, demonstrating the truth of the sacred record. He has received hearty welcomes from people of all classes and conditions, and in addition to the lectures given, and the keeping of his editorial work in Boston, he has, with the assistance of his eldest son, put into circulation about five hundred thousand publications, four hundred thousand being against infidelity and a hundred thousand devoted to Gospel temperance, and kindred subjects.

Mr. Hastings has addressed many hundreds of clergymen, ministers, open air preachers, city missionaries, students and Christian workers, and has been enabled to direct the attention of the Christian public in England to the alarming increase in infidel literature, and has had the satisfaction of hearing that through his labors skeptics have been turned from the error of their ways, infidel meetings have been weakened or discontinued, and the statement has been publicly made that English skeptics themselves confess that during the past year they have had fewer accessions to their ranks than ever before.

In addition to his editorial work in Boston, Mr. Hastings hopes to find time to give some lectures the present season in different parts of the United States upon his favorite themes, the "Inspiration of the Bible" and kindred topics. Of one of his lectures on this subject before the Christian Associations of Massachusetts, which has been published as the first number of his Anti-Infidel Library, and was translated into six or eight languages, the seventh hundred thousand is now being issued.

Mr. Hastings does not believe that big books on Christian evidences will ever reach the common people who are being misled by infidel papers, tracts, and popular lectures. He thinks that the battle must be fought by cheap publications, popular lectures and practical Christian living.

Persons who need cheap anti-infidel literature for distribution will do well to send stamps for specimens to H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass.

—Rev. J. S. T. Milligan of North Cedar, Kansas, has returned to his congregation after a prolonged absence. He attended the Christian Congress in this city and the Synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Newburg during his absence.

—Rev. O. B. Milligan, son of the late revered Dr. A. M. Milligan of Pittsburgh, has lately accepted a call to Bovina, New York.

—Lately there has been current in Europe the odd statement that Hon. Frederick Douglass has "denied his belief in the existence of God." In contradiction Mr. Douglass says in the American Register: "I never 'flatly' or otherwise, told anyone that I did not believe in God. No such thought is in my heart and no such thought has passed my lips, and I cannot imagine how any man can have inferred such an idea from any words of mine. To those who know me this contradiction is unnecessary; but it may be otherwise with those who do not know me."

—More than half a year ago, Mrs. Mary B. Rees was appointed Missionary to Alaska, but has not yet been able to go for want of means. The Signal calls for contributions; $300 are needed. Address Mary Allen West, 161 LaSalle street, Chicago.

—Two hundred churches in Glasgow are banded together in mission work. In one district in that city there are sixty-four churches, fifty-seven of which are in this work, furnishing 1,818 Christian men and women who carry the Gospel to every house in that locality.

—There are now upon the upper Congo seven steamers, four of which are owned by the Free State, one by France and two by missionary societies. The fleet will soon be doubled by the addition of another Free State steamer, one for Bishop Taylor's mission, and those belonging to the Compagnie Belge du Congo, and the American, Dutch and French trading companies.

—The Chinese government has ordered that every foreign missionary in China must hold a passport from its own government, in order that his nationality may be shown. All other passports are declared invalid.

—The annual meeting of the International Missionary Union will be held at Thousand Island Park, St. Lawrence river, August 10-17. All returned missionaries are eligible to membership, and will be entertained during the meeting free of cost. Sessions are opened to the public.

—Kansas Presbytery of the Covenant-er church has fixed the place of its next meeting at Blanchard, Iowa, and at the time when the Iowa State Anti-sect convention meets in College Springs. This will probably be some time in October. Most of the members of Presbytery wish to attend this convention. Rev. B. M. Sharp will be ordained pastor of the Blanchard congregation at this meeting.

—Several months ago Prof. Egbert C. Smyth and some of the other professors of Andover Theological Seminary were accused before the Board of Visitors, who are entrusted with the theological supervision of the school, of teaching doctrines contrary to the Word of God and contrary to the creed to which every professor must subscribe before entering his office. The Board of Visitors have held the matter under advisement for five months. Their decision was rendered a few days since. Two members of the Board did not vote, namely, Prof. Seelye, who was absent, and Rev. Mr. Eustis, because he did not hear the closing arguments in the case. The decision of the remainder of the Board is adverse to Prof. Smyth and sustains the charges against him on three points: the fallibility of the Bible in some of its teachings, the inability of man to repent without the knowledge of God in Christ, and probation after death, and his chair was declared vacant. To the other professors, Tucker, Churchill, Harris and E. H. Smyth, the decision was favorable. The telegraphic reports state that Prof. Smyth and his associates claim that he will not cease to teach in the Seminary, but will continue in the duties of his chair and will take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the State of Massachusetts. The trustees who have charge of the property and finance of the Seminary sustain him, and have issued a paper setting forth their reasons for declining to comply with the action of the Board of Visitors. This is signed by twelve of the thirteen trustees. The Board also refused to approve of the election of Frank E. Woodruff to be associate Professor of Sacred Literature. Mr. Woodruff is quite a young scholar and has adopted some of the ways and manners of modern negative criticism in Germany.

LODGE NOTES.

The Supreme Lodge A. O. U. W., at its session at Milwaukee, Wis., adopted a new ritual, and Louisville, Ky., was chosen as the next place of meeting.

The strike of the Rochester steel laborers, noted in the news column, is over. The rioters are looking for employment. Contractors will not hire them if they are members of any union.

The Supreme Court of the Ancient Order of Foresters of Europe, Canada, and the United States will convene in Chicago, Aug. 9. This association has in all 650,000 members. About 400 delegates will be present.

The Amalgamated Association in convention at Pittsburgh adopted constitutional changes Monday whereby nearly all persons employed about mills can become members. A resolution was adopted that after April 1, 1888, no member of the association can become a member of the Knights of Labor.

The sixth annual session of the senate of the National Union lately closed its deliberations. The third day was spent in listening to charges preferred by three of the honorable senators against ex-President Marshall and ex-Secretary Haarn for alleged treasonable actions. The finding was that the charges were sustained and the verdict was expulsion in each case.

The position of General Sherman as to the visit of the President to St. Louis is that no member of the G. A. R. can or will insult the Commander-in-chief of the United States armies. The position of the G. A. R. lodge of Lincoln, Nebraska, is that, as the St. Louis committee has invited not only President Cleveland but others unfriendly to the order to take part in the parade or demonstration, it would be better for the National Encampment to meet elsewhere.

The Supreme Lodge Ancient Order of Workmen has just held in Milwaukee an eight-days' session. Among the important legislation was a revision of the laws defining the powers of the supreme and grand lodges, adjusting the system of relief, and the ritual adopted last year was modified and revised. A proposition to place a monument over the grave of Father Upchurch, founder of the order, in Bellefontaine Cemetery, St. Louis, and to erect a memorial hall in Meadville, Pa., the birthplace of the organization, was adopted.

The New York World says: The report from Chicago that Dr. McGlynn would become a Knight of Labor, and that the more radical element of the Knights were rejoicing, as they saw in him one who could be of great force as against General Master Workman Powderly, was received with various degrees of satisfaction by Knights of Labor in this city, but the intimation of his contesting the leadership of the order with Mr. Powderly was laughed at. Henry George says: "I have been a Knight of Labor for a number of years, but have never held any office, nor have I any ambition to do so, and from what I know of Dr. McGlynn I can say that he also is not seeking nor would he hold an office, even if he joined the order."

Last Monday morning nearly all the union laborers employed on the city streets, Rochester, N. Y., to the number of about 400, struck for an advance of wages to $1.75 per day. The contractors put non-union men at work in their places. Squads of strikers appeared and forced non-union men off the work. A mob of over two hundred assembled and began to intimidate the men at work on Gorham street. Three policemen endeavored to disperse the crowd, but were unable to do so and an additional squad of officers with two lieutenants was sent to the place. The mob began stoning the officers, who, finding their clubs useless, opened fire with their revolvers, finally clearing the street. The fight lasted but ten minutes, but during that time Policemen Moran, Burns and Sullivan were severely injured by stones. Three of the strikers were badly clubbed and are now under arrest. One man was shot through the upper part of the head. This evening it was learned that two others were shot, but had been conveyed away by their friends. One of them is now reported as dead.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for three weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends three copies of the Cynosure?

NOTICE

to those who receive the Christian Cynosure with this item marked. A friend has paid for the paper to be sent to you for a few months, with the hope that at the end of the time paid for you will wish to subscribe for it, but if you do not, the paper will not be sent beyond the time paid for. If for any reason you are not willing to receive it on the above terms, please send notice to that effect at once.

The few fine cabinet photographs of Pres. J. Blanchard which we had, having been disposed of so quickly, arrangements have now been made by which all can be supplied at this office who wish them. Price postpaid 25 cents each.

Are you doing all that you can to introduce the Cynosure? Have you not one friend to whom you could send it?

THE

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons. It treats of
The Tiger and His Den.
Cups of Flame.
The Scarlet Sin.
Embezzlement.
The Devil's Printing Press.
Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or bold figures of speech, but from the facts that show like molten lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mark, robbed of the glamour with which they are best surrounded by the prurient literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—Western Christian Advocate.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform

Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against

lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience!

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army, who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and beautiful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

FOR PURE FOOD.

The movement against adulteration of food is gaining strength rapidly. The most influential business men throughout the country and the mercantile exchanges have all taken up the consideration of the question. The State of New Jersey has appropriated $10,000 to be used in enforcing the anti-adulteration law. The retail grocers of New York and surrounding cities met a short time ago, and made arrangements for carrying on the crusade against food swindlers. In Pennsylvania pure food associations have been started, and they are carrying on a vigorous campaign. It has been easy to enforce the law against oleomargarine under false brands, and the health officers keep a sharp lookout for impure and adulterated milk. To make the operation of anti-adulteration laws general over all food products would be a great aid to honest trade, and the public would be protected against habitual cheating. We have a right to know the nature of the food we buy. Discovery has introduced many new adulterants, and there is great need of a restrictive statute. The general movement of retailers in aid of the protection of consumers is rapidly increasing and it will not be many years before every State in the Union will have boards established whose express business will be to look after adulterant frauds.—Demo-crest's Monthly.

KOUMISS HOME-MADE.

We prepare koumiss in this way: We take a quart size, self-sealing, glass fruit can, and fill it with sweet milk. Then two or three teaspoonfuls of sugar are added, and the milk well shaken. About one quarter of a one cent yeast cake completes the preparation, and then the cover is screwed down tight. Place the jar where it will be subject to a temperature of about seventy degrees Fahrenheit, and shake it well at intervals of about one hour. If you make it in the morning let it remain until night, when it may be placed on ice or in a cool place. The next morning it will be ready for use. In opening the can it had better be done over a pan. If you want it particularly effervescent put a little sugar in the glass you pour it into. Koumiss is said to be a good nourishment for weak stomachs, being readily and easily assimilated.—Western Plowman.

READY MODE OF PREVENTING INFECTION.—There is no plan of preventing infection so ready as the production of sulphurous acid by the combustion of sulphur. To disinfect a bed, whilst the patient is temporarily removed from it, pass a copper warming-pan into the bed, containing a few live embers and a little sulphur. By burning sulphur in an open sulphur. The pan should be moved about during the ignition of the vessel, closets, carriages, passages and vacated chambers of the sick may be easily disinfected. Clothing may be lightly sponged over or sprinkled with water containing a little well mingled sulphur, and then ironed with a flat iron heated to a temperature which will cause volatilization of the sulphur without burning the linen.—Home and Health.

LEMON FOR A COUGH.—Roast the lemon very carefully without burning it; when it is thoroughly hot, cut and squeeze into a cup upon three ounces of sugar, finely powdered. Take a spoonful whenever your cough troubles you. It is good and agreeable to the taste. Rarely has it been known to fail in giving relief.

A SPEEDY CURE OF WHOOPING COUGH.

Mohn, a Norwegian physician, had in his own family a case of scarlatina and whooping cough. After the violence of the scarlatinal attack had subsided, but while the whooping cough was still present, Mohn disinfected the child's bedding with the fumes of sulphur. Just previous to the fumigation the child had a severe paroxysm of coughing, which led the father to hesitate in his employment of the sulphur. He was surprised and gratified, however, to observe that the disease was cured; and the patient's sister, who had a cough, the sequels of pertussis, was also cured.

These children were not included in the fumigation intentionally, but inhaled such vapor as casually permeated their apartment.

In subsequent severe cases the writer, after the failure of other means, had recourse again to inhalations of sulphur gas, with prompt success. He cites successful cases of five months in age, and children of varying ages have been cured in this manner. He proceeds as follows: The patients are dressed in clean linen, and taken from their bedroom to another room. In their absence, bedding, furniture, playthings, linen, clothing, everything which the sick room contained is so arranged that the fumes of sulphur can penetrate to all. Six and a half drachms of sulphur per cubic metre of air-space in the room are burned, and the fumes allowed to permeate the room for five hours. At evening the child is taken back to the sick room and put in a bed which was disinfected; it awakes the next morning cured.—Revue Internationale.

OF

WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINAG, WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

OF

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its teaching. It reads the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devout in its spirit that it dharma criticism. It contains so much that is sound and practical as much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful. The intelligent reader who really wishes to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finish."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal acceptance."—Unitarian.

ON THE

Labor Troubles,

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is a well-reminded the world of the great law of human brotherhood, and how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his own in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and conventional propriety."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theory to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is in the best of the kind. If it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MOR
GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The pamphlet is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Canadian jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freeman to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his address to it.

In closing his letter he writes: 'I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a good "Anti-Masonic excitement" by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the visible law, and second, to prevent the great power and dangerous influences of "secret societies".'

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago, National Christian Association.] Single copy, 5 cents.

IN THE COILS;

OR

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelical, (Chicago, Ills.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia).

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was written. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barr, D. D., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia).

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a more relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted hulwar as Freemasonry is something to admire, Fantastic though he be."—New York Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh).

"A charming work, fit to be classed with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthful and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cypre, (Chicago).

A Few Books of Special Worth

IN BIBLE STUDY.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST, By Rev. James Skalker, M.A. Arranged for study. 16mo, cloth, 60 cts.; paper, 30 cts.

This work is in truth "Milton in Parvo" containing within its small compass a vast amount of most helpful teaching, so that it is really a book which the reader gathers with remarkable definiteness the whole real teaching of the life-work of our Lord. It is a nutshell of space and with a minimum of study.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES, As Seen in the Tabernacle and the Temple, By Rev. J. H. Brooks, D.D. New York, enlarged. Cloth, 75 cts.; paper, 30 cts.

The writer of this delightfully interesting work has opened up a rich vein of truth, and in a remarkable suggestive style has presented the typical teachings of the Tabernacle of Israel. The book is really fascinating.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

CHICAGO.

The new Chicago directory for 1887 was issued last Friday. It is larger than ever before. The number of names indicates a population within the city limits of over 800,000, and the compiler confidently predicts that inside of four years the million line will be crossed.

Trial of the great Boodler cases has begun with great vigor before Judge Jamieson. The difficulty of securing jurors increases as time passes. It is believed that a conspiracy to defraud the public will soon be unearthed among the city officials, another legacy of the Harrison regime.

COUNTRY.

Fire almost swept the town of Marshfield, Wis., out of existence Monday afternoon, and 1,500 people are homeless. A locomotive spark started a blaze at noon in the lumber yard of the Upham Furniture factory, and it rapidly developed into a roaring fire that spread toward the town. Insufficient fire protection facilities prevented any resistance to the flames and soon several flourishing factories, the business blocks along the main street, and adjoining residences were wrapped in flames. The rapidity of the fire was terrific. It would catch at twenty rods. It raged all the afternoon and till 10 p. m. The saw and planing mills, the Banner flour mills, the furniture factory, and the entire lumber yard of the Upham Manufacturing company were destroyed, not a board or building being left. The electric light works were burned and the water works were badly injured. Twelve solid blocks of stores and business houses are destroyed. A strong wind blew from the southeast, but the flames backed clear around the heart of the town. The people worked like tigers. Twelve buildings were blown up with dynamite, but it did no good. The only manufacturing establishments left are the stove factory, hub and spoke factory, and alcohol factory. The losses are estimated all the way from $1,250,000 to $4,000,000. Aid for the homeless people has been sent in freely.

Five blocks of buildings at Hurley, Wis., were swept away by fire Tuesday, entailing a loss of $150,000.

By the explosion of a threshing machine engine on a farm near Mascoutah, Ill., John Plob, the engineer, was instantly killed. Three others were seriously injured. The threshing and two wagons were burned, and two horses were killed.

At Brazil, Ind., Thursday, two men were instantly killed, Burt Claburn by falling slate and Gowan Armstrong by lightning. Three men were fatally injured, one in a mine, the others on the track.

Tobias New's roofing paper factory at New York was partly destroyed by fire Tuesday morning. The insurance aggregates $60,000. Twenty women employed on the top floor escaped by lowering themselves with pulley lines.

An excavation for a railway bridge near Portsmouth, Ohio, caved Tuesday morning, six men being crushed to death.

The wife of James Donahue, living in a St. Louis suburb, poured oil in the stove Tuesday morning, and an explosion followed, setting the house on fire. Mrs. Donahue was burned to death and her two children were dangerously injured. The house and an adjoining dwelling were destroyed.

A riot occurred in Rochester, N.Y., Monday, in which three officers were severely injured and three citizens fatally wounded. The affair originated in a row between strikers and non-union men.

The jury in the case of Jake Sharpe, briber and king of the New York hoodlums, received the charge of the judge Wednesday and then retired, and after an absence of thirteen minutes returned into court with a verdict of guilty, with a recommendation to mercy. The aged prisoner's head dropped. He was removed Ludlow Street Jail, and sentence will be passed July 13. The penalty is not more than ten years at hard labor, or a fine of $5,000, or both.

A riot occurred at Oakridge, La., Monday morning in which one white man and six negroes were killed and several white men dangerously wounded. A negro man living in the vicinity of Oakridge indecently assaulted a white girl. He was arrested and when the deputies were taking him to the calaboose they were fired upon by six other negroes, wounding two of them. The negroes then dispersed, and later rendezvoused at a cabin two miles from town. Officers who went to arrest them were fired upon and one of their number, C. W. Higginbotham, was instantly killed, and Constables John Conger, Gardner and Baker dangerously wounded, Conger afterward dying. Jerry Baldwin and one of his sons and four other negroes were killed. Great excitement prevails at Oakridge, and further trouble is apprehended.

The Washington correspondent of a New York paper quotes Senator M. C. Butler as saying that Secretary Lamar will probably be appointed to the vacancy on the Supreme Bench, and that Senator Colquitt, who is strongly identified with the temperance cause in Georgia, will be made Secretary of the Interior.

The heaviest rainfall on record in New Orleans in the same space of time fell between 2 and 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. In two hours four and one-half inches descended upon the city. A number of cisterns burst, greatly damaging buildings. The loss will run up into thousands of dollars. The storm was accompanied by a brilliant electrical display and by terrific thunder.

John Habnberger, a farmer, near Carlsruhe, Ill., Wednesday set fire to his house and threw himself into the flames.

The coroner's jury in the case wherein Dr. Roy Nance is charged with killing William Forney in Sycamore township near Red Oak, Iowa, brought in a verdict that the shooting was not justifiable and that Dr. Nance, who is a brother of ex-Governor Nance of Nebraska, should be held for murder.

It is stated the oil men of Ohio signed an agreement to cease the production of oil for nine months to give the Standard Company a chance to find a market for Ohio crude oil as fuel.

Jennie, Kate, and Emily Belder, of Mt. Washington, Pittsburg, were burned to death Friday by the explosion of a can of petroleum. The shocking accident occurred during the absence of the parents of the unfortunate.

A rather unfavorable report on crop conditions has just been issued by the Territorial Statistician of Dakota. Hot winds have proved injurious. Corn averages 100 per cent, with an increased acreage, while the condition of spring wheat is but 86 per cent.

At Concord, N. H., one of the most distinct shocks of earthquake ever experienced was felt Thursday. People left their houses and legislators fled from the State House in fear.

The Ohio Prohibitionists, in convention at Delaware, Thursday, elected John T. Moore, of Jackson, permanent chairman. The resolutions state the Dow law simply put the prohibition cause at a disadvantage; denounce anarchy, and fail to approve woman suffrage.

Owing to the reduction of receipts, due to the prohibitory law, the internal revenue office for Mississippi has been transferred to the Louisiana office. The receipts have fallen below $50,000, and are decreasing annually.

FOREIGN.

The Official Messenger of St. Petersburg announces that twenty-one persons were tried at St. Petersburg between the 7th and 16th of the present month on the charge of being active members of the secret society called the "Will of the People"; of complicity in several murders, including that of Chief of Police Colonel Sudeikin; of participation in a number of robberies; of having assisted in several dynamite outrages, and of having taken part in the starting of unlawful secret printing offices. Three of the prisoners were acquitted.

A violent earthquake, lasting two minutes and twenty seconds, shook Guayaquil, the capital of Ecuador, Wednesday morning. Several buildings were wrecked but no loss of life is reported. It is feared the shock caused heavy damages in the interior.

All leading papers in Berlin publish articles, apparently officially inspired, advising the financial world to stop lending money to Russia, and follow the example of England and Holland, which have unloaded their Russian securities.

It is announced in London that Ovid's tomb has been discovered. The location is at Anadolkiol, near Kustendan. The stone marking the tomb represents Ovid's arrival at the Island of Tomi, when he was banished thither by Augustus, A. D. 8, on account of the poet's intrigue with the emperor's daughter Julia, and Apollo's reception of him. Ovid's Isle is a few miles from Kustendan.

In the House of Commons Thursday night Mr. W. H. Smith moved that if a report on the crimes bill be not reached by Monday cloture be applied. The Parnellites opposed the motion, which, however, was carried by a vote of 226 to 120. The Speaker then called upon the Parnellites to move the amendments standing opposite their names on the notice paper. The Parnellites, who were watching the proceedings from the members' side of the gallery, made no reply.

In the Italian Chamber of Deputies it was declared that the alliance between Italy, Germany, and Austria had been concluded with the sole idea of securing the peace of Europe by purely defensive means. The alliance, it is said, preserved France from war.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 50c. Cloth, 80c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evil and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Helffenstein. Paper covers, 50c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and scratches out the sandy foundation of the deceived professor. The refugees of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of thousands are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

The Mormons have had their constitutional convention and will have a sham vote on its result August 1st. This whole affair is a stupendous fraud, the work of hypocrites and liars and knaves. They declare against polygamy and bigamy, but take care to perpetuate these crimes and put them beyond the reach of national law. There would be little notice taken of this matter were it not too evident that Democratic leaders slyly encourage the Mormons for their political support. But a party which rises by such infamy ought to be a stench to all good men.

Dr. McGlynn has his ticket-of-leave. Archbishop Corrigan is crafty. He sent his bull of excommunication by registered letter, so he has a receipt for it. But there seems to be a wholesome dread of publicity, for the order was not read in the Catholic churches according to custom. Dr. McGlynn's church, the Anti-poverty Society, gave him an ovation Sabbath evening which overflowed from the Academy of Music into Irving Hall. There is in this movement much to criticize, but more to admire, and while the pope has such antagonists, whether for the sake of conscience or self-interest, there will be some check to his aggrandizement; and while the churches of Christ are so indifferent, it is well there is opposition of some form abroad.

The Knights of Labor lodges have been voting on a new constitution, and, though the vote will not be complete until the 15th inst., a majority large enough to adopt is already reported. The change which will be first noted by the public is in the section which provides that there shall be no lodgers at any meeting of the order of whatever nature. Suspension or expulsion of the individual or assembly is the penalty for disobedience. It is also provided that every member shall pay two cents per month for a fund in aid of co-operative enterprises. This is a new fund and is in addition to other levies on the order. Powderly lately boasted of the comparatively small amounts spent by the order—$600,000 is the sum he names. Of course the Philadelphia palace is not thought of in this connection; but if every thousand members must pay $240 per year for this one object, how much must be raised for all purposes from the million or so workmen in this order? It is a problem they cannot consider too soon. Other articles fix the representation of the order at 1 for 3,000 members, and a two year term for the general officers. About New York there is a strong rebellion against the new laws, but it is immaterial whether there is a split or not, only the more the orders the sooner we shall be done with them.

BISHOP HAMLINE.

[See page 8.]

As the saloon gets nearer its guillotine its real nature appears; and arson and murder are seen to be legitimate to its vile nature. The latest manifestation is the burning of Clarendon, Pennsylvania, last week. A few days ago the licensing of liquor was forbidden in the county and a saloonist named Mahoney threatened to fire the town if the decision of the court was not reversed. He seems to have been good as his word, and the blaze he started burned over twenty acres, leaving a thousand people homeless, destroying $350,000 worth of property, and costing two lives. But for every blow of this kind let us take courage. The evil system is dying.

Not satisfied with a National Encampment and drill at Washington lately, some of our Chicago braves are canvassing Europe for an international military display. The Duke of Cambridge gave these warlike citizens a very brief answer which sent them off in chagrin. The English commander has no apparent affection for carpet knights and play-soldiers. The committee have, however, the promise of several European deputations, and will soon begin to advertise for the benefit of Chicago hotels and railroads. God hasten the day when the principles expounded by Senator Wilson of Iowa, which we have the great satisfaction of publishing on another page, shall shame these expensive and demoralizing military demonstrations out of existence.

The emigrant from foreign lands made a very popular Independence day theme this year. He and his wife, children, uncles, aunts and cousins have numbered 212,655 during the first six months of this year. At the same rate these people would add half a million to our strength before 1888. Powderly, speaking for his labor lodge, thinks we must check this rush for America. A large majority of his order are probably themselves foreign-born, and their demand to shut the ocean gates in the face of their friends is selfish and unreasonable. Had the demand now being made been pushed twenty years ago, how many Knights of Labor, bold and brave, would to-day still be languishing in the prison-houses of poverty and despotism? It is significant also that the old, narrow, exploded, selfish notion, "America for Americans" is again coming into power. "America" is verily a word to conjure with. Last week in San Francisco delegates from all over California held a three-days secret session to revive Know-nothingism. The poor foreigner is the burden of their complaint, and they denounce him under the name American party. Another attempt against immigration, adopting the same name, has its headquarters at 1017 Chestnut street, Philadelphia. These movements will have their brief day and go out. But let them join in an effort to Americanize those who come to us, and to put down the un-American lodge and saloon and Sabbath desecration and political jugglery and oppression of the poor, and to make this nation truly what our fathers proposed that it should be, they would find them room for the honest poor of every land, and at the same time restrict immigration by making a community dangerous to thieves, anarchists, Hiramites, and saloonists.

REFORMERS BEHIND CLOSED DOORS.

HOW THEY APPEAR TO MISS WILLARD AND OTHERS.

EVANSTON, Ill., June 6, 1887.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I do believe that my record is invulnerable as one who dares to stand for unpopular causes. If I had time I could catalogue for you the positions I have taken in the last ten years, some of which have doubtless escaped your attention, but all of which are radical and call down the censure of the majority.

From the first I have disagreed with my good friends of the anti-secret society movement in their onslaughts upon the Good Templars, for while I would be glad to have the Good Templars' lodge open, and hope the time will come when it will be, I still think their chief secret is that they have no secret; and while I may esteem a pastor who can write you that he sees no important reason why he could not as well be a Freemason as a Good Templar, I certainly could not say that. I think the difference a wide one and clearly accentuated; and I think that to eliminate the Good Templars from the prohibition movement because of one regrettable feature in their economy would be a signal instance of un wisdom.

While it is true that in some cases their methods of sociality are not such as I could endorse or enjoy, I believe those cases to be exceptional, and that their general movement is most beneficent. If they would consent to put away the feature of sitting with closed doors I would certainly rejoice, and it seems to me it would be better to expend the efforts of the women's diplomacy in endeavoring to secure this end, rather than in openly denouncing an order that has done so much good, and is carried forward by so many excellent people. Concerning the K. of L. I hold similar opinions, and while I regret the excesses of some of their adherents I believe the general movement to be beneficent. * * *

Ever yours sincerely,

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

Mrs. Dr. Blanchard.

REPLY.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—Many thanks for your favor of June 7th. The duties and cares incident to Commencement have prevented earlier attention. I agree with you entirely as to your past record in regard to standing for unpopular reforms. Very likely I may not know all which you have espoused, but I know enough to lead me to class you with the brave, fearless women of this age; and there is just where the wonder has come in and perplexed me; that you find so little fault with the principle of secretism, the depraving nature of which I think you understand, so that while you well and wisely encourage the temperance work of the Good Templars, Knights of Labor, etc., you do not warn them, in the most Christian way possible to your own kind nature, of the evils of swearing to conceal they know not what in the lodges which they join.

I know that many of the most enlightened of the Good Templars (as I think I mentioned in my former letter to you) are opposed to the secrecy feature of that order as you and we are. Vice President Wilson, who joined them, moved that they publish their ritual soon after he united with them. Even Mr. J. B. Finch said in the presence of several reliable gentlemen some two years ago, "If what little secrecy we have offends any number of temperance friends, I am in favor of doing away with it;" and a movement was started to get that very thing done; and that is, so far as I know, what we all want. I put a slip in my letter to you, signed by Rev. T. P. Stevenson, editor of the Christian Statesman, and a few others, which was intended for circulation. It contained a proposition that "the secret temperance lodges co-operating in the Prohibition party should drop their secrecy and all unite in and employ only open methods for promoting temperance; adding, 'we ardently endorse such proposition and hope that under a national name as the 'American,' or 'American Prohibition party,' all friends of God and the country will unite by their votes and Christian endeavor to rid our fair land of the saloon and its accompanying evils.'" Of course the name of the party could be "Home Protection," or whatever the majority choose.

As to our views and course in regard to the Good Templars, I can truthfully and joyfully adopt as my own your language, "I would be glad to have the Good Templars' lodge open and hope the time will come when it will be," and that is what I am so anxious you, and all who agree with you should, in the kindest, sweetest way possible seek to bring about. We will follow and adopt your methods if they lead in that direction. So far are we from wishing to eliminate the Good Templars from the prohibition movement, we only wish them to throw away the needless shackles that now separate them from the grand men and women who will not bind those shackles on, and that we may with them go forth to fight the demon drink, armed with truth, united in heart and soul, "conquering and to conquer."

When I was eight years old I attended for the first time a temperance meeting and signed the pledge. Then liquor was deemed indispensable on all important occasions in every home. Church and state were both alike threatened with ruin from the drink curse. "There were giants in those days," whom I might enumerate, who rose in the majesty and might of truth and portrayed in never-to-be-forgotten words the truth of total abstinence, and public sentiment bowed before their utterances as do trees of the forest when shaken by a mighty wind; and the change in the practice and views of the people in twenty-five years was little less than miraculous.

While this work was progressing secret orders began to appear under different names, and such men as Secretary Marsh and Dr. Charles Jewett, with others, earnest men and true, watched their working and influence, and in their sober judgment they declared those secret orders put back the cause at least twenty-five years. And, indeed, I know not, nor, humanly speaking, can we see where this glorious work would now be had not God arisen in the hearts of those mighty women, the crusaders, and the hosts awakened into action by their prayers and tears and faith in the God of battles. They did not sit with darkened windows, closed doors, with a secret grip and password. No, indeed; they went out letting their light shine, and an ungodly world stood reprov'd, converted, and is now glorifying God for their open, self-denying work.

The National Society which you represent believes in open work with its many thousand members—and I am proud, with my many anti-secret friends, to stand enrolled under your banner, "For God and Home and Native Land." We make no "onslaught" on our many Good Templar friends. We believe they now stand in a false position; many of them confess it, others do not yet see it. But we think God is able to lead into the light his temperance hosts in this regard also. "Every plant which my Father hath not planted shall be rooted up." This division is certainly an obstacle in our way. Thousands see it to be so. Let every one do something. Throw each their influence, great or small, in the right scale, and look up to him for approval and success, who "ever spake openly," and "in secret said nothing."

Thanking you for the frank expression of your views, and for your kind words of cheer to us in this department of service, and praying God to make us all humble and true to his most blessed work,

Yours with sincere regard,

MARY A. BLANCHARD.

Miss F. E. Willard.

JUVENILE SECRET SOCIETIES.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

It is not generally known that besides the vast network of secret orders for adults there is, especially among the colored people, a large number of lodges that initiate children of from four to ten years old, and train them in lodgery from their infancy. The following incident related by a Congregational pastor in Washington will show the practical workings of this system.

A colored family called on him to conduct the funeral services of their little son, eleven years old. There was but a single room and it was small, but the coffin was placed in the center and surrounded by the Sons and Daughters of Moses, of which the little lad was a member. All of those surrounding the coffin were children clad in the regalia of the order. Though there was scant room for more, he went in and read the Scriptures and offered prayer, supposing that the body would be at once taken to the grave.

When he had finished the chaplain of the lodge took charge of the exercises. His breath was very strong with whisky and his manners such as might be expected. He read a long ritual and made long remarks. He told them to join all hands and that thus they would signify the chain that bound them all together. Then he bade them break the chain and told them that this signified that little Sammy was taken away. They then joined hands and all went through the movements of a blacksmith mending a broken chain. He then told them that the chain was again mended and that it would remain whole until broken by the Great Master.

When he had finished his ceremonies there was further delay on account of a carriage not arriving, and nearly half an hour was occupied by the said "chaplain" in speaking "for the good of the order." He told them they could see the benefit of belonging to "s'ciety." Sammy belonged and when he died he was taken care of. They did not know how soon they might die. Some people had been very careless and had not put their children into "s'ciety," but they must not do so, but bring them at once and have them join. Finally the "s'ciety" people crowded into the two carriages and the little body was taken to where it will no more be troubled with lodge ceremonies.

It is not strange in view of this condition of things that our courts in this city are thronged with juvenile offenders. Children that are educated in lodge morality will be likely to be well schooled in crime. It is the manifest duty of the 70,000 colored people of this District to seek an abatement of this lodge nuisance.

Washington, D. C.

WANTED—A YOUNG MEN'S CRUSADE.

BY WILL H. MILLER.

It may seem presumptuous in a comparatively young convert to the doctrines of anti-secretism to make any suggestions as to the conduct of that reform through the columns of a paper which sparkles from week to week with the choicest thoughts of men who have devoted to the consideration of this subject more years of study perhaps than I have hours. Yet upon one point I wish to say a few words.

In all the reports which were published of the Congress of Churches opposed to lodgery, which met in Chicago recently, the statement was made and commented upon that the delegates were all elderly men. The men most prominent in the work are old men. On the other hand the lodges, especially the Masonic, are reaching out more and more after young men, and these young men are being pushed through the degrees faster than ever before in the history of secret orders.

Now as a member of that body of men whose daily work is to record the doings of the day in the columns of a daily newspaper, I cannot but notice this state of affairs, and it seems to me that a special effort should be made by those who are opposed to the Christless religions of the lodge to reach this class of men from which the recruits are drawn to fill up the ranks of the secret assemblies which are doing so much to undermine the social, religious and political foundations of our government. We want to reach the young men of from twenty-one to thirty-five who are being drawn into these organizations.

In order to do this we must have more men in the work, who will enter it with the true Christian spirit of reform and have wisdom to devise means to reach this class. Men who cut their hair and their arguments short and make the latter to the point. Men who will point out to young men the foolishness, from a business standpoint as well as from the higher moral ground, of supporting these so-called "beneficial" institutions, and the fallacy of putting his trust in the "brotherhood" or "charity" that springs from oath-bound obligation instead of a genuine love implanted in the heart by Christ himself. Men who with scorching sarcasm can destroy the oft-repeated statement that the lodge is religion enough for any man, who will hold up to ridicule the senseless pageants of the semi-military orders that parade the streets on public occasions, their swords, like yours and mine, unstained by blood or dust of battle.

We want to call the attention of the young men of the country to the foolishness of the claims of these organizations that profess to teach lessons of high and pure morality by means of senseless, sacrilegious ceremonies, regalias and lodge jewels, a sort of grown-up kindergarten as it were, in which they would teach moral philosophy by means of object lesson, with blocks and toys. It seems to me there is a grand opening in the reform work of anti-secretism for a man of the Sam Jones style.

Streator, Ill.

INTERNATIONAL ARBITRATION.

REMARKS OF U. S. SENATOR JAMES F. WILSON AT THE FRIENDS' PEACE CONVENTION AT PLEASANT PLAIN, IOWA, JUNE 27, 1887.

FELLOW CITIZENS:—Nineteen centuries ago the shepherds on the plains near Bethlehem had spoken unto them the words: "On earth peace and good will towards men." More than seven centuries prior to this it had been prophetically said of the nations: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

The centuries have rolled on, mankind has waited, nations have come and gone, but the conditions described in the words I have quoted are not present in the world's affairs. Mankind is weary, the nations are burdened. Will these conditions ever come to give rest and lighten burdens? In all of the centuries that have passed, rarely, if ever, has peace been universal on the earth. The nations in some degree have been in a continuous state of war. Will this continue as long as nations shall exist? Is the state of war to be perpetual? Will the other and better conditions never come? Are all of the centuries yet to come to be like those that have departed?

I do not ask these questions because I doubt that a change will come. When it will come I cannot venture to predict. But that it will I do not doubt. It has been promised from a source which does not fail to effect its purpose. Something is now moving upon men in all parts of the world, causing them to make definite and resolute efforts to effect the desired and long looked-for change. In almost every civilized nation peace societies and arbitration leagues exist. They number in their membership many of the ablest and best equipped minds of our time. Men have come to realize that an avoidance of war is demanded by the true interests of mankind. No matter whether the case is considered from the national or individual standpoint the result is the same. The true interests of men, whether viewed in the governmental aggregate or in the individual unit, are best served by the domination of peace. Mankind has come to realize this truth. The burdens which the wars of nations in the past have placed on the present generation are forcing governments and individuals to give the subjects and interests involved profound consideration.

The debts that oppress so many nations may all be charged up as the cost of the wars in which they have been engaged. The aggregate of these debts may be set down at $30,000,000,000. Presuming that the population of the earth is now about 1,500,000,000, and making a per capita division of the debts, we find that they amount to $20 for each man, woman and child now living. If we apportion the result to heads of families, allowing five persons to the family, we have a result in each case of $100. But this result is far from the exact truth. In the first place there are some national debts of which we have no accurate statements, and there are many millions of the earth's inhabitants not included in the populations of nations having public debts. Carrying these two factors into the case it may safely be said that an approximately accurate distribution of the national debts to heads of families would assign to each about $150. This is a hard fact, but it is a mere introduction to the economic branch of the case.

Every person knows what it is that goes hand in hand with public debt. Taxation is its inseparable companion. How much this means the people of the United States do not fully realize; for this country has reached the point in its financial affairs which marks the decline of national taxation. From 1870 to 1880 aggregate taxation in the United States decreased 9.15 per cent. In Europe the case is very different. There the period named represents a steady and oppressive increase of taxation. In Great Britain the increase was 20.17 per cent.; in France 36.13 per cent.; in Russia 37.83 per cent.; in Sweden and Norway 50.10 per cent.; in Germany 57.81 per cent. These per centages of increase are the greater amongst the European countries; but when we take all, great and small, together the result is an increase of taxation for the period named of 28.01 per cent.

The results here presented are merely what remain of the tremendous burdens which wars have imposed and may fairly be charged up as a whole to those international conflicts; for the amounts currently paid as the wars progressed would more than balance the ordinary civil expenses of the several governments engaged in them. Hence it is not difficult to see that nearly every feature of the economic problems which pester nations is involved in this one consequence of war. And this not merely because wars have been, but largely because they may again occur. The military and naval establishments of the nations, maintained in obedience to the maxim, "in peace prepare for war," are large consumers of the money which each year finds its way from the hands of the people into the vaults of the public treasuries. The cost of government in Europe has increased fifty per cent. in ten years, and the public debts have nearly doubled in fifteen years. In our own country the appropriations made for carrying on the government in all of its departments for the present fiscal year aggregate $209,659,383. The portion of this sum that goes to the support of the army is $23,753,057; to the naval service $16,489,557; to the support of the military academy $297,805; to forts and fortifications $59,877; making the large sum of $40,600,296, or nearly 20 per cent. of the whole sum appropriated for the year for all the purposes of government.

This is not because we have had wars as a part of our experience in the past, but for the reason that we fear we may have them in the future. The condition represents the economic difference between the declarations, "on earth peace" and "in peace prepare for war."

But our expenditure for military and naval purposes is small when compared with those of many other countries. In her last fiscal year France expended $162,050,963 in support of her army and navy; Great Britain, $144,545,535; add to this British India, $87,201,250, and it gives a grand total of $231,746,785; Russia, $145,420,054; Germany, $91,720,234; Italy, $51,409,352. I will not carry this statement into further detail, but content myself with giving in the aggregate the cost of the armies and navies of the several powers of the world as presented by their latest official documents. From this source I ascertain that the armies of the several powers cost for the last year presented a total of $864,997,281; the navies $188,209,108, or a grand total of $1,053,206,389. This is a tremendous load for the industry of the world to carry, and it is increasing every year. Is it any wonder that discontent is increasing in the countries where this burden bears the heaviest? Much of the unrest which ultimates in social and political disorders is directly traceable to the economic friction which these vast expenditures occasion. Oppressive taxation and stable political conditions are rarely harmonious in their relations. This will go far towards explaining the cause of that worse than prison-life which the Czar of Russia is compelled to lead; and lies near the roots of the organizations of the nihilists, the anarchists, the socialists and other disturbers of the peace of nations and communities.

The remedies that many of the statesmen of the nations have looked to for relief will never bring it. They simply intensify the cause of the disturbances. Germany, France, England, Russia, Italy and other powers, feeling the pressure of the effects induced by their great debt and consequent heavy taxation, have been looking all over the world for new possessions and other opportunities for the expansion of trade and an enlargement of revenue. But these movements have neither assured them peace at home or friendly relations abroad.

Many of the wisest men in the several nations have arrived at the conclusion that a change of policy must be adopted. They see that in every regard the past and present methods of national and international action involve danger and open up no way of escape from the economic burdens, civil disturbances and social threatenings which, in greater or less degree, all nations realize are present in their affairs and conditions. As things now go each nation stands on guard against the others. The possibility of war is always present with them. This enforces the maintenance of their expensive military and naval establishments. These prolong and enlarge the financial burdens that press them so constantly and so sorely, and out of which all manner of bad moral, social and civil conditions spring. They are constantly practicing the maxim, "in peace prepare for war," and are ever doing things that tend to induce war; for such preparation by one nation causes others to do likewise.

Can this be changed? If the nations so will it may be. How? By international agreement. A forceful movement has been in progress for a number of years whose office is to effect a change. The movement is organized and active in many of the nations, and it is growing in favor every day. In this country it is known as the American Arbitration League. This organization is active and forceful. The purpose is to induce the nations to blot out that barbarous maxim, "in peace prepare for war," and put in its place that other and better rule announced to the shepherds in the long centuries ago, "on earth peace, and good will towards men." Of course this can only be done through the concurrent action of the nations. The movement in this country has impressed itself most favorably on Congress. Several bills have been introduced in that body on the subject. Some of them propose to authorize the President of the United States to invite other nations to join with us in an international convention for the purpose of devising a plan by means of which all disputes between nations that are at all likely to lead to war, if not otherwise settled, shall be submitted to a tribunal of arbitration whose determination of cases given to its jurisdiction shall be obligatory on all the nations interested and respected by all other powers. I had the honor to introduce a bill of this kind into the U. S. Senate. This action has enabled me to get a pretty correct idea of what is going on, not only in this country, but also in others, relative to this great subject. And I can say to you here to-day in this quiet village where so much good and effective work has been done in the past years in other good causes, that the movement in favor of international arbitration is making most hopeful progress. I intend to renew my bill at the next session of Congress, and do it with the faith that some definite result may be reached before the 4th of March, 1889.

Other measures confined to the co-operation of American nations only in the movements for international peace and good fellowship have been introduced into Congress, and have met with great favor. It may be that at the commencement of definite action this will be deemed sufficient. But if so I feel assured that the great work cannot stop there; for I do not doubt that the results will be such as to induce all peoples to join in making international arbitration universal, and that it may be said on the basis of existing conditions as was foretold of the nations by the prophet twenty-six centuries ago, "They shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

What a grand result it would be to have this world brought to the condition here portrayed. And why may it not be? International arbitration has been tried in very delicate and difficult cases, and has succeeded in staying the anger of peoples and avoiding war. The Geneva arbitration between the United States and Great Britain is a notable example of the efficacy of this mode of settling international disputes. What was done in that case can be done in others. At all events let us in the United States do all we can to bring our government up to the point of saying to the other nations of the world, "we are ready to assure universal peace through international arbitration." This is a great work, let us not grow weary in it. It is worthy of our best and constant endeavors to bring it to universal and permanent success. Let us take courage from the interest it has wrought in the minds of so many of the good and great men in the other nations. And let us not fail to keep in mind that the end for which we and they work has been promised to the world by Him whose word shall not fail.

THE GRAND JUBILEE.

BY EDWIN H. CHAPIN, D. D.

There sweeps a rush of armies past with banners proud and high,
And clarions waft their thrilling strains triumphant to the sky;
No dread munition in their ranks, no fearful steel they bear;
No "warrior garments rolled in blood," no panoply they wear;
But on each brow the olive wreath is twining fresh and green,
And in each lifted eye the light of peace and joy is seen.

Gay barks, with music on their decks and pennons to the breeze,
And silks and gold and spices rare are out on foamy seas:
Safely their bright prow cleave the waves; there is no foe to fear;

No murderous shot, no rude attack, no vengeful crew is near.
Where battle strode o'er ruined heaps, and carnage shook its brand,
And red blood gushed, the purple grapes and clustering harvest stand;

And dew from bending branches drip and quiver in the flowers,
And merry groups are rushing out from coits and shady bowers;
"There is no sword our hearths to stain, no flame our roofs to spoil;

There are no robber-hordes to seize the treasures of our toil:
Ho! sing ye, then, the harvest song, and twist the viny leaves,
And let your shining sickles laugh among the plump sheaves!—
The falchions we'll to ploughshares turn, the days of strife are o'er;

The spears we'll beat to pruning-hooks, there shall be war no more!"

Nation with nation strives no more: the golden chain of love,
Through the wide earth, links soul to soul, descending from above;

The Indian mid his hundred streams, the Tartar in his snows,
The Ethiop, 'neath the burning sun, its gentle impulse knows.
From every tribe, in kneeling ranks, upon the silent air,
Up to the Throne of thrones, go forth the sacred words of prayer:

"All praise to Him whose hand alone, whose own right hand hath done

This blessed work, and made the hearts of all his children one!"

Then, like the strains Ephraim heard hymned by the angel choir,

From every lip a song breaks forth and sweeps o'er every lyre.

The peopled mart, the temple-arch, sends out the jubilee;

It echoes from the forest shrines and green isles of the sea:

"Our falchions we'll to ploughshares turn,—the days of strife are o'er;

Our spears we'll beat to pruning-hooks,—there shall be war no more!"

WOMEN AND WAR.

Mr. Ruskin says of women's responsibility for war: I for one would faint join in the cadence of hammer-strokes that should beat swords into plowshares, and that this cannot be is not altogether the fault of us men. It is the fault of women. Only by your command or your permission can any contest take place among us. And the real final reason for all the poverty, misery and rage of battle throughout Europe is simply that you women, however good, however religious, however self-sacrificing for those whom you love, are too selfish and too thoughtless to take pains for any creature out of your own immediate circles. You fancy that you are sorry for the pains of others. Now, I just tell you this, that if the usual course of war, instead of unroofing peasants' houses and ravaging peasants' fields merely broke the china upon your own drawing-room tables, no war in civilized countries would last a week. I tell you more, that at whatever moment you choose to put a period to war, you could do it with less trouble than you take any day to go out to dinner. You know, or at least you might know if you would think, that every battle you hear of has made many widows and orphans. We have none of us heart enough truly to mourn with them. But at least we might put on the outer symbols of mourning with these. Let every Christian lady who has conscience towards God vow that she will mourn, at least outwardly, for his killed creatures. Let every lady in the upper classes of civilized Europe simply vow that, while any cruel war proceeds, she will wear black—a mute black—with no jewel, no ornament, no excuse for, or evasion into, prettiness, I tell you again, no war would last a week.

"I love flowers and religion," says Rev. Sam Jones, "but I despise botany and theology." Yes, and some of these days, in his love for flowers, he will pluck a beautiful bouquet of the brilliant leaves of the poison-ivy, and then there will be the mischief to pay. A thorough knowledge of botany does not destroy our love for flowers, and it makes us love more wisely. Some of the beautiful scarlet berries are poison, and some of them are good to eat. The botanist never eats the poison ones himself, and he warns his friends who love those things ignorantly against touching them.—Burdette.

THE SECRET EMPIRE.

THE SONS OF VETERANS

A secret military order in times of peace is an anomaly, and altogether out of place in a free government. The G. A. R. has been tolerated by the nation because of its gratitude to the men who put down the rebellion; and also because it was believed to be evanescent, and that it would, with this generation, pass out of existence.

The order of the Sons of Veterans is designed to make this military system perpetual. Its terms of membership include "the sons, not less than eighteen years of age, of deceased or honorably discharged soldiers, sailors or marines, who served in the Union Army or Navy during the Civil War of 1861-1865, also, on attaining the age of twenty-one years, all sons of members of the order in succeeding generations." This makes it perpetual, and establishes a military order in our midst, which, by reason of its secrecy, is made responsible only to itself. With an elaborate ritual, constitution and by-laws, and a series of officers grading from "corporal" to "lieutenant general," embracing a vast number of young men in all the Northern cities, it constitutes a power capable of possible good, but much more likely to be used for evil, and wholly useless, even for the purposes for which it was instituted.

Let us notice their purposes. Supposing them to be the real ones, they are:

First, "To keep green the memory of our fathers, and their sacrifices for the Union." This sounds prettily, but since it is an object of common interest it is not likely to be neglected. We needed no secret society to preserve the memory of Washington and his compatriots, nor will it tend to strengthen popular regard for this, that they and their sons constituted themselves a permanent aristocracy for the promotion, mainly, of selfish considerations. True patriots are not dependent on manufactured fame. Honor comes to men, if at all, unasked and unthought.

The second object is "to aid the members of the G. A. R. in caring for their helpless and disabled veterans; to extend aid and protection to their widows and orphans; to perpetuate the memory and history of the heroic dead, and the proper observance of Memorial Day." None would suppose that the G. A. R. needed the aid of another organization for the promotion of these objects, especially as no nation ever lavished upon its defenders so much, both in honors and in money, as ours has given to the soldiers who fought to preserve the Union. The people of all parts of the nation are suffering the burden of excessive taxation largely for the payment of pensions. Few people realize how vast is this sum. There has been paid for pensions from 1861 to June 30, 1886, the sum of $808,624,831.61. The amount paid during the fiscal year closing June 30th, 1886, was $63,797,831.51; for the year previous, $64,933,268.12, or more than $5 for each adult male in the nation. Each voter has already paid nearly $100 for pensions. All this has been borne with admirable patience, though falling heavily on some parts of the nation.

When Congress, last winter, at the dictation of the G. A. R., passed the Dependent Pension bill, which proposed to take annually seventy-five millions of the people's money in addition, the public press very generally protested and heartily sustained President Cleveland's veto of the measure. If the sons of the veterans wish to keep green the memories of their fathers, they will call a halt in this business of paying for services for the twentieth, and, prospectively, for the hundredth time.

The "proper observance of Memorial Day" I regard as one of those things "more honored in the breach than in the observance." A day that cannot be celebrated by all of the nation, and which annually calls to mind our fratricidal strife, will tend to promote sectionalism and bitterness, and keep alive the animosities that ought, long since, to have died and been buried. There is a growing neglect of our "Independence Day," and mainly because others are taking its place. What we need as a nation is not, so much the glorification of our heroes, whether living or dead, as true national unity, the entire elimination of all sectional and race prejudices. Memorial Day will not tend to promote these objects but rather to retard their coming.

The third object is "to aid and assist worthy and needy members of our order." This may be all right, but it does not appear why "sons of veterans" should need aid more than other men. Surely it did not require a secret order with a vast system of machinery to secure this end. People will have reason to think that, like other secret orders, it was established to build up a privileged class and the fact that they are a self-constituted hereditary aristocracy will not tend to promote public respect.

The fourth object is "to inculcate patriotism and universal liberty." This is surely a commendable one; but I believe that about the least likely of all methods for its promotion is the organization of an order which must in its nature be aristocratic and despotic. The foundation for all true patriotism and national liberty is in Christian morality. Whatever tends to its promotion will make men patriotic, loyal and free. Whatever impairs its influence is destructive of true freedom. But war, more than anything else, breaks up and rudely overthrows all the finer and gentler impulses and principles of our nature. Every war makes a nation morally weaker and more liable to be enslaved. All military organizations, all pompous parades and displays, all efforts to cultivate the military spirit are so many agencies calculated to make men, in the end, brutal and oppressive and unfit for rational liberty. War is barbarism, and I can think of nothing so well calculated to promote the objects sought to be obtained by this order than its entire disbandment and also that of the Grand Army of the Republic.

An insurmountable objection to this order, is its relation to the Christian religion. It makes provision for chaplains and a religious worship. It requires a belief in Almighty God, but makes no mention or reference to Christ, the King of saints and of nations. Moreover, the order is declared to be non-sectarian and non-political, and that the discussion of such topics is "strictly prohibited." Now with such a confession of faith, Christianity is but one of the sects, and its introduction into the order would be, of necessity, ruled out. All the other secret orders that make a belief in God to be the sole creed of the order, so regard the Christian religion. It is placed simply on a par with Mohammedanism and all other systems of worship. To engage in a religious worship that is not distinctively Christian, that does not propose from the first to honor the Divine Redeemer, in whose hands are all power both in heaven and in earth, is idolatry and blasphemy. If these Sons of Veterans meant to have their religious worship such as Christians could engage in, they should at least have declared it to be Christian. They have done nothing of the kind.

The secrecy of the order is an insurmountable objection. This it is declared to be unimportant, and only to fully "protect the order and its members from imposition," but it declares that "any member who shall make the same or any part thereof public," "or shall in any other way divulge any of the private affairs of the order, shall, on due examination, be dishonorably discharged."

Not only does membership in such an order give a practical endorsement of the whole secret society system, but whatever might be the "proceedings" of any Camp, Division or Commandery, however disgraceful or criminal, no member has a right to reveal them. If he shall do so, he is expelled and his testimony discredited. He may not tell his wife or most intimate friends, and is bound to assume that all such secrets are forever hidden from public observation. A military order, however patriotic may be its professed objects, is liable to abuse, and ought to be open to inspection.

The building up of such an order in our land can only be regarded as a national calamity, and one of the many evidences of a decline in national morality.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., July 6, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The celebration of the 4th leads us to think of the vocation of this great nation. A writer has said: "All the lines of history point to America as the place and the present era as the time when a true Christian republic will be realized." America is the home of civil and religious liberty. It is a remarkable providence that Martin Luther was only nine years old when Columbus was sailing westward, so that, while Luther and Calvin were announcing the principles of civil and religious liberty on the continent, God was opening up a home for them here in the West. By the flight of birds Columbus was led southward, taking his Roman Catholicism to South America and reserving North America for Protestantism. The battle for human rights has been fought here, and "liberty" has been proclaimed throughout all the land, to all the inhabitants thereof. The battle for the divine rights in civil and national affairs is to be fought here. The hosts are gathering. On one side are the Anarchists, Romanists, Mormons, the drink system, etc.; on the other, the National Reform Association, the N. C. A., the W. C. T. U., and the Prohibition party. The bugle is sounding. The battle is being joined. But the issue is not uncertain.

The enemy is already afraid. When one of the fraternity entered the monastery of the Gray-friars where the provincial council of the clergy had been sitting for days plotting the overthrow of the reformation in Scotland, and exclaimed in terror: "John Knox! John Knox is come! He slept in Edinburgh last night!" the council was panic-struck and dispersed in great haste and confusion. The announcement that the Prohibition party has come into politics has stunned and terrified the liquor traffic. Queen Mary said she feared the name of John Knox more than any army of ten thousand men. It is certain that the drink system in Ohio fears the name of Leonard more than ten thousand Republicans who would tax the system to death.

When the Scotch Privy Council resolved that the ecclesiastical revenues should be divided into three parts; "that two of these should be given to the ejected popish clergy, and the third part should be divided between the court and the Protestant ministry," John Knox exclaimed: "I see two parts freely given to the devil, and the third part must be divided betwixt God and the devil." A gallon of whisky sells for $1.10. On this the Government collects 90 cents revenue. That is, two parts are given to the liquor traffic and nine are reserved. The Government collects about $90,000,000 revenue on liquors annually. For the sake of that it not only tolerates but encourages the liquor traffic in robbing our nation annually of $1,500,000,000, withdrawing from useful occupation 600,000 drunkards, and sending to a drunkard's grave 60,000, besides the heart-broken widows, fatherless children, ruined homes, and countless crimes of which it is the immediate cause. This cannot long continue. Such a confederacy with iniquity must be punished.

Bunyan in his "Holy War" gives us a graphic description of the decisive conflict between the citizens of Mansoul and the followers of Diabolus. During the long hours of the day the field was hotly contested. Now the forces of Mansoul seemed to triumph, as their enemies flew before them when they shouted, "the sword of the Lord and of Gideon." But ever and anon the Diabolonians would rally and drive them back. But at last when "the day with his sandals dipped in the dew was passing through the evening's golden gate," Immanuel was seen coming, with banners flying, trumpets sounding, and the feet of his men scarcely touching the ground, they hastened with such speed. Courage now filled their hearts. Joy ran along their lines like a telegraphic flash. The Diabolonians are panic-stricken. In the midst of these forces they fall down slain like the Israelites on Mt. Gilboa, and a signal victory is won. There is a great moral conflict upon us. Numbers and wealth are on the side of our foes. Israel is like two little flocks of kids while the Assyrians fill the whole country. But God says, "Fear not; more are they that be with us than all they that be with them." Immanuel is coming. The shout of victory is being raised. Our enemies are afraid and ready to flee for their lives. "One shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight."

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Avondale Presbyterian church. It was a good summer audience. I told them that national sermons were being preached in most of the 75,000 pulpits in our land on that day. America is called in the providence of God to take the lead among the nations in exalting Christ to the throne. The eyes of the nations of Europe are upon us for a model. Let us hold up before them a perfect pattern, a true Christian republic, a nation in allegiance to the King of kings. In the afternoon I attended a "Patriotic Service" in the Y. M. C. A. Hall. The address was made by Rev. E. L. Ralston, Congregational minister in Newport, Ky. His theme was "Loyal Citizenship." In the evening I preached on the Mediatorial Dominion of Christ over the nations in brother Ralston's church. I told them that this was the question of the hour. In the early Christian centuries the church was called to defend the prophetic office of Christ and hence those ecumenical councils which met to determine the teachings of the divine Word.

In the first Reformation in Germany in the sixteenth century the church was called to defend the pontifical office of Christ and hence Martin Luther's doctrine of a standing or a falling church, "the just shall live by faith." In the second Reformation in Scotland in the seventeenth century the church was called to defend the headship of Christ over his church and hence the fact that 18,000 Covenanters were willing to lay down their lives as martyrs rather than recognize a human head in the church. But today the church is called to defend the kingship of Christ over the nations. And hence we say it is the question of the hour.

The Hon. James G. Blaine is enjoying a great ovation in Britain. It is certainly true that though a private citizen he is a greater man than most in high official positions to-day.

"Pigmies are pigmies still, though perched on Alps,
And pyramids are pyramids in vales."

There is a crying evil in our day which loyal sons of America should band together against with the famous battle-cry of Drumclog, "No Quarter"—and that is slandering our public men. The evil prevails in both church and state.

J. M. FOSTER.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

When the patriots of the Revolution fought and died for liberty there can be but little doubt that their patriotism was more or less adulterated with selfishness. They fought for freedom for themselves and posterity, and not for foreigners. If they did, their descendants, to-day, dishonor their noble intentions. Young America, directly from the stock of '76, extends no hand to their foreign brothers welcoming them to the land of anti-monarchy; in fact, are rather opposed to their coming. Our boasted sentiments of liberty are all a myth so long as bound in the chains of selfishness. We are not a liberty-loving people in the full sense of the word. And yet, this great multitude of people whose ancestry had no part in the great struggle for Independence are the most enthusiastic in celebrating the anniversary of the event.

On the 4th inst., before the sun sent its scorching rays upon the city, away into the small hours of the morning, the hideous tooting of discordant horns, and the cracking of fireworks, and the reports of guns, were caused mostly by the foreign element. American independence is celebrated with more vigor by foreigners than by the genuine Yankee. Between midnight and daylight of the 4th there were twenty-four fire-alarms sounded, which was the largest number ever rung in this city in one day. The nearest approach was July 4, 1861, when fifteen were rung. The roughs of Mattapan, an annex, opened the pyrotechnic display of the day by blowing up a small powder house. The law against selling and exploding fireworks of any kind in this city is very stringent; nevertheless, the fire record of the day proves that it takes something more than law to cause the people to do right.

The Common, as usual on this day, was thronged by our country cousins; the citizens having meanwhile taken themselves off to the country. Thousands went to the sea shore, to Nantucket, Boston's "Coney Island." Amusements were provided by the city for school children in several of the large halls. Speeches ringing with patriotism were delivered at the Boston theatre. In the evening a display of fireworks was provided by the city government on the Common.

The temperance people celebrated the day by a trip to Lake Walden, where a large number of the most brilliant lights of the cause renewed their expostulations against the rum traffic.

With all the danger attending it, the celebration of July 4th certainly keeps the spirit of '76 alive. The only objection being the risk of burning down the city. Whoever invents an explosive which will leave no burning debris, nothing to lie smouldering in basements nor on roofs, will not only make a fortune, but a glorious reputation among our Young Americas and with insurance men.

REFORM NEWS.

LET INDIANA ADVANCE.

Ohio leads in the list of new subscribers to the Cynosure in the twelve months past. Indeed it is pushing to the front all along the line, owing largely to the fact that it has kept an agent in the field for two years and by the help of the N. C. A. sustained him. The agent of two years past will soon return to his field hoping to do more in the next year than in the two preceding ones. He has a foothold "where he can plant his feet and lift."

WHAT ABOUT INDIANA?

Is it not about time the friends in that Quaker State were waking up? I think so. Now I have just this to say of the what about Indiana? The N. C. A. can furnish a live, energetic young man, experienced in the work, who is now ready to enter the field. The N. C. A. will give $25 per month in new Cynosure subscribers towards sustaining this young man or any other competent agent who will work in line with the general movement, and co-operate in every way practicable in helping on the cause. E. A. Cook will further donate a liberal amount of anti-lodge literature, which can be sold by the agent in aid of the work, and two years of solid work in Indiana would make Ohio or even Illinois look to their "laurels."

Now what is wanted is a response from the friends in the State. I have told you what the N. C. A. and E. A. Cook will do; and now I want to know what you will do. How many will give one, five or ten dollars per month from September 1, 1887, to May 1, 1888? Or what will you give? You can have the man and you need him. The N. C. A. will help you if you will help yourselves. Your Treasurer, Benj. Ulch, is I think, absent from the State, but Bro. Wm. H. Figg, of Reno, is accessible, and you ought not to give him any rest until he calls a State meeting and puts the lines in motion. If you will send your pledges to W. I. Phillips, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, or your cash for the work, he will account for every penny to your treasurer when you meet and elect one.

FINALLY,

I want to hear from you before the first of August, for if you do not want this young man, there are several other States that do, and the cause cannot afford to dispense with his services or delay unnecessarily. Very respectfully and to whom it may concern,
J. P. STODDARD.

INTO OLD VIRGINIA.

BRETHREN HINMAN AND COLE CROSS THE POTOMAC.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Bro. Cole and I have invaded the sacred soil of Virginia and gotten a foothold in the ancient city of Alexandria. Rev. Fields Cook is pastor of one of the leading colored Baptist churches. He is a man of liberal education, and has been a Mason, but had forsaken it for the Lord's sake. I found him well acquainted with Masonic authors and having a full understanding of the philosophy of the system. He was glad to have Bro. Cole and myself speak to his people, though nearly all of them belong to secret societies. Our meeting was fairly attended, and we had excellent attention. Bro. Cole spoke of African secret societies, describing their ceremonies, comparing them with Freemasonry. It was plain that some of them felt that in thus speaking he reproached them also; but his manner was kind and they could not take offence. To what I said they listened with no apparent opposition. After arranging for further work we came back to Washington, reaching here at 11 p. m.

Last night we went to the Metropolitan African M. E. church in this city, where we met a fair-sized and very intelligent audience. Bro. Cole spoke an hour on Africa and its institutions, and another hour was spent in hearing and answering questions. I have rarely found a congregation so well informed on the geography, the history and customs of Africa. Most of the men were Masons and did not hesitate to accept their brethren of the Purroh and Kofong as such in fact, if not in form. I hope that some saw that both African and American heathenism are wicked.

We have about finished our work here and expect soon to start for Norfolk, Richmond and the South.
Yours in Christ, H. H. HINMAN.

SUMMER CANVASSING.

WORKING TOWARD A STATE CONVENTION IN ILLINOIS.

BYRON, Ill., July 2, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have only time for a brief note this morning, but wish to let the friends know of the progress in this section. Leaving Wheaton one week ago, my first stop was at Creston. Here I found the secretists numerous and work needed. From thence brethren I. Mettler and F. Countryman conveyed me to Rev. J. N. Bedford's, a distance of some eight miles, each going half the way. Bro. B. made me very welcome on the score of old friendship, and invited me to occupy his pulpit Sabbath-day, which was just what I wanted. I spoke morning and evening to good audiences. At the conclusion of the evening discourse, several of the friends manifested their interest in our cause by contributions to its support. Bro. D. Countryman, who has gone to reap the reward of his labors, will long be remembered by those living in this neighborhood, as a zealous worker in opposing the powers of darkness. Men die, but truth lives on. Others have taken up the standard which he dropped.

Returning to Creston I made a few calls and left tracts at several of the stores. The Methodist minister said that personally he was opposed to the lodge, but he did not think best to have anything said about it in his church. From here I accompanied Bro. Conrad, who had come on from Wheaton, to Rochelle. Bro. Arnold's lectures, given a little before, had caused quite a stir, so we found it an opportune time for effectual work.

We next proceeded to Forreston where we found Bro. Arnold was meeting with his usual success. We attended the last three lectures. About seven hundred people were present each evening. The lectures were clear and forceful and will make a lasting impression for good on the minds of those who had the privilege of listening to them. There was no harshness, but a mild, firm presentation of the facts. On the last evening the similarity of the ancient nature worship and the worship of the lodge was so clearly shown that one could not fail to see their identity.

Bro. Conrad takes hold of the work with energy. We canvassed together in the neighborhood of Forreston and secured several new names for the Cynosure list. He has some interesting experiences as have all others who have worked in this line. At Rochelle he was very much astonished, and somewhat righteously indignant, to find that the Presbyterian minister thought he could not oppose secret societies until the presbytery decided that they were wrong and authorized him to oppose them.

After helping Bro. C. what I could and planning his work for the northwestern part of the State, as far as profitable to work in connection with Bro. Arnold, I came on to Leaf River, where I secured three readers for the Cynosure and left an appointment to return and lecture on next Tuesday evening.

I have talked with some of the friends about the next State meeting. Bro. Arnold suggests that it be at Belvidere some time in September next, and that he precede it with his course of lectures. What say you, friends, when and where shall it be held? I am now enjoying the hospitality of Dr. J. Blount, a man highly esteemed in this community because of his consistent Christian life. W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ANTI-MASONRY IN WEST AFRICA.

Rev. J. Augustus Cole, now lecturing for the N. C. A. in Virginia, lately received the following letter which he sends for publication as a voice from one of the most influential and educated sons of Sierra Leone, West Africa, on secret societies:

FREETOWN, Sierra Leone,
West C. Africa, May 16, 1887.

Rev. J. A. Cole,

MY DEAR PROFESSOR:—I thank you much for the parcel of Anti-masonic tracts and papers received from you lately. It is wonderful how Providence leads us, in what hard schools he educates us for the most useful purposes afterwards. Who would have thought your sojourn in the interior, in the very darkness of our darkest superstitions, was a way to raise in you a great advocate for the truth. Go on, my brother, and God will prosper you abundantly. Fight on, my brother. God is on our side.

You judge rightly when you suppose what my views are on the question of secret societies. I am carried back many years in the thought of my dislike to these societies. I remember in '74, during the Ashantee war, how my friends were anxious to make me a Freemason. Without any settled conviction, I still dislike the idea, believing it will make my brethren of the church (I was then as I am now a local preacher) doubt my sincerity to the cause of Christ; and so I playfully remarked that they cannot make me any more a Mason than I have been, by serving a full term of apprenticeship to that trade—perhaps you will remember that I was a mason by trade. And now in the light of day, with the experiences I have gained and the knowledge I have acquired in the government service as a master of trades, engineer, surveyor, printer, etc., I hope to be useful indeed in directing the ideas of those poor children whom you may be enabled through the help of liberal-minded people under God to collect to be taught labor in your proposed Industrial Institute.

There are no Masonic or other secret societies here but Templars (though there are several lodges further south on the coast). The Masons have just now in contemplation, the establishing of themselves permanently here. We will therefore be on the look out in time to weaken their movement, if not altogether intercept it. I am already working against them silently, but surely.

I will advertise the catalogue of some standard works on secret societies as per the supplement you sent me from the National Christian Association. I am quite prepared for my share of the work which I have every faith in, and one which I think will bring out my best energies in a good and praiseworthy service. May God help us on. Yours very faithfully,

S. H. A. CASE.

THE LODGE REBUKED IN CANADA.

The Guelph Conference of the Canada Methodist church have just closed their labors. It was my privilege to be a witness of their mode of distributing their ministers and probationers among the thirteen districts and the one hundred and thirty-three stations. Many interesting things might be noted. Five probationers were voted worthy to be received into the ministry. Among them was Jas. T. LeGear, a convert from Romanism, whose experience thrilled the large assembly with deepest emotion. All are young men of great promise.

Dr. Douglas, principal of the Montreal Methodist College, supported the motion for the reception of these young men into the ministry with a thrilling discourse on the need of the Holy Spirit's work for life, power and efficiency in God's service. The audience were spell-bound with his chaste diction, brilliant metaphors, classic lore, and Scripture proofs seen by the eye of faith alone. He sees spiritual things clearly. On Sabbath forenoon also his sermon on the Trinity showed him to be a master in Israel. I had the pleasure of spending an hour with him in his hotel and his highly accomplished lady who is eyes to the blind and hands to the lame. This friendship can never be severed till death do us part only to meet in "the general assembly and church of the first born" whose names are written in the Lamb's book of life.

This church, like the United Presbyterian church of North America, to which I belong, leaves the old men out in the cold on the supernannated list that the young men with fine, glossy black hair may come forward and take the chief places. This was because the pews would have it so. But a local preacher with very grey hairs reminded Dr. Griffen, the ex-president, who ably supported James Hannon, president for this year, that they, the pews, were of the doctor's own hatching and as they hatched the chickens, so they would grow up round about them. Teach the young to respect age and they will do it.

The visit of Dr. Smith, the moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, who had just returned from Winnipeg; and of the Rev. D. A. Duff, moderator of the Stamford Presbytery, who had just returned from the General Assembly's meeting of the U. P. church of North America at Philadelphia, was the source of great merriment and glee, as both gentlemen hoped the time was near when there would be a greater union in Canada still, and then all would be one.

An incident occurred at this time to which I call the special attention of the readers of the Cynosure, and especially of those of the United Presbyterian church. Dr. Potts of the Metropolitan church was invited to address the conference on the claims of the new college to be built in Queen's Park University grounds, Toronto, to cost half a million—or not less than $450,000 before beginning operations.

Dr. Potts remarked the entrance of a reporter whose presence among them filled him with alarm. If he had that reporter's ear and could whisper one word into his ear as he could and had done into the ears of brother Smith and dear brother Duff, he would have no suspicion of his presence here. He could call them brethren and fear nothing, but him he could not trust.

It was now the last day. Bro. W. C. Henderson, pastor in charge of the handsome edifice in which the conference assembled, asked me up to the platform to be introduced to the brethren. The Holy Spirit took hold on me and made me drop the two or three sentences I took thought beforehand to say, and made me show them what he had written on my heart and life.

I told them I was not a reporter for any paper and made a living by no such calling. What I reported was for Christ. I could receive no whisper from Dr. Potts's lips that I would not be permitted to preach upon the housetop. But as according to Dr. Potts, both Dr. Smith, moderator of the Presbyterian church in Canada, of which for many years I was once a minister and into whose fund for aged and infirm ministers I had for many years paid as God had enabled me,—from that fund no help could come to me now. Reason why? I had discovered that many of its ministers had sworn by the square and compass of Freemasonry and bound themselves by an everlasting covenant to worship and serve the devil rather than God, who is Lord over all and blessed for ever!

I cannot pronounce "Mah-hah-bone," or "marrow in the bone," or "Jesus is accursed," in any devil-worshiper's ear. If any of you in this conference have done so you have no right to eat the bread of the holy sanctuary from the hands of I. K. Smith or of D. A. Duff. I shall never receive the elements of my Saviour's broken body and shed blood from such hands as have been polluted with Masonic idols, nor the Word of God from lips that have spoken the covenant with death and agreement with hell, till they repent of their sin, confess the same, and abjure it forever.

With dear brother LeGear, who has repented of his sins of blasphemy, profanity and ungodliness in every form, confessed and abjured them, and is now forgiven through the blood of Jesus, and with Dr. Douglas, who hates such wickedness and never practiced it, I could commune, but not with my co-presbyter Duff, or with his people whose sympathies are, in many cases, far from being in harmony with their testimony and their standards, of which they are ashamed and trample them in the dust, rather than raise them in the face of the enemy that all may see, and around which all true lovers of God may rally.

I shall not be surprised if many Freemasons confessed their sins to Bro. LeGear before they left for their stations. If so, my eight years of Sabbath rests at Galt with my family have not been altogether wasted. Let Dr. Dales take notice. Am I not justified in not communing with this congregation at Galt?

How sad it is to think that all the churches in British America to-day are hatching cockatrice's eggs that shall become vipers and fiery flying serpents to sting those and their children who called them into life. But every bite or sting is deadly and the devil forestalls the possibility of their salvation from death by destroying their faith in Jesus.

May God's Holy Spirit be poured out upon the secret chambers of imagery till Satan's stung and dying victims may lift their languid eyes to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON IV.—July 24.—The Baptism of Jesus.—Matt. 3: 13-17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased.—Matt. 3: 17.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

COMMENTS ON THE LESSON BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Measure of our Spiritual Power is the Measure of our Humility. vs. 13-14. "Among them that are born of women there hath not risen a greater than John the Baptist." This was our Saviour's estimate of John's mental and spiritual greatness. Ruskin tells us "the test of a truly great mind is its humility." In the meagre details of John's life, as given in the Gospels, we find no trace of self-exaltation but rather the most complete self-abnegation, or rather, self-ignoring. He felt himself to be nothing, the truths which he preached everything. He was simply a light-bearer, heralding the dawn; and when the true Light rose he was willing, glad to sink into obscurity. It is a law of mind that all great triumphs of art, science, or philosophy must be won by men willing to give up the passing ambitions and pleasures of the hour; men who, as some one expresses it, have not only an earnest life-purpose but who throw themselves after it. This is a characteristic which the true preacher must possess not in less, but in far greater degree than other men. Their work may endure for ages, but his work is to endure for eternity. John shrinks from baptizing the sinless One. He felt his own need rather to be baptized of him, and the higher we ascend in the scale of spiritual purity the less we shall find to admire in ourselves, and the more conscious we shall be of unreach heights yet to be attained.

2. Obedience our one Duty. v. 15. Both Christ's example and John's brings out most vividly the beauty of simple obedience. Jesus as a man submitted himself to his Father's law. It was not needful that he should be baptized for the remission of any sin of his own, but it was needful that he should obey God's command; and while men may wrangle over the forms of baptism, no one sincerely obedient, with Christ's example before him, can refuse to obey this simple requirement. John showed his obedience. It would have been false humility had he refused, and there is a great deal of false humility in the church and the world which is far from being the spirit of true obedience. To shrink from a public profession of our faith in Christ for fear that we may bring disgrace on his cause is an instance. True humility takes hold of his hand who alone can keep our feet from falling, and goes boldly forward. Many of us feel opportunities for good slip, because we imagine that what is needed are great talents and superhuman devotion. What really is needed is simple obedience, to hear God's call and do what he tells us. We honor God most when we accept our opportunities, knowing that he can and will work through the humblest instruments. In the cause of reform, especially, many are hiding their light under a bushel, thinking they lack especial gifts for the work. But what reform work needs most of all are the uncommissioned laborers, who may have no particular talents of speech or pen, but who on every occasion make their influence felt for the right. "Ye are my witnesses," saith the Lord; witnesses for righteousness against sin, for light against darkness, for God against Baal. This is the obedience that is better than sacrifice.

3. The Spirit of Obedience is the Spirit of Sonship. vs. 16-17. It is only by obeying God that we can claim a child's right, but if the Spirit of Christ be in us, "doing always those things which please him," then, though there may be no audible nor visible sign from the opening heavens, we may be sure that we are sons and daughters of the Almighty, in whom even infinite righteousness is well pleased.

From Peloubet's Notes.

"For thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." To leave nothing undone, which would be honoring to the seemly and significant ordinances of God. 1. As John's baptism was not "of men," but "from heaven" (Matt. 21: 25; John 1: 33), it became Jesus to countenance and receive it, and John to administer it. It would have been unbecoming, indeed, for our Lord to have submitted to it, if its symbolism had been entirely inappropriate to one who was without sin. But it was not. It was the symbol of the baptism of the Spirit, who was given to him "without measure" (John 3: 34). It was the outward picture of an inward fact.—Morrison. 2. The true meaning appears to be, because Jesus was consciously certain that he must, agreeably to God's will, subject himself to the baptism of his forerunner, in order to receive the Messianic consecration; that is, the divine declaration that he was the Messiah, and thereby to belong from that moment solely and entirely to this great vocation.—Meyer. 3. Our Lord was now at the age (the 30th year) of the priests at their entrance into office (Num. 4: 3). And here we have his submission to John's ordinance, to "fulfill all (legal) righteousness" (see Exodus 29: 4).—Jacobus. 4. It was meet that he should fill up the full measure of righteousness in all its forms by accepting a divine ordinance, even, perhaps, because it seemed to place him in fellowship with the sinners, with whom at the beginning, as at the close of his ministry, he thus identified himself.—Ellis. It was a public renunciation of sin and a public profession of religion. It is true that Christ himself knew no sin and needed no repentance (John 8: 46; 14: 30), but he was numbered with the transgressors, and carried our transgressions (Isa. 53: 12; 2 Cor. 5: 21). In taking upon him human nature, he took all its humiliation and all its duties, though none of its real degradation, and fittingly commenced his public life by a public renunciation of sin for himself and his followers.—Abbott.

"The heavens were opened." An apparent separation or division of the visible expanse, as if to afford passage to the form and voice which are mentioned in the next clause. Compare similar expressions (Isa. 64: 1; Ezek. 1: 1; John 1: 51; Acts 7: 56). In all these cases the essential idea suggested by the version is that of renewed communication and extraordinary gifts from heaven to earth.—Alexander.

"And lighting (coming) upon him." John (1: 32) says: "It abode upon him;" the outward sign was temporary, the anointing was permanent. His active ministry now begins in the Spirit, which he received without measure (John 3: 34). The baptism with the Holy Spirit of One "conceived by the Holy Spirit," is a divine mystery. In one light it was but the outward sign of that which was his already. At the same time, our Lord had a human development from one degree of holiness to another, rising higher and higher at every stage of life, in proportion to its capacities (comp. Luke 2: 40, 52; Heb. 5: 8). This event marked the age of maturity; the attainment of the full consciousness of his nature and mission as the God-man and Saviour. There time had come for him to begin his official work; the Divine Spirit now entered "into some new relation with the Incarnate Son, with respect to the work of salvation, and the God-man received some internal anointing for his work, corresponding to the outward sign."—Revision Com.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY SPIRIT, as a preparation for religious work. No one is fitted to teach or to work for God till he has received the Holy Spirit and its power. Our teaching till then is seed sown in the winter, is gunpowder without fire, sails without wind. We need the Holy Spirit (1) to give us life, to be like the sunshine and rain of spring to our souls; (2) to open to us the Word of God according to the promise, that he would testify of Jesus (John 15: 26), and guide us into all truth, and take of the things of Jesus and show them unto us (John 16: 13, 14); (3) to be our guide; (4) to purify us from sin; (5) to teach us to pray (Rom. 8: 26); (6) to aid us in teaching (Acts 1: 8); (7) to convince and convert our scholars (John 16: 8-11); (8) to fill us with the fruits of the Spirit (Gal. 5: 22, 23).—P.

EXERCISES OF THE HOLY SPIRIT. WATER, cleansing, purifying, refreshing, abundant, freely given. FIRE, purifying, illuminating, searching. WIND, independent, powerful, sensible in its effects, reviving. OIL, healing, comforting, illuminating, consecrating. RAIN and dew, fertilizing, refreshing, abundant, imperceptible, penetrating. A DOVE, gentle, meek, innocent, forgiving. A VOICE, speaking, guiding, warning, teaching. A SEAL, impressing, securing, authenticating.—Elon E. Foster.

THE LAND OF THE FREE.

BY CHARLES W. LAMB.

Tune:—Be True to your Trust.

We'll sing, gladly sing, of the land of the free,
To which the oppressed from all tyranny flee.
The dangers of battle our fathers did brave,
By God's help our blessing of freedom they gave.

And lands far away feel a glow from its light;
And many the pilgrims our land does invite.
But those who come here greater freedom to find,
Should leave their bad doctrines and methods behind.

Chorus:—We'll sing — of thee —
Thou home of the pilgrim and land of the free:
Oh, long and in peace may it flourish as one,
And freedom's bright banner forever wave on.

We wish to be worthy and faithful and just,
To strive against evils, be true to our trust;
In lawful and righteous ways guarding the right,
Lest freedom should dwindle to anarchy's night;

The good of our country have ever in mind;
Let no secret order our liberties blind.
They are not God's way of accomplishing good;
The spirit of evil doth over them brood.

Chorus:—We'll sing — of thee —
Thou home of the pilgrim and land of the free.
All powers despotic should here be kept down,
That freedom's bright banner may ever wave on.

These "orders," despotic in titles and sway,
Are organized but to take freedom away.
Oh, let us take warning in time and be wise,
With hearts that are thankful our heritage prize.

The richest of gifts has nature shed here,—
'Tis blest above all other lands far or near;
And yet without freedom, with which we are blest,
Oh, how could we ever enjoy all the rest?

Chorus:—We'll sing — we'll sing —
Till through this broad land our glad anthem shall ring.
The blood of our fathers our liberties won;
May freedom's bright banner forever wave on.

OBITUARY.

RUFUS STRATTON was born at Harvard, Mass., Nov. 11, 1802. He was married April 9, 1834, to Miss C. B. Gibson at Ashbury, Mass., and died June 30, 1887, in the 84th year of his age. His companion for fifty-three years still survives him, and two of their five children have gone before, the other three remaining to mourn.

He was, at the age of 15, deeply convicted of sin, and greatly troubled about his relations to God and prospects of heaven and happiness; but after a protracted and severe struggle he found peace in believing, and for almost seventy years his has been the pathway of the just, shining more and more unto the perfect day.

Of him it may be said, his thoughts were from above, and his supreme affections upon heavenly and divine riches, while he walked with God in the path of daily service to the end. He believed the Word and strove to obey it. He knew that his carnal mind was in enmity with God, and that a new creature in Christ Jesus was an absolute necessity to peace with God. Having in him the same mind which was in Christ Jesus, he was, of course, a reformer in every true sense of the term. He admitted no compromise and made no terms with evil. He took a deep interest in social and political affairs, and was especially active in caring for the sick and destitute about him. He sought them out, and with his own hands ministered to their necessities, at the same time "pointing to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world." He was opposed to shams everywhere and always, in church or society, in high places or low places; and would have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but would reprove them at whatever cost to himself. His record as a friend of the oppressed and active opponent of the slave system is one of which his children may justly be proud. His motto was no quarter to the enemies of God and men. His opposition to the dram shop was unrelenting, and equally pronounced. He saw in it a bane and blight upon humanity, and a curse upon all who come under its shadow. In the secret lodge system he detected another insidious foe of his Master, of the church, of the government he loved, and of the home he revered; and he shrank not from duty whenever called upon to bear faithful witness against so glaring a departure from both the precepts and example of Him who ever spake openly to the world and said nothing in secret; who commissioned his followers to be the light of the world, and faithfully warned them not to be unequally yoked together with unbelievers.

His aversion to the use of tobacco found frequent expression in mild, but positive terms, which were so tempered by love and good will that he seldom, if ever, gave offense to those who differed with him in their views and practices. In a word, it was his clear and controlling conviction, from the time of his conversion, that it was his whole duty to "Fear God and keep his commandments." Upon this conviction his life was modeled, and, though doubtless conscious of many human imperfections, he could look back over the past from the very threshold of eternity and say, as he did to a friend on the morning of the day of his departure, "I do not regret having stood boldly against the popular sins of my day. I know that I was right, and that the truth is of God and will prevail." Looking to the future he had no misgivings, for he had the Spirit of God witnessing with his spirit, that he was joint heir with Jesus Christ to an heavenly inheritance.

His departure was not amid clouds and darkness, harrassed by doubts and dread apprehensions, but the tranquil going down of life's sun amid a halo of glory which is reflected back in the quiet smile that lingered in the silent face when friends looked upon it for the last time. And so he rests until this mortal shall put on immortality, and the dead, small and great, stand before God, "who shall render unto every man according as his works shall be."

JAMES STEWART was born in Johnstown, Montgomery county, New York, Aug. 15, 1808, and died, after a severe illness of eleven days, at his late residence in LaGrange, Wisconsin, June 14, 1887.

He was of Scotch descent, his parents coming from Scotland in 1801, and inheriting the characteristics of that hardy race.

In 1832 he was married to Margaret Guthrie. They removed to Wisconsin in 1842, and together endured the hardships of pioneer life, and shared in its success until her death in Feb. 1886.

He had been in feeble health for some time and death was a welcome release from his sufferings. Seven children survive to mourn the loss of kind and devoted parents.

Mr. Stewart had been a subscriber to the Cynosure since its first publication and heartily endorsed its principles.

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. P. W. Peterson of the Methodist church.

EDWARD BASCOM of Greensburg, Ohio, a subscriber to the Cynosure from its first number in 1868, was thrown from his buggy May 17th, and was instantly killed. He had reached the good old age of 84 years.

THE CHURCHES VS. LODGE-TRY.

The following denominations are committed by vote of their legislative assemblies or by constitution to a separation from secret lodge worship:
Adventists (Seventh-day.)
Baptists—Primitive, Seventh-day and Scandinavian.
Brethren (Dunkers or German Baptists.)
Christian Reformed Church.
Church of God (Northern Indiana Eldership.)

Congregational—The State Associations of Illinois and Iowa have adopted resolutions against the lodge.
Disciples (in part.)
Friends.

Lutherans—Norwegian, Danish, Swedish and Synodical Conferences.
Mennonites.
Methodists—Free and Wesleyan.
Methodist Protestant (Minnesota Conference.)
Moravians.
Plymouth Brethren.
Presbyterian—Associate, Reformed and United.

Reformed Church (Holland Branch.)
United Brethren in Christ.

Individual churches in some of these denominations should be excepted, in part of them even a considerable portion.

The following local churches have, as a pledge to disfellowship and oppose lodge worship, given their names to the following list as

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 14, 1887.

THE AMERICAN PARTY.

This party has already accomplished much. Its platform was declared by the late able, learned and popular Professor Sloane in the Philadelphia Christian Statesman, "Altogether the best platform ever put before the American people." The Prohibition party paid us the compliment of adopting our first article almost ipsissimis verbis, "We hold that God is the Author of civil government," etc., which is a platform in itself. And that "God requires and man needs a Sabbath" is now pressing its way to the front. Our vote for St. John in 1884, in the judgment of Prof. Bailey of the American, was not only wise but "the only wise thing to be done." We are AMERICAN Prohibitionists, and the leading Prohibitionists, St. John, Gen. Fiske, and others, as one of them said to the editor of the Cynosure, are "in entire accord with us." M. N. Butler, whose admiration of the American platform is intelligent and unbounded, soon enters the lecture field. "American," as a party name, is so popular that two or three attempts to steal it have already been made, as we notice elsewhere. The old un-American Know Nothings, by excluding foreign-born Americans from office, branded themselves and the whole of us. For we were all descended from foreigners except John Randolph, John A. Logan, and a few said to be descendants from native Indians.

The thing now to be done is to save our esteemed Miss Willard from joining the Catholics and Knights of Labor to reward their prohibitionism; which her letter in this number shows will not be a difficult thing to be done; and next, to insist on bolting Finch, Stearns, Hastings, and the rest out of their rat-hole lodges. In short, we have only to look steadily to the God of Light, and work and pray and vote steadily against the children of darkness. We did not go into the American party for the spoils of office, but for the triumph of our principles and the salvation of our country, both which we are likely to gain, and that sooner than we saw the downfall of slavery.

BISHOP LEONIDAS L. HAMLINE, whose shadow is fallen on this Cynosure,* was a Connecticut Huguenot, whose grandfather and father (the latter a mere boy), fought in our Revolutionary war. There are fifteen derivations given of the word Huguenot. Probably it came from an obscure French Protestant named Hugues; as the early Puritans were called Brownists, from a noisy ultra man of their party. The Huguenots were not Lutherans; but were French Dissenters from the first, who forged the Protestant doctrines in the furnace-blasts of their own terrible persecutions. On the night of August 27, 1572, 5,000 of them were slaughtered in Paris, and 30,000 in the Provinces, and their long drama of blood ended in the fall of Rochelle, where, of 24,000 people, only 4,000 were left alive. Napoleon, who, when being crowned, snatched the bauble from the Pope's hands, and placed it on his own head, gave the Huguenots their rights; their Albigenian exiles came down from their Alpine fastnesses, and the name Huguenot is now merged and lost in the flourishing Protestantism of France. Such was the blood which ran in the veins of Leonidas L. Hamline.

He studied at Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass.; joined a Congregational church at 16; was a strict Sabbath-keeper; debated with a Universalist preacher; and was expected to become a Congregational minister.

But, "Mere intellect," said Daniel Webster, "is nugatory, and may be cultivated to any extent, without essentially improving the understanding or purifying the heart"; and Connecticut orthodoxy, when young Hamline was born, in Burlington, Conn., May 10, 1797, was, pretty nearly, "mere intellect." His impulsive nature craved a more impulsive religion.

The Revolutionary war, the most justifiable of all wars except our war against slavery, had yet sunk public morals, even in the churches, one-half. The United States Constitution was but three years old at Hamline's birth. Whitefield had died thirty-seven years before; and "The Great Awakening" in which Whitefield, Edwards and Tennent were so prominent, which had baptized the country to prepare it for the terrible seven years war, had died away amid the clash of arms. In that awakening, a great many of the old churches, like the Scotch Presbyterian churches during Cromwell's Protectorate, in their zeal and acclamations, resembled the fervor of an early Methodist camp. But "the standing order," as they were called, had become so staid and formal that the first uneducated Methodist preachers in New England said, "The orthodox churches were going to hell in stone boats with iron paddles."

Hamline's French blood, in the combustible period of life, struck out a course for himself. Teaching school in East Barrington, Mass., he had a revival among his pupils, which spread into the village; and, years afterward, a lady informed Mrs. Hamline that some of the converts of that revival, when her husband was but seventeen years of age, were then elders in the East Barrington church. A period of backsliding followed, which his biographer, Dr. Hibbard, charitably attributes to "mental aberration," the first symptom of which "was jovial relaxation of his characteristic and strict observance of the Sabbath" (p. 20). He was sent South but was not improved. He says of himself, "I found I was not born again, but like others around me, only 'hoped.'" (Dr. Palmer's Life of Hamline, p. 17.)

But the clear, sound, Scriptural teaching of his godly parents, put him above and beyond the average early New England Methodist preaching which was, to a great extent, railing against "Calvinism;" which Luther taught to greater extremes than Calvin, and Wesley's "Articles of Religion," taken from the English Thirty-nine State Church Articles, state as forcibly as the writings of Edwards, Bellamy, or Hopkins.

Dr. J. B. Walker, lately deceased, author of the "Philosophy of the Plan of Salvation," was about this time at Pittsburgh. He has told us that young Hamline with a boon companion, and followed by a small pack of hounds, came to Pittsburgh on his way to Ohio, then "the West." A facile, genial, and withal artful and ambitious, the butchers gave him meat for his dogs; and though he had given up his "hope," and had never been licensed, he preached in Dr. Herron's First Presbyterian Church. "His services were so well accepted," says his biographer, "that other Presbyterian pulpits were opened for him." (Hibbard's Biography, page 21.) Of course, such a young man would find means to travel. The same writer says, "His success was satisfactory, and his popularity at Pittsburgh unquestioned."

In 1824, he was at Zanesville, Ohio, where he courted and married Miss Eliza Price, an only child, and heiress; and those who have visited Zanesville in after years, have seen in large letters "HAMLINE'S BLOCK" on a row of stores, judiciously built by money received from this marriage, while he lived happily with his young wife in her family mansion. They had four children, one of whom, Dr. L. Hamline, only survives. Three years later, 1827, he took license as a lawyer in Lancaster, O., and seemed to the world fortunate and happy. Dr. Palmer thinks he may have been an "experimental Christian" in his early days (p. 17), and if "born of God" his "seed remained in him" during his long and terrible backsliding, and his soul was not at rest.

He continued in this state of habitual alienation from God and neglect of all religious duty till he and Mrs. Hamline went in 1827 to Perrysburg, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., for a lengthened sojourn. Here he fell in with certain godly Methodist women, whose culture and true devotion made religion respected. He was now (1828) thirty-one years old, a skeptic, but not an infidel. He was drawn into a camp-meeting; was flattered and caressed as a wealthy and talented lawyer; and, in the outcome, was reconverted; as Peter was, after denying and forsaking Christ, whom he had before confessed, and whose traveling companion he had been, in Gospel labor for three years. His two biographers, Palmer and Hibbard, devote pages to a diagnosis and history of this second new birth. His history, genius, talents, wealth, and his gentle, lady-like wife, who believed thoroughly in her husband and wished her own religious experience to follow his, all united to make Mr. Hamline a prominent Methodist. A license to exhort, followed soon by a license to preach, both unasked, were given him; and he soon was on a circuit, with broad-brimmed hat and Methodist coat. His meetings were crowded, and converts were multiplied. In 1836, eight years from his re-conversion, he was in the leading church of the denomination, Wesley Chapel, Cincinnati; and in three months, was in the Book Room on Eighth St., with Dr. Charles Elliott, editing the Western Advocate, the organ of his church.

Here, 1837, the senior editor of the Cynosure made their acquaintance, having arrived in Cincinnati two or three days before Lovejoy was shot in Alton, defending his press, Nov. 7, 1837. In May, 1836, one month before Mr. Hamline was stationed there, the Methodist General Conference had met in that city and censured Orange Scott and George Storrs for praying at an Abolition meeting; and forbade Methodist preachers joining in or aiding the Abolition movement started by Garrison's "New England Anti-slavery Society" four years previous in 1832. Dr. Bailey was at this time conducting the Philanthropist, which had been started by Judge Birney, who was called to New York. Three of Dr. Bailey's presses were destroyed and the city was three days and three nights in the power of the mob. These agitations, with the escape of slaves by the aid of the Abolitionists, led to the sale of slaves from Virginia and Kentucky down the Ohio in large numbers. Among these a worthy family of colored Methodists, parents and children, were sold down the river by their Methodist brethren of Parkerville circuit, and no notice was taken of it by the pastor in charge. As the Discipline forbade such sales, when the preacher's character was before the Conference Rev. Mr. Strickland objected to pass his character because he had neglected to enforce the Discipline in that case. Conference met in the Ninth Street Methodist church, Bishop Soule, who afterward went with the South, presiding. He appointed a committee on the case with an aged Methodist Democrat named Burk for chairman. This Mr. Burk had lately left the church about the birth of a child by a young wife a short time after his marriage; had passed a second probation and was now a member of the church and conference; of course, a bitter pro-slavery politician. He reported that the committee had met, and no prosecution appeared. Brother Strickland arose at once and said he was prompt at the appointment, but the committee had met before the time and dispersed. Bishop Soule discharged the committee and the merciless sale of this family of Methodists went over to the final judgment.

The present writer was taking notes of this case in the Conference when an obsequious preacher appealed to the chair to protect the Conference. But the bishop, with great pomposity, said: "I'm not afraid of papers nor pistols." Having confidence in the piety of brethren Hamline and Elliott I went to these brethren and begged them to give an attested statement of the facts and appeal to the church in behalf of the Methodists sold down the river. They declined. I quoted, "If thou forbear to deliver them that are drawn unto death, that are ready to be slain, doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it, and shall he not render to every man according to his work?" I said also, "How can you, brethren, meet Christ in judgment, who said those should 'go into everlasting punishment' who had not mercy on the 'least' of his brethren? And who are the least of Christ's brethren, the lowest and most forlorn, if those Methodists sold down the river are not they?" They declined to notice it in the paper or even to pray for the slaves in their pulpits! Dr. Elliott in his pleasant Irish brogue said, "Well, we can take a pounding from Bro. Blanchard, for we know he's honest." Mr. Hamline said, "I pray for the slaves every time I go to my knees in private. Perhaps I should pray for them in the pulpit of Wesley Chapel, but—I don't." I published the case and "spared not," as commanded; insisting that if they prayed in secret for the slaves, but refused to lead those to pray for them whose prayers God had appointed them to lead, their prayers, like the incense of false Israelites, were "abomination."

Some years after that, March, 1842, Mr. Hamline went down to New Albany on Saturday night, listened to a sermon on "perfect love," went forward and knelt next day among those seeking it, prayed much of the night, and, Monday morning thought he experienced the blessing of entire sanctification. (See Hibbard, Biography, p. 103.)

In the latter part of that year Mr. Hamline, who was abundant in labors, was holding meetings at two poor little villages, Dover and Levanua, on the Ohio and Kentucky sides of the river, opposite each other. I had not met him since I had severely censured him in private and public. As soon as he saw me in the crowd he reached and drew me to himself, and covered my face with kisses, and then kept on preaching a most admirable sermon which moved the multitude powerfully. Many united with the church. It was near where the young slave mother, pursued by men and dogs, with her babe in her arms, leaped from one floating ice-cake to another and crossed the Ohio, escaping with her life and child. This Dover and Levanua revival is eloquently described in the biographies. The loud, sweet singing of the crowds crossing the ferry from one appointment to the other seems winding up the bluffs among the trees, reverberating in memory still.

Awhile prior to this, Bro. Strickland had applied to Mr. Hamline to admit to the Advocate articles from him on the subject of slavery. His letter declining the articles is given in full by Dr. Hibbard, pages 80-81. He says, "I sincerely believe that the subject (slavery) ought to be discussed and must and will be. But... we should find ourselves in the midst of a tempest blowing from some quarter... perhaps descending upon us from heights as inaccessible to our peaceful charms as the fastnesses of the Ghauts." (Does he mean the Bishops?) "All this we would not deprecate did we not believe it would result in damage to the church." He then cites his speech in 1830 to show "how much of an Abolitionist I was then;" and declares himself more so now; and closes thus, "I feel that this nation must speedily be purged or God will spurn it, blot out its name and commission his curse to dig its grave!"

This was written in 1838, years before he went to New Albany to gain light on sanctification. During these years he was withholding what he knew and said was needful to the churches, and laboring to establish church papers, the Apologist and the Ladies' Repository, both of which "shunned to declare the whole counsel of God" on the subjects where the church most needed light; and he all the time agonizing for "perfect love." Going to church one day he said to Mrs. Hamline, "I would prefer strangling and death rather than the state I am in."

His physique was admirable, yet his health failed early, and he died comparatively young, after being years a confirmed invalid. We advise all who can to read his biographies. They are ably and well written. No one can doubt his sincerity, nor any enlightened Christian his dreadful mistake, which was seeking first the M. E. church instead of seeking "first the kingdom of God;" which is first "righteousness," or righting wrongs, then "peace and joy in the Holy Ghost." Neither let any one doubt the genuineness of his inward experiences. God blesses the mistaken, but not the wicked. And Satan is evermore blending his works with the works of God. The Phillippian damsel was evidently a sincere believer, but Paul cast a devil out of her; and the prophet Micaiah saw Satan offer his assistance to Jehovah to carry out his purposes, and cause Ahab to fall at Ramoth Gilead. Had Bishop Hamline done better or known less, he doubtless had been a healthier, happier man. Moses, Caleb, and Joshua had a vigorous old age because they "wholly followed the Lord;" yet we hear little of their inward experiences, though doubtless they had them, and they are unspeakably important. But "To him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin." Bishop Hamline knew and declared the curse of slavery in 1830, and in 1861 he wrote to Dr. and Mrs. Palmer that slavery had produced the secession, and was throttling our American Government (see Palmer, p. 488). During that thirty-one years of national agony he saw the sword coming, and "blew not the trumpet nor warned the people." Neither as editor, preacher nor bishop did he warn the church of the wolf which he saw coming; but confined his opposition to slavery to private conversation and private correspondence.

So in regard to the lodge system, which organized and sheltered secession and rebellion, and which is now corrupting the ballot-box, jury-box, legislature, and communion table. Bishop Hamline wrote in his journal of Pittsburgh Conference (see Palmer p. 321): "They need better days. SECRET SOCIETIES DO INJURY AMONG THEM." Again, page 323: "North Ohio Conference has progressed rapidly, but Freemasonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us. Oh, how can brethren allow the peace of the church to be thus violated? The Lord will judge in these matters." Again, page 324: "Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil here." All these testimonies are in his private diary. Bishop Simpson wrote us a few weeks before his death, "I have never belonged to a secret society, not even a division of the Sons of Temperance, but I allow others to exercise their own judgment." Bishop Hamline evidently saw more clearly; that secret societies are "a bane," destruction, ruin of the church. Yet Bishop Simpson had just spent near a fortnight in Washington, too, where of fourteen large Methodist city churches in our National Capitol, thirteen pastors were Freemasons. And Simpson, who believed it his duty to shun them, and Hamline who saw them the bane of the church, both silent during their public lives, while the lodges are cutting Christ's name out of the Bible; dropping the date, "In the year of our Lord;" practicing Christless baptisms; destroying the sanctity of oaths, by multiplying them till no one knows what oath men go by; sinking our court houses into popular contempt, and destroying our American Union, as the same false worship destroyed the union of twelve States founded by God himself, in the Hebrew Commonwealth.

But let us rejoice in the legacy Bishop Hamline has left us. Few men ever stated the theory of heart holiness so clearly as he has done; and his post-mortem testimonies are invaluable. His pure morality has never been disputed. He gave largely to benevolent objects; and while his virtues were his own, his sin of shrinking from facing popular evils was, and is, the sin of all great national church organizations.

MASONS AS JURYMEN.

Some twelve years ago a petition was widely circulated through the Cynosure office praying the State legislature, to which it should be presented, to make membership in a secret lodge legal cause for challenging jurymen in courts of law. In Illinois the petition was referred to the committee on swamp lands, and the witty legislators winked wisely at each other. What would Masonry be good for indeed, if it did not help a poor fellow in trouble? Who could say when they might be facing a jury themselves and a convenient sign would help them out?

That was the case years ago. Ever since we have watched for an occasion to test the matter. Mr. Ronayne had a case against the slander-monger Brick Pomeroy and promised to draw the line on Masonic jurymen. That failed. So did the case of the assault on Rathbun at Kellerton, Iowa. We have never succeeded in cornering the lodge in this matter. But a good providence has made the lodge turn upon itself here in Chicago.

In securing a jury for the second lot of boulder cases prosecuting attorney Grinnell accepted three men last Tuesday whom he learned next day were disqualified. He secured a re-examination of these jurors, and they were summarily dismissed by Judge Jamieson. The case of George C. Tate is of interest. He was "Worshipful Master" of National lodge No. 596, and at the same time Varnell, one of the accused men, was Senior Warden of the same Masonic lodge. While thus associated a quarrel arose (such a thing never happened before among Masons) and the two were on the same side of the dispute. The summoning of this juror also had a very suspicious appearance, as the bailiff was steered very craftily to Tate and induced to put him on his list. Mr. Grinnell saw immediately that his case was being swapped off for lodge grips, and though published as a Knight Templar, he was compelled to make a public example of Masonry. Of course there was no questioning why a Masonic jurymen was disqualified. But the tacit acknowledgment of the disqualification told just as plainly of the false oaths of the lodge; and Judge Jamieson's ready decision is to be remembered as settling the question of lodgemen on jury, legislature and swamp committees to the contrary notwithstanding.

HISTORY OF THE SONS OF VETERANS.—In addition to Bro. Hinman's able analysis of the principles of this order, we add a few words on its history.

The first organization known as the Sons of Veterans was made in Pittsburgh, Pa., on a dark, stormy night, November 12, 1881. A charter was procured December 28th, and by the middle of the next February three camps in the vicinity were formed into a division with its "Colonel," "Lieut. Colonel" and "Major." A coat of arms was adopted, badges and the other paraphernalia of secretism followed. Agents were commissioned to proselyte and form other camps, and July 28, 1882, the present title was adopted, and a "Commander in Chief" elected. The succeeding years have been filled up by organizing schemes and picking out members who should bear the multiplying titles of the order.

It will be profitable to those who plume themselves on their superior patriotism in this and similar orders to study the history of the order of the Cincinnati, begun in 1783, "to perpetuate the friendship" of the officers of the Revolution and secure relief for the widows and orphans of those who had fallen. A clause making membership hereditary as in the order above, was opposed by Washington and Franklin, who saw in it the dangerous germ of future aristocracy. The last survivor died in 1854; but the society continues a nominal and useless existence among our army officers, holding one meeting a year in New York.

—An adjourned meeting of the N. C. A. Board will be held next Tuesday, the 19th inst.

—The Birmingham Free Press prints in full a speech of Hon. Thaddeus Stevens at Hagerstown, Maryland, during the Anti-masonic days of fifty years ago, which is a valuable document worth preserving.

—The National Tribune of Washington City says that the coming National Grand Army Encampment at St. Louis "will take action of great importance to all who wore the blue, and this will be followed by the agitation before Congress of legislation of the highest interest. The passage of the arrears bill alone, which we are fighting for, will distribute probably ten million dollars to the veterans of Iowa." Some day the Union veterans will repent that they allowed a secret lodge to lead them to demand such unusual sums from the nation, and will see how unpatriotic it is to be forever hanging on to the government for money, instead of insisting that taxes be reduced and the national debt paid.

—The attention of the workers in Illinois is called to the report of donations from their State, and if any omissions have occurred correct them. If any can send in donations to this work, please do so as soon as possible. Of Mr. Arnold's work we are reading week by week and know of its success. W. B. Stoddard and G. A. Conrad are following in his wake and visiting other parts of Northern Illinois, sowing and harvesting at the same time. Illinois has never had so much work done at this time of the year since the State Association was formed. It seems especially the duty of those among whom these brethren are laboring to give them all the help possible, and for all to put the Illinois Association in their list of objects to which donations are due this coming year.

—It is a duty we exceedingly regret to notice the discontinuance of the Crank of College Springs, Iowa. Its editors, Johnston and Frederick, announce this determination in their last number. The engagement of the senior editor, H. W. Johnston, with the American is one reason for the step. The paper has had all the perplexities and hardships of a reform journal, and has borne up against a "sea of troubles" with a manliness and vigor that has compelled the admiration even of enemies. With such a community as exists in College Springs, and other parts of Page county, Iowa, such a paper should have been well sustained. Editors and contributors have done their work well: they have been fearless, faithful, self-sacrificing in maintaining Christian principles and giving their aid for the establishment of such social conditions as are for the peace and best good of any people. College Springs cannot afford to lose so valuable an influence, and we hope to see the paper soon revived and flourishing in other hands.

LAKE BLUFF CONVOCAION.

MISS FRANCES E. WILLARD.—A FREE PLATFORM.

I have been on the grounds two days. Mrs. Stoddard preceded me and began work at the opening of the meeting. We have met with a cordial reception and received every courtesy shown to any branch of reform. Mrs. S. has conversed with most of the leading W. C. T. U. workers present, and but one spoke favorable of the orders, and her reason was, "My brother is a minister and a Mason. He is a good man, and Masonry must be good or he would not belong." Mrs. Stoddard hopes to get the secret orders before the Training Class for discussion before the institute closes. I have not reached John B. Finch as yet, and may not, as I seldom see him except when riding out in his carriage. John P. St. John, Col. Bain, Col. Sobieski, and in fact all whom I have met, are cordial, and speak freely in private of the lodge, though neither of them, so far as I know, have mentioned the matter in their public addresses. The attendance at no one time has been large, but there has been a constant change, so that we have had opportunities of reaching many from widely different points, and sending out a large amount of literature. The order is perfect, the grounds delightful, expenses reasonable, the meetings harmonious, spiritual and deeply interesting, and the whole thing managed with a tact and skill that evinces a cool judgment and well-balanced mind behind the whole affair. J. P. STODDARD.

REFORM NOTES FROM LAKE BLUFF.

I pencil this while seated under the shade of linn and oak and hickory, on the brow of Lake Bluff. At my feet, down an almost perpendicular descent, curtained by trees and shrubs, are rolling the waves of Lake Michigan. The constant slosh of its waters produces a feeling of quiet rest; and away out upon its blue expanse are vessels sailing in different directions. Lake Bluff comes nearer my ideal of a summer resort than any place I have yet seen. It is back from the dust and din of the railroad, on the most secluded shore of Lake Michigan. It is in the deep shade of a primeval forest, where the whip-

Yet nerve thy spirit to the proof,
And blanch not at thy chosen lot;
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown—yet faint thou not.

Nor heed the shaft too surely cast,
The foul and hissing-bolt of scorn;
For with thy side shall dwell at last
The victory of endurance born.

DANGEROUS COMMENDATION.

A magazine has just been received from the religious society of one of the oldest and most evangelical colleges in the land. There is no reason to doubt that the young men who conduct it love the Lord Jesus Christ, and that they are anxious to make known his truth at home and abroad. Their periodical contains editorials which indicate zeal for the salvation of souls, and a desire to send the word of God far and wide. Probably they have no sympathy with the so-called "advanced thinkers," who deny the verbal inspiration of the Scriptures, the future punishment of the wicked, the substitutionary sacrifice of Christ, the reality of atonement by his precious blood, the fall of the first man from a state of holiness and dignity, and kindred doctrines of the Bible.

Yet the only sermon in it is a political discourse by Canon Farrar, which does not contain the slightest flavor of the Gospel. The editor plumes himself upon the fact that the sermon first appears in his pages, and he speaks of the author in terms of highest commendation. He also prints extracts from the sermons of F. W. Robertson, saying, "No English clergyman of our day has left a deeper influence on Christian thought than the earnest, chivalric, self-denying, suggestive, and independent Rector of Brighton, Frederick W. Robertson. We present our readers with a few selections from this fresh and inspiring preacher." To these he adds, as worthy of particular notice and admiration, a paragraph from the writings of H. W. Beecher.

The name of this periodical will not be given, for, alas! it is not peculiar in the respects just mentioned, and it would be unkind to single it out for special attack. What do the managers of evangelical journals mean by their hearty commendation of such men, without even a protest against their false teachings? Every Christian knows that Mr. Beecher filled the preaching of his later years with fatal errors, that F. W. Robertson denied the atonement, that Canon Farrar rejects the verbal inspiration of the Bible, and holds out "eternal hope" to those dying in unbelief; and yet they are mentioned with far more admiration and respect than men who have devoted their lives to the defence and propagation of the truth. Can it be that in their judgment genius condones the frightful sin, for it is no less than this, of promulgating God-dishonoring and soul-destroying heresies?

But if the bright fresh thoughts and elegant diction of these men entitle them to such high commendation, why do they not speak of Ingersoll with the same enthusiasm? He is not surpassed by either of the three in the use of the English language, in polished rhetoric, in wit and humor and pathos. If it be replied that it would be dangerous to give a place to his name in the columns of papers consecrated to the cause of Christ, it should be remembered that it is still more dangerous to commend Mr. Beecher, because he is more dangerous than Ingersoll. Every young man who hears or reads the latter knows precisely what he is to expect, but the former comes to him in the guise of a minister of the Gospel, only to undermine his faith in that Gospel, and to lead him on by an inevitable process to join the ranks of the arch infidel. A wolf that dashes at you in his native hide is less to be dreaded than a wolf that makes his stealthy approach covered with sheep's clothing. Yet the men who have done more to undermine faith in the authority of God's word, and to subvert the essential doctrines of that word, than a thousand Tom Paines, are lauded to the skies by the conductors of evangelical periodicals, and by preachers in evangelical pulpits.

The extravagant eulogies pronounced upon Mr. Beecher since his death by such papers and preachers have inflicted a stab upon the truth more fatal than the keenest blow of infidelity. It is freely admitted that he was a man of genius, but genius does not atone for false teaching, any more than it atones for crime.—Rev. Dr. J. H. Brookes in The Truth.

TRUTH AGAINST MAJORITIES.

Fellowship between faith and unbelief must, sooner or later, be fatal to the former. "I would thou wert either cold or hot," has a deep significance for us. Truth is truth, and error is error. There the case begins and ends. The blending of light and darkness can at the best only produce twilight, not noon. We may tamper with doubt, we may trifle with certainty, and we may succumb to public opinion, but what will the end be? Has the one great Oracle spoken? Has it spoken accurately and intelligibly? If it has, our only honest position is acceptance of its utterances. Every revealed truth has a distinct personal claim to be believed, however offensive to the taste or spirit of the age. Truth never demands a vote. It refuses to go to the poll or to acknowledge majorities. It presents its evidence and claims submission. To attempt to gather truth out of a multitude of errors, by setting them to neutralize each other, is to revive the vain alchemy of the Middle Ages to turn iron into gold, or to imitate the folly of an old student of prophecy, who gathered some scores of conflicting prophetic dates together, and struck the mean among them in order to reach the true year! We are apt to forget that error is sin; that truth does not reverse itself; that inspiration and non-inspiration are two opposite poles admitting of no medium; that fidelity ought not to cloak itself under the name of candid inquiry; and that candid inquiry should beware of being landed in unbelief, perhaps before it is aware.

There are some who are cowardly enough to trifle with or nibble at truth, but not bold enough to fling it away. It would be well for us to remember that not merely accepted error but undervalued truth has often made havoc of a church and shipwreck of a soul. Much of the teaching of the present day is not in the direction of certainty, and men feel that to be tossed to and fro with curious speculations will make but a poor life for them. Meanwhile Revelation remains to us, and, when human thinkers have spent themselves, it will reassert its authority and power. The cross still stands and with it Jehovah's eternal purpose of grace—grace finding its way to the sinner through the righteous channel opened by the death of the divine substitute.—Horatius Bonner, D. D.

TWO CHRISTIANS.

In no place, perhaps, do the small defects and virtues of men and women come to the light more distinctly than in the hotels and boarding houses which are places of summer resort. The guests have left home to gain health, or to enjoy pleasure, and with this fixed purpose in view they are apt to show a selfishness and ill manner which would be impossible to them in their own homes. On the contrary, nowhere are gentleness, courtesy, and sympathy of a religious man or woman more effective than in this mixed society of strangers.

An example of this was offered last season in a summering house on the Allegheny mountains. A middle-aged, unmarried lady arrived one evening, who was reputed to be Miss Blank, Home-Missionary. Unasked, she said grace in a loud tone at the public table, and the same evening entered the parlor where some young people were arranging charades, and talked loudly against their "criminal folly," proposing a prayer meeting instead. As she failed to touch or interest the girls, they giggled and behaved irreverently during the prayers that followed. The next day she lectured the fishermen on their "cruelty," and whenever she could she took every prettily-dressed woman to task for her "wicked vanity," even denouncing the crochet-work with which two or three old ladies amused themselves, as a "sinful waste of time." Of course Miss Blank became the bugbear of the whole house, and much of the ridicule which her grim face and limp, untidy gown called forth, fell on the Bible which she professed to love and the hymns which she sang unceasingly in a loud key.

"If that is religion, heaven forbid that I should ever accept it!" said a gay, pretty woman to whom she had talked for two hours.

A day or two later a gentle, gray-haired old man came to the house without any introduction. He was quiet and unobtrusive. There was no mistaking the simplicity and fine courtesy of a thoroughbred gentleman, but the distinguished trait in him was his quick sympathy with others. Before a week had passed the old people had confided their ailments to him, the girls consulted him as to the details of a picnic, the boys discovered him to be an authority on kites, boats, and homemade telephones. Wherever he went the children and babies crowded about him. When Sunday came and the guests of the hotel repaired to the parlor to hear a sermon, what was their surprise to find that the quiet old man, whom they had already learned to love, was the famous Dr. —, from New York, whose eloquence had not won so many souls to his Master's service as his pure and noble life. If ever a sermon was listened to attentively, that sermon was. Its simply told and impressive truths will be remembered, and must always be associated with the genial, kindly man who seemed to be the very embodiment of its spirit of "good-will" to men. It is not enough that the light which God has given us should shine; it should so shine that it should guide the feet of others to him—not to drive them away.—Youth's Companion.

A LITTLE ERRAND FOR GOD.

Helen stood on the door steps with a very tiny basket in her hand, when her father drove up and said, "I am glad you are all ready to go out, dear; I came to take you to Mr. Lee's park to see the new deer."

"Oh, thank you, papa; but I can't go just this time. The deer will keep and we can go to-morrow. I have a particular errand to do now," said the little girl.

"What is it, dear?" asked her father.

"Oh, it's to carry this somewhere," and she held the small basket.

Her father smiled, and asked, "Who is the errand for, dear?"

"For my own self, papa; but—oh, no; I think not—it's a little errand for God, papa."

"Well, I will not hinder you, my little dear," said the good father, tenderly. "Can I help you?"

"No. I was going to carry my big orange that I saved from dessert to old Peter."

"Is old Peter ill?"

"No, I hope not; but he never has anything nice; and he's so good and thankful! Big folks give him only cold meat and broken bread; and I thought an orange would look so beautiful and make him so happy! Don't you think poor well folks ought to be comforted sometimes as well as poor sick folks, papa?"

"Yes, my dear; and I think we often forget them till sickness or starvation comes. You are right, this is a little errand for God. Get into the chaise and I will drive you to old Peter's and wait till you have done the errand, and then show you the deer. Have you a pin, Helen?"

"Yes, papa, here is one."

"Well, here is a two dollar bill for you to fix on the skin of the orange. That will pay old Peter's rent for two weeks; and perhaps this will be a little errand for God, too," said the gentleman.

Little Helen, who had taught a wise man a lesson, looked very happy as her fingers fixed the fresh bill on the orange.—Christian Work, London.

A DAUGHTER WORTH HAVING.

Two gentlemen, friends who had been parted for years, met in a crowded city street. The one who lived in the city was on his way to meet a pressing business engagement. After a few expressions of delight, he said:

"Well, I'm off. I'm sorry, but it can't be helped. I will look for you to-morrow at dinner. Remember, two o'clock, sharp. I want you to see my wife and child."

"Only one child?" asked the other.

"Only one," came the answer, tenderly, "a daughter. But she's a darling."

And then they parted; the stranger in the city getting into a street car bound for the park.

After a block or two, a group of five girls entered the car; they all evidently belonged to families of wealth; they conversed well. Each carried a very elaborately decorated lunch basket; each was well dressed. They, too, were going to the park for a picnic. They seemed happy and amiable until the car again stopped, this time letting in a pale-faced girl of about eleven and a sick boy of four. These children were shabbily dressed, and on their faces were looks of distress. They, too, were on their way to the park. The gentleman thought so; so did the group of girls, for he heard one of them say, with a look of disdain:

"I suppose those ragamuffins are on an excursion, too."

"I shouldn't want to leave home if I had to look like that. Would you?" This to another girl.

"No, indeed! But there is no accounting for tastes. I think there ought to be a special line of cars for the lower classes."

All this was spoken in a low tone, but the gentleman heard it. Had the child, too? He glanced at the pale face and saw tears. He was angry.

Just then the exclamation, "Why, there is Nettie!

Wonder where she is going?" caused him to look out upon the corner, where a sweet-faced young girl stood beckoning to the car-driver. When she entered the car she was warmly greeted by the five, and they made room for her beside them. They were profuse in exclamations and questions.

"Where are you going?" asked one.

"Oh, what lovely flowers! Who are they for," said another.

"I'm on my way to Belle Clark's. She is sick, you know, and the flowers are for her."

She answered both questions at once, and then, glancing toward the door of the car, saw the pale girl looking wistfully at her. She smiled at the child, a tender look beaming from her beautiful eyes, and then, forgetting that she wore a handsome velvet skirt and costly jacket, and that her shapely hands were covered with well-fitted gloves, she left her seat and crossed over to the little ones. She laid one hand on the boy's thin cheeks as she asked of his sister:

"The little boy is sick, is he not? And he is your brother, I am sure."

It seemed hard for the girl to answer, but finally she said:

"Yes, miss; he is sick. Freddie never has been well. Yes, miss; he is my brother. We're going to the park to see if 'twon't make Freddie better."

"I am glad you are going," the young girl replied in a low voice meant for no one's ears except those of the child. "I think it will do him good; its lovely there, with the spring flowers all in bloom. But where is your lunch? You ought to have a lunch after so long a ride."

Over the little girl's face came a flush.

"Yes, miss; we ought to, for Freddie's sake; but you see, we didn't have any lunch to bring. Tim—he's our brother—he saved these pennies so as Freddie could ride to the park and back. I guess, maybe, Freddie 'll forget about being hungry when he gets to the park."

There were tears in the lovely girl's eyes as she listened; and very soon she asked the girl where they lived, and wrote the address down in a tablet which she took from a bag on her arm.

After riding a few blocks she left the car, but she had not left the little ones comfortless. Half the bouquet of violets and hyacinths was clasped in the sister's hand, while the sick boy, with radiant face, held in his hand a package, from which he helped himself now and then, saying to his sister, in a jubilant whisper:

"She said we could eat 'em all—every one—when we get to the park. What made her so sweet and good to us?"

And the little girl whispered back:

"It's 'cause she's beautiful as well as her clothes." The gentleman heard her whisper.

When the park was reached, the five girls hurried out. Then the gentleman lifted the little boy in his arms and carried him out of the car, across the road, and into the green park, the sister, with a heart full of gratitude, following. He paid for a nice ride for them in the goat carriage; he treated them to oyster soup at the park restaurant.

At two o'clock sharp the next day, the two gentlemen, as agreed, met again.

"This is my wife," the host said, proudly, introducing a comely lady, "and this," as a young lady of fifteen entered the parlor, "is my daughter."

"Ah!" said the guest, as he extended his hand in cordial greeting, "this is the dear girl whom I saw yesterday in the street car. I don't wonder you called her a darling. She is a darling and no mistake, God bless her." And then he told his friend what he had seen and heard in the horse car.—Sel.

"While Master Walter Gillis was trying to throw his shepherd dog 'Grover Cleveland' into Grimes' pond," says a paper published in Lumpkin, Georgia, "Walter slipped into the water himself. Grover clung to the bank with his fore feet, while Walter held on to the hind legs, and with his own feet sought vainly for the bottom. Grover looked anxiously over his shoulder at his young master, as if he would like to rescue him, but his strength was not sufficient to pull both himself and Walter out. He held to the bank, however, and kept Walter's head out of the water until some boys rescued them. Walter took a long look at the dog and said: 'Grover, when I get home, I'll give you more candy and crackers than you ever had in your life.'"

Of the seventy-five counties in Arkansas forty-four are "dry," having no saloons; thirteen are "partly dry," being to some extent under local prohibition; five are "wet," having no prohibition, and of the other thirteen there are only two which have not some no-license townships, making the State three-fourths prohibition.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION IN IOWA.

Replying to scores of inquiries from Texas regarding the efficiency of the prohibitory law in Iowa, Governor Larrabee recently dictated the following letter:

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of a recent date requesting certain information relative to the prohibitory law of this State and the manner in which it is enforced, has been received. In reply I have to say that our prohibitory law is being enforced in eighty-five of the ninety-nine counties of the State, as well as the laws against other crimes, all malicious reports to the contrary notwithstanding. In the fourteen remaining counties, situated principally along the Mississippi river, and containing large towns abounding in foreign population, the law is but partially enforced, and in a few instances is defiantly violated. These places are, however, gradually yielding to a public sentiment in favor of general enforcement, which is rapidly growing, even in the eastern part of the State. Prohibition has certainly not injured any business interest, except that of the saloon-keeper, nor has it driven any good citizens from our borders. It is true we have lost since the adoption of the prohibitory several thousand incurable vendors of liquor, and perhaps a few hundred incurable toppers, but we have every reason to congratulate ourselves upon such a loss. The Hon. G. W. Ruddick, Judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, and one of the oldest and best of the State, in an official report dated June 11, 1887, makes the following statement: "The jails in this district are now idle, and in eight terms of court held by me since Jan. 1 there has been but one indictment presented, and I think the Grand Juries have been reasonably diligent. Much of the criminal element has certainly emigrated."

The Hon. John W. Harvey, Judge of the Third Judicial District of this State, also makes an interesting statement concerning the influence of prohibition on crime. He has been judge four years and a half. In 1883 he sentenced 31 persons to the penitentiary; in 1884, 23; in 1885, 20; in 1886, 14, and during the first six months of 1887, 3. These were divided among counties as follows: Decatur, 9; Ringgold, 6; Taylor, 8; Page, 11; Montgomery, 28; Adams, 2; Union, 20; Clarke, 6; Wayne, 1. The latter county has been in the district only since last January. Judge Harvey says:

"I am frequently asked what is the cause of this decrease in crime during the last four years. My answer is, the enforcement of the prohibitory law. And it seems to me that the above figures prove this beyond a doubt. The first year I was on the bench the saloons were running; the second and third years they were run in some localities; but the fourth year I do not believe there was a saloon in the district. I am satisfied that there was not an open saloon. Red Oak, in Montgomery county, and Creston, in Union county, were the last places in the district to give up the saloons, and the record from these two counties show the result. The result from these counties is not because they have a larger population than the other counties of the district. Page has a much larger population than either of these counties. In the counties where the law has been best enforced there has been the least crime. During the last year it has not been an uncommon thing—as in this county (Decatur) at the last term—for the Grand Jury to adjourn without finding an indictment. At first, under the present pharmacy law, some of the druggists were disposed to take advantage and abuse the trust imposed in them, but a number of convictions and fines and the revocation of a number of pharmacy permits by the Pharmacy Board has had a wholesome effect, and I believe that a great majority of the druggists in this district are now disposed to obey the law."

As regards the internal revenue of a State, it is no indication whatever of the amount of liquors consumed in that State, for the tax on liquors is paid by the manufacturer and not by the consumer. For several years one of the largest distilleries in the country was in operation here, manufacturing for export only. From that institution alone was collected by far the greater part of the internal revenue of Iowa. It has long been a disputed question whether this distillery could be operated under the prohibitory law, and three months ago on a final test in the District Court it was ordered closed. It is true that both shooting and murder have occurred under the prohibitory law. A minister at Sioux City and a constable at Des Moines were killed in the attempt to enforce the law, but these crimes were in both instances committed by those who had always defied the law. It would be useless to undertake the task of contradicting all the false reports put in circulation by unscrupulous men. Officers may in a few instances have shown a lack of discretion in the performance of their official duties, but this in the minds of candid men will not effect the merit of the law. The law is steadily gaining in public favor, and prohibition is beyond doubt the settled policy of Iowa. Could the prohibitory law at present be submitted to our people for their ratification, I am confident that it would be endorsed by a majority of from sixty to eighty thousand votes.

Very respectfully, Wm. LARRABEE.

OHIO PROHIBITIONISTS.

John T. Moore, of Jackson, Ohio, was made permanent chairman of the Ohio State Prohibition Convention, which met in Delaware June 30, and L. B. Logan, secretary. The platform says of the Dow liquor law that ample trial has shown that it was designed as a seeming concession to temperance, while really putting the cause at a disadvantage. The labor plank was opposed by Ferdinand Schumacher, of Akron, and others, and the convention finally adopted a plain denunciation of anarchy. Woman suffrage was not endorsed.

A poll taken of the convention showed 591 delegates, of whom 151 had been Democrats, and one an ex-rebel soldier. The poll also showed among the delegates 200 preachers, forty physicians and twenty lawyers.

The following nominations were made: Morris Sharp, Washington Court House, for Governor; D. Z. Mills, of Wooster, for Lieutenant Governor; Thomas Evans, of Delaware, Auditor; R. Brown, of Youngstown, Treasurer; John T. Moore, of Jackson, C. H. and Gideon T. Stewart, of Huron, for Judges of the Supreme Court; George T. Crow, of Urbana, for Attorney General, and Abraham Teachout, of Cleveland, for Member of the Board of Public Works.

W. C. T. U. PUBLICATION WORK.

The Woman's Temperance Publication Association was founded less than seven years ago by women, and is controlled by them. It is a joint-stock company, with shares at twenty-five dollars each, which must be held in the name of white ribboners. Its finances have so prospered that it has for the last two years declared a dividend of four per cent. the first and five per cent. the second year.

It employs four editors, and has a total of sixty persons on its pay-roll. Its types are nearly all set by women, and it published last year thirty millions of pages of temperance literature, and this year will not publish fewer than fifty millions. These cover the six divisions of the modern reform as set forth by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union; namely, Prevention, Education, Evangelization, Society, Laws, Worker's helps.

Everything useful in the forming of juvenile societies is provided; also literature with special reference to local option and constitutional amendment campaigns. The White Cross movement has a varied literature of its own from the best pens in England and America devoted to that cause; and all these are published by the Woman's Temperance Publication Association.

As the institution is in no sense a money-making affair, but is wholly conducted and controlled by and for the use of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, whoever prints this item helps the temperance reform to which women are devoting themselves with so much earnestness and skill.—Frances E. Willard.

The East Tennessee Farmers' Convention, in session at Knoxville, Tenn., May 18, more than 300 delegates being present, adopted resolutions favoring the Prohibition Amendment in that State and pledging themselves to work for its success at the polls.

Peoria still leads the world in the collections on whisky. For the fiscal year ending June 30, the figures are $13,657,928; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, the figures were $13,913,331. The collections for the month ending the same day were $1,132,418.

Mrs. S. F. Grubb, superintendent of foreign work for the National W. C. T. U., is making the work of her department felt. She has just had published another French tract on beer and saloons, and is now arranging for the publication of a number of Finnish tracts and a temperance column in two Finnish papers in Ohio. One German temperance lecturer has been sent to Texas, and another will soon go; also a Finnish speaker. Fifty thousand pages of foreign tracts have been sent to Texas free, and more are to be sent, as the foreign element is a great factor in the fight in that State.

poor-will sings at night. One of them struck up its song in the trees above the tabernacle the other evening, while Frances E. Willard was speaking. How its song always carries me back to childhood days in Wisconsin.

When Miss Willard entered the tabernacle I said to Miss West, of the Union Signal, who was sitting by me, "This is the first time I ever had the pleasure of seeing Miss Willard." She said in surprise, "Why, where have you lived?"

But I have been reading almost everything that came from her pen for years, and had seen her picture so often, that I knew her at once. She goes above, rather than falls below your anticipations, as is not often the case with distinguished characters. She is a free, natural, unassuming woman, with no affectation or vanity; her dress is plain, but elegant. She wears no silk, or jewelry, or even corsets; drinks no tea or coffee, and is consequently the very picture of health and beauty. She does not always talk on a plane of exquisite elegance, as one would suppose from reading her speeches. She used such expressions as "blowing the liquor traffic higher than a kite," "more than a dog could shake a stick at," and of Mrs. Leech "being their Grand Mogul on parliamentary rules." It is well worth going to Lake Bluff to see and hear Miss Willard. This is her summer resort and she has attracted the most devoted and talented workers of the W. C. T. U. here from various parts of the land. This is the Mecca of the United States for reform pilgrims. Sitting on the hotel verandas, and sauntering along the shaded walks, are also the familiar figures of Gov. St. John, M. V. B. Bennett, Col. Geo. W. Bain, John Sobieski, John B. Finch, W. W. Satterlee, Joe Critchfield, Prof. Hopkins, R. C. Wylie; and even the stalwart figure of Sec. J. P. Stoddard may be seen, usually with a group of interested listeners around him, while with a bunch of Cynosure tracts in his hand, he expounds to them the hidden works of darkness, as represented by Freemasonry; and as the other reform leaders pass by, they exchange significant winks, as much as to say, "Isn't he getting in his work grandly?"

The motto of Lake Bluff Assembly is, "A free platform—Only bigotry, intolerance and discourtesy excluded." The most radical and advanced sentiment on all reform questions are uttered from its platform. Those bringing tents here, can live as cheaply as at any resort in the land. Bro. R. C. Wylie, of Ray, Ind., the National Reform lecturer, is summing here for a while. He preaches the sermon in the Tabernacle next Sabbath morning, on the relation of government to the Sabbath. Bro. Wylie has always been a close, hard student, and has made a specialty of National Reform questions. No man connected with the movement has clearer ideas than he has on its difficult points.

Last Sabbath I preached two sermons for Bro. T. E. Turner, Sussex, Wis. His is one of the oldest U. P. churches in Wisconsin. Quite a number of his people take the Cynosure since Bro. Browne lectured there last summer. They speak of his lectures as the best they ever heard on the dangerous lodge system. Bro. Turner has read the Cynosure for years, and is one of its devoted friends. Of course his people gave me a good collection for National Reform. We had a prohibition lecture in Bro. J. B. Galloway's church near Vernon, Wis., recently, at which we put Cynosure tracts into the hands of all present. Bro. G. is a staunch friend of the anti-secret cause. Bro. Isaiah Faris of the Covenant Church, chanted a Psalm at the opening of this meeting in quite an impressive manner. Like Bro. Warrington of the Free Press, he is deeply interested in using the Psalms by way of chanting them in praise.

Rev. J. R. Wylie of Michigan went with me to the German Lutheran Synod in Milwaukee, a few weeks ago. We tried to get an opportunity of presenting some reform topics, but the German preachers were not in sympathy with either Sabbath or temperance reform. They seemed afraid of mixing religion and politics. Sec. J. P. Stoddard had given me a liberal supply of anti-secret tracts, with which we dosed them heavily, and were gratified to see them reading them carefully and then putting them in their pockets.

M. A. GAULT.

THE IOWA FRIENDS ON WAR.

The Peace Convention at Pleasant Plains, Iowa, June 27, was a successful meeting, if it gave to the world nothing more than the address of Senator Wilson, which we have the pleasure of publishing this week. The resolutions of the convention are thus reported by Bro. Gibson, the secretary:

RESOLVED. 1. We reaffirm, at this time, the principles of Peace, of Individual, National, and International Arbitration, which have ever been held and advocated by our church.

2. We believe it is a duty we owe ourselves, our fellowmen, and our God, to do all we reasonably can to promulgate those principles, and to encourage those who, by virtue of their public positions, are able to wield an influence in the legislation of our own and other countries, to do all in their power to establish Inter-National Arbitration as the means by which all international questions and difficulties shall be settled.

3. That we earnestly invite our sister churches to diligently and prayerfully consider the duty and influence of the church on this question, and co-operate with us in promulgating this prominent feature of Christ's kingdom, and in encouraging the lawmakers who, by word and vote, are doing all in their power to incorporate peace principles in the laws of our land.

4. We recognize in United States Senator James F. Wilson, of Iowa, who has so ably and earnestly presented the principles of Inter-National Arbitration at this Convention, a wise and able statesman, a faithful and devoted advocate to the cause we have so much at heart, and we hereby extend to him our sympathy, confidence and encouragement, trusting that the wise measures he has introduced and pressed before Congress may soon become the law of our land, and be accepted by other nations.

5. That the grateful thanks of this Convention be tendered the honorable Senator for consenting to address us on this most important national question, and for the instruction and encouragement we have received therefrom, and we most respectfully request a copy for publication.

JOSEPH ARNOLD, President.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. H. A. Day, pastor of the Wesleyan church at Williamston, Michigan, replying to an inquiry respecting his again taking a State lecture work, says that his church has so urgently pressed him to remain another year that he has consented to do so, and can engage no further at present.

—The Presbyterian churches in New Jersey have made arrangements to hold special missionary meetings in all parts of the State, ending November 19. The object is to stir up greater interest in foreign missions.

—Several of the public schools in Brooklyn have had exercises in commemoration of Mr. Beecher. They usually consist largely of declamations selected from Mr. Beecher's sermons, and essays selected from his writings. Will not some of the teachers suggest reading such wholesome truth as we reprint from the Truth on the 10th page of this issue.

—Two hundred churches in Glasgow are banded together in mission work. In one district in that city there are sixty-four churches, fifty-seven of which are in this work, furnishing 1,818 Christian men and women who carry the Gospel to every home in that locality.

—That wing of the Dunkard Church known as the Old Order has been holding its annual session in Canton, Ohio. The adherents of this wing are very conservative, and their mode of worship is exceedingly crude. They eat what is known as the Passover, which is composed of soup made of beef meat. They have large bowls out of which six or eight will eat at once. They have long tables, and these bowls are strung along at convenient distances, which makes their manner of indulging in such a sacred feast very repulsive to the enlightened and fastidious tastes of non-participants. After the feast these Dunkards indulge in what they term the holy kiss—man kissing man, and woman kissing woman. Then the men wash one another's feet, and the women go through the same ceremony, after which preaching goes on.

—Rev. Geo. H. Gilbert was elected to the Chair of New Testament Literature and Interpretation in Chicago Theological Seminary, at the recent meeting of its Board of Directors. Prof. Gilbert was graduated at Dartmouth College in 1878. After spending two years in Germany, in study, he entered Union Theological Seminary in New York. When he had completed its three years' course, he was placed on a fellowship of the Institution, and spent two years more in Germany, receiving the degree of Ph. D. at Leipzig, in 1885. He was engaged a year ago to give instruction in the place made vacant by the death of the lamented Prof. James T. Hyde.

—Rev. E. N. Packard, of Dorchester, Mass., in a late sermon in his own church, stated that the new Andover theology, in regard to future probation, "is working serious injury to the life and activity of the churches." The Boston Advertiser, in referring to this sermon, says: "This is a tangible charge, and goes to the root of the matter." Permit us to say that no matter what the Andover speculators may privately think about future probation, they have no legal or moral right whatever, as the paid teachers of that institution, to spend their time and strength, or give their influence, public or private, to sustain any "hypothesis" other than that which is plainly authorized and approved in the Bible. A pretty example they are setting to another class of "speculators," sometimes found in Wall Street, who do not hesitate to use "trust funds" in violation of "law, equity, and commercial usage." Let the Andover speculators found and endow a theological school of their own if they wish to engage in teaching a speculative theology.—Independent.

—Rev. Edward Mathews, late of Spring Arbor, Michigan, has been for years well known to the readers of the Cynosure, many of whom have heard and profited by his lectures against the lodge. Last fall he became interested in William Taylor's African mission and joined the last company going to reinforce the workers on the Congo. Two letters to his family appear in the last Free Methodist. The following is from a letter to the Guide to Holiness: "In good spirits we left Liverpool, April 20. In about two hours after getting under way, the supper bell was promptly responded to by all our party, of nineteen, including the baby. We suggested at the table that we had better adopt a system of worship, and 7:30 A. M. and 8 P. M. were agreed upon. Bro. Critchlow was unanimously elected Patriarch—and though he shrinks from publicity, I cannot afford to pander to his modesty, and spoil my report. We appointed A. Steel, Sr., as class-leader, and Bro. Critchlow to lead prayer meeting on Thursday night. Bro. Field was made Secretary; Miss Tremble, Bible Class teacher; and the writer, Pastor. So we have a Society organized according to the form of Discipline, here on the Atlantic. To husband our time and resources, we have also a Literary Club. After various suggestions, it was finally unanimously agreed to call it 'The Palmer Literary Club.' Sickness of course interfered, but we have over three days yet, and we expect to read some of Bishop Taylor's, Aitken's, and other religious and scientific works. So far as I am able to ascertain, each and all have undertaken this labor of love for Jesus's sake. Not a murmur or manifestation of home-sickness thus far. The very being of each seems interwoven with the work of Christ on the Pauline Missionary plan. We are not without concern as to how we are to get our 'monster load' of steel, weighing scores of tons, [Bro. Mathews refers here to the river boat for the Congo which he is to put together when their destination is reached.—Ed.] and added thereto, food, raiment, and many other things which God has provided, to Stanley Pool, the objective point. But we shut our eyes and sing, 'Here I'll raise my Ebenezer,' etc. 'Jehovah Jireh' is our motto at present, and as he has provided in the past, so we believe he will in the future 'help those who have no power.' We have your sympathy and prayers, and shall be for the year to come where we imperatively need them."

LITERATURE.

In the Century the Lincoln History closes up the Kansas troubles and discusses their corollary, the "Lincoln-Douglas Debates." Interesting and hitherto unpublished letters by Lincoln and Greeley are given. The history of the Kansas struggle rouses the strongest sense of outraged justice in the reader of to-day; what must have been the indignation of the old anti-slavery men of that day? The veteran historian, George Bancroft, adds to the historical value of the number by recounting "An Incident in the Life of John Adams," to which there are added fine portraits of Adams and Oliver Ellsworth. The War Series, followed since the start by the closest attention of thousands, compasses this month the hundred days of battle in "The Struggle for Atlanta," compactly narrated by General O. O. Howard, with a two-page letter from General Sherman, regarding "The March to the Sea," while in the next number General Joseph E. Johnston, his opponent, is to write of the fight against Sherman. Articles of a timely, out door grace are, John Burroughs' on Wild Flowers and W. J. Henderson on "The Sportsman's Music," "Christian Science" and "Mind Cure," by Dr. Buckley, and "The Potential Energy of Food," by Professor Atwater, and two papers of a suggestive and valuable character by experts in the investigations which they record. Other subjects discussed in the number are, "A New Era in Our History," "Reform in Municipal Government," "College Expenses," "The Metropolitan Spirit," "Labor and Capital," "Christian Union from the Baptist Point of View," "American Students in Germany," "Photography and American Art," etc.

Scribner's Magazine for July has for its opening article an entertaining and instructive paper by Professor D. A. Sargent, M. D., of Harvard College, entitled "The Physical Proportions of the Typical Man," in which the author has for the first time published in detail some of the results of his long experience as a teacher and student of physical training, on which he is, perhaps, the highest authority. It contains charts for accurate physical measurement and comparison, which Dr. Sargent has constructed from the measurements of ten thousand individuals, ranging from seventeen to thirty years of age. The second and concluding article, by John C. Ropes, on "Some Illustrations of Napoleon and his Times," takes up the career of the great Emperor after the peace of Tilsit. This article is fuller than the previous one of estimates of the most important Napoleonic campaigns. It is in this field that Mr. Ropes has studied for many years, and of its details he is a complete master. In addition to a number of fine Napoleon portraits, there are pictures of Wellington, Blucher, Grouchy, and Sir Thomas Picton. The fourth installment of the "Unpublished Letters of Thackeray" contains the fac simile of a four-page letter. "A Girl's Life Eighty years Ago" gives some bright pictures of the old-time social history of New York and New England. The poetry is by Louise Chandler Moulton, Ellen Burroughs and Charles Loun Lildreth.

In the English Illustrated Magazine begins a new story, "Marzio's Crucifix." "Walks in the Wheatfields," an illustrated and finely sentimental view of an English harvest time before modern inventions had broken the sickle and sent the weary binder to other labors. From the private journal of a French mariner, written a century ago, William Frederick Dickes compiles an entertaining sketch of sailor and privateering life; while the mysteries of poaching for English trout are told in an entertaining style by an amateur detective.

H. H. Boyeson, the charming Norwegian writer, begins a story about "Fiddle John's Family" in the July St. Nicholas, and Frank R. Stockton writes of the "English Country" so that with the aid of the fine illustrations the young readers of the magazine can almost imagine themselves set down on an English hill-top to view the scenery. Amateur photography is becoming so popular that a fully illustrated article is given, with directions for acquiring the pleasant art.

In Babyhood Dr. John Dornig, of the New York Polyclinic, has an interesting article on "The Mountains," while Dr. Jerome Walker, of Brooklyn, writes of "Sea-side Resorts for Children." Both articles are timely, and dwell somewhat minutely upon the care of children at both mountain and shore. Dr. Halsey L. Wood has an instructive article on "Fruit: Its Use and Abuse," and the medical editor, Dr. Leroy M. Yale, writes briefly, but forcibly, upon "Children Who are kept in Town," giving some useful hints and instructions. We recommend any person interested in the welfare of small children to at least send for a sample copy to 5 Beekman St., N. Y.

With the number for July 1st, Science begins its tenth semi-annual volume, and celebrates the event by appearing in an altered form and a new dress. It will hereafter be published in the folio form, which is almost universal with popular weekly publications, and the change will without doubt be met with approval by its readers. The price of Science has also been reduced from $5 to $3.50 a year, or ten cents per copy, thus making it more emphatically a paper for the people. 47 Lafayette Place, New York.

Vick's Magazine has advice and information worth ten times its yearly cost in its article on the improvement of grounds. The editor advocates an even, rising grade for lawns, instead of terraces which are more expensive and far less durable, not to say less elegant. In connection are good notes on tree planting. Our mothers will turn with happy recollections to "Old-Fashioned Herbs."

GOOD FOR THE LIST.

We thank the friends for the new subscriptions sent in during the past week.

One sends five new names; another sends sixteen new names, ten for one year and six for six months; another sends fifty for two months each. This shows what can be done in one of the hottest, driest and hardest months of the year for canvassers. We are also thankful for the number of promises received.

H. CURTIS, Orate, Kan.—"I will try hard to keep the subscriptions here to the Cynosure."

AARON BURGESS, Pleasant Plain, Iowa.—"I hope to get some more Cynosure subscribers. It seems this matter is one that drags unless some one looks vigorously after it in time."

And to all others who have said, "I intend to fight the good fight while I live, and I will do all I can to get subscribers for the Cynosure," we assure you that your words are not forgotten, and are appreciated. Let us hear from more workers.

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE

still remains at $2.00 per year, but the N. C. A. at its annual meeting continued the offer for another year of the special rate of one dollar and fifty cents per year in advance.

SPECIMEN NUMBERS.—For ten cents we will send the Christian Cynosure for three weeks to any address, thus giving them a chance to examine the paper and subscribe if they think best. Could you make better use of a dollar of the Lord's money than to send to ten of your friends three copies of the Cynosure?

NOTICE

to those who receive the Christian Cynosure with this item marked. A friend has paid for the paper to be sent to you for a few months, with the hope that at the end of the time paid for you will wish to subscribe for it, but if you do not, the paper will not be sent beyond the time paid for. If for any reason you are not willing to receive it on the above terms, please send notice to that effect at once.

The few fine cabinet photographs of Pres. J. Blanchard which we had, having been disposed of so quickly, arrangements have now been made by which all can be supplied at this office who wish them. Price postpaid 25 cents each.

Are you doing all that you can to introduce the Cynosure? Have you not some friend to whom you could send it?

THE BROKEN SEAL;

Or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan.
By Samuel D. Greene.

One of the most interesting books ever published. In cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper covers, 40 cents; per dozen, $4.00.
This daily interesting narrative shows what Masonry has done and is capable of doing in the Courts, and how men contrived the good men in the lodge and protect their own members when guilty of great crimes. For sale at 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO, by THE NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS ILLUSTRATED.

By a Past Chancellor. A full illustrated exposition of the three ranks of the order, with the addition of the "Amended, Perfected and Amplified Third Rank." The lodge-room, signs, countersigns, grips, etc., are shown by engravings. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Address the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, 221 W. MADISON ST., CHICAGO.

A NEW

Anti-masonic Scrap-book.

A neat pamphlet, comprising forty-three tracts against secret societies, published by the NATIONAL CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION. It contains some of the most powerful arguments put in brief form written by men of distinguished ability, showing the evil nature and dangerous tendency of secret societies. Those who circulate tracts need the book to make their selections wisely.

THE

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons.

The Tiger and His Den.

Cups of Flame.

The Scarlet Sin.

Embezzlement.

The Devil's Printing Press.

Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that do lie melted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of true warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their mask, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the purulent literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prodigal is here shown in its true light, not as a thing of death, now and in future life to be abhorred.—WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy," will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield, "Even his failings tend to virtue's side."

—Cynosure.

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentence he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study.—Free Press.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability.—Times.

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE CELLAR IN SUMMER.

At this season the cellar must be kept cool, dry, ventilated and clean. The doors must be kept closed as much as possible through the day, but they may be opened about midnight, and remain open until early morning. During the latter half of the night the air is cool, and air must be admitted to keep the cellar dry and pure. If kept clean, not a great deal of airing will be needed. If the cellar is damp, fruits and vegetables decay sooner, and it is more unhealthful than is generally supposed. Many attacks of fever, diphtheria, or other diseases, result from damp, unventilated, unclean cellars. Keeping the cellar clean and ventilated, is the best way to keep it dry; it may be necessary to use other means. Lime placed in the cellar will absorb moisture and noxious gases, and thus help to keep the air pure. Charcoal is also a great absorber of gases. The temperature of the cellar may be lowered by putting a tub of broken ice and salt in. The rapid melting of the ice cools the air. This will be convenient when a considerable quantity of fresh meat or fruit is to be preserved. It is impossible to keep the cellar in good condition unless the drainage is efficient, and there is a proper arrangement of doors and windows. Double ones are needed to keep the temperature at the right point in summer as well as in winter.—American Agriculturist.

A SIMPLE CURE FOR RHEUMATISM.

A correspondent of the English Mechanic says: Let all of "ours" know the following: My wife has suffered occasionally with acute rheumatism in her feet, with painful swelling, completely taking her off her feet for many days at a time.

The following remedy was recommended recently and tried, and took away the agonizing pain in less than fifteen minutes, and she can now walk very fairly, and in a couple of days she will be able to button her boots, and walk without a stick or crutch.

One quart of milk, quite hot, into which stir one ounce of alum; this makes curds and whey. Bathe the part affected with the whey until too cold. In the mean time keep the curds hot, and after bathing, put them on as a poultice, wrap in flannel and go to sleep (you can). Three applications should be a perfect cure, even in aggravated cases.

ANOTHER CURE.—Dr. Vulpian states that salicylate of lithia is more efficacious than salicylate of soda in cases of acute and progressive subacute articular rheumatism. It also has some effect in chronic cases when a certain number of the joints are still deformed, swollen and painful. Salicylate of lithia may be given dissolved in water, in powder, or in unseasoned bread, during or after meals, in doses of fifty centigrammes. The physiological effects of the drug are headache, giddiness, and deafness.—The British Medical Record.

HOW TO PREPARE BEEF-TEA.

Beef-tea, as ordinarily prepared, is of little nutritive value; but if the white of an egg be mixed with a cup of beef-tea and heated to about 160° Fahrenheit, the value of the beef-tea is greatly enhanced. Again, if minced raw beef be just covered with very weak hydrochloric acid (four drops of acid to one pint of water), and left to macerate for the night, the liquid strained off and squeezed out of the flesh by wringing in a cloth, contains so much syntonin as to make it highly nutritious when neutralized; such a liquid will remain clear after boiling to remove the raw flavor.—The London Lancet.

Many clergymen unjustly blame themselves for the darkness that pervades their congregations at the evening services, and the congregations, with seeming justice, are often of the opinion that their pastors deserve all the blame they get. The true cause, frequently, is the improper position of the lamps or gas-lights, which throw the light into the eyes in such a way as to make closing the lids involuntary. By the use of proper reflectors the lamps can be placed near the ceiling, and a soft, pleasant light will be diffused throughout the room, with sufficient strength to read ordinary print with ease.

Sing the Reform
Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,

The Minstrel of Reform:

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

FIFTY YEARS and BEYOND;

OR,

Old Age and How to Enjoy It.

A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHROP.

Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and helps as to the best way of enjoying the last days of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks

ON THE

Labor Troubles.

BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Poe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:

"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it?' 'Aye, there's the rub!' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are cramped up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable prosperity."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable for its directness, its common sense, its impartiality, its incandescence and its force. He has no theories to support, he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind. If it is not the best that we have seen, while it is scarcely possible for it to be put in the hands of all our wage-workers, it would be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated.

HON. THURLOW WEEB ON THE MOR
GAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weeb, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Gananda gun jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freemasonry to Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it. In closing his letter he writes: I know look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a consciousness of having been governed through the years by Niagara's excitement by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great and dangerous influences of "secret societies."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the latest historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. (Chicago, National Christian Association.) Single copy, 6 cents.

The Christian's Secret

OR

A Happy Life.

28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently practical in its treatment. It meets the doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, sends out the results of his long and rich experience, to help others into a happy Christian life."—Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverentially devoted to its spirit that it demands criticism. It contains so much of the sound and practical, so much that, if heeded, will make our lives better, happier and more useful. The International Churchman is well pleased to lead a life 'hid with Christ in God' can scarcely fail to derive profit from its perusal."—Interior.

Methodist Word of Faith.

"We have not yet read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of any one. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner."—Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations. We have failed to find a dry line from title-page to finish."—Religious Telescope.

Congregational Commendation.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation."—Christianity.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story."—Evangelist, (Chicago, Ill.)

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation."—National Baptist, (Philadelphia.)

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction."—W. W. Barry, D. D. in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia.)

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published."—Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted bulwark as Freemasonry is something to admire, fanatic though he be."—Nibelsa, (Philadelphia.)

"Light is needed, on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers."—United Presbyterian, (Pittsburg.)

"A charming work, fit to be clasped with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less of work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable to read and useful. Our young folks will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they 'see how it turns out.'"—Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.)

IN BRIEF.

"Yes," said a Kentuckian, who had been in the far West, "Indians are powerful fond of whisky. Let them once get the taste of whisky, an' they'll give up everything for it. An old chief I met in western Dakota offered me a pony, saddle, bridle, blanket, and I don't know what else, for a pint of whisky I had with me." "And you wouldn't give it him?" "Not much! That was the last pint I had left. But it shows how fond Indians are of whisky."

In one of the great picture-galleries at Windsor Castle are several precious caskets, among other exquisite objects of virtue. The Queen entered one day with a small book in her hand, and asked the keeper of these treasures which was the most rare and valuable of all the caskets. He showed her one made of pure rock crystal, ornamented with gold and enamel. In this casket the Queen placed the small book—General Gordon's pocket Bible, annotated and marked by his own hand, and in this precious casket will remain this most precious relic of one of England's greatest heroes.

The Netherlands steamer Waeland, 3560 tons, which left Antwerp on the 11th of July last, and arrived in New York July 27th, reported that at noon on the second day a whale was seen floating on the water directly in the vessel's course. No attempt was made to avoid the animal, as the natural impression was that it would get out of the way of its own accord. It declined to move, however, being fast asleep most likely, and the steamer's sharp iron bows struck full and fair about midway of its length. There was a perceptible shock to the vessel and an immediate checking of her progress. Passengers and deckhands ran forward to see what was the cause of the trouble, and found that the whale was fully eighty feet long, had been cut half way in two, and lay dead and fast, caught on the bows. It was necessary to stop the ship and back off to disengage the carcass, which, when freed, drifted astern.

The stiff taxation which prevails in most European countries is almost entirely due to the cost of keeping up their military armaments, and to the burden of their excessive war debts. Europe annually expends on its armies and navies nine hundred and five million dollars, while the aggregate interest upon the war debts amounts to one thousand and fifty million dollars. In round numbers, the industries of Europe are taxed two billion dollars per year, in order to preserve the national boundary lines as they at present exist.

The Congo, which is supposed to be the second largest river in the world, is, near its mouth, so deep that no plummet line has ever been known to touch bottom. This is the more strange, seeing that the Upper Congo, which in many places is over twenty miles in width, is so shallow that steam-launches drawing two and-a-half feet of water frequently strike bottom. Johnston, Stanley and other explorers, anticipate that in time deep channels will be discovered, in which case the Congo will become a great artery of African life.

M. Boulange, one of the chief engineers employed on the Panama canal, reports that of the estimated 140,000,000 cubic meters to be excavated only 30,000,000 have been taken out from 1879 to the present time. No definite plans or surveys have been made, vague pencil sketches being about all the engineer gets from his predecessors, the engineers being constantly changed and shifted about. Of the funds $180,000,000 has been expended, and it is thought they will hold out but about three or four months longer, while to complete the work will require six or seven years. One of the greatest difficulties is the climate. Out of seventy-two engineers and assistants who went out a year ago forty-five are dead. It is very difficult to get laborers, and the mortality is frightful. Most of the money was furnished by poor people in France, and when the crash comes, as it must inevitably in M. Boulange's opinion, it will be a very serious matter with them.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the institution and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monitorial quotations and nearly four hundred facts from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is fully attested by J. O. Boehmer, Past Master Unity No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—several of them full page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting, able and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by the renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1835. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of America upon political aspects of the subject; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an Introduction. At the Lake Bluff temperance meeting last Wednesday evening John B. Finch, as LODGE CHAMPION, assailed the representative of those who object to the attempted promotion of virtue and religion by Satanic methods with such vilification and shameless abuse as became an agent of secretism while doing the work of the GRAND MASTER of the whole lodge business. This is now the THIRD TIME this man has tried to stop the utterance of needed truth and prevent free discussion by bullying and insolence. Editorial articles and the letter of the N. C. A. Secretary in this paper only lead up to this denouement. The account of WEDNESDAY EVENING'S WORK was given to a trusty correspondent who saw and heard all, and whose story, unbiased by personal feeling will be heard all over the land. At the last moment it was found impossible to suitably prepare the article for this number, and with much regret the patience of our readers is asked for it until next week.

The long list of deaths published in our daily papers Monday morning were attributed to the excessive heat. In many instances it could be truly said, "died of excessive beer guzzling." The promise of a cool drink in every saloon is a temptation of fearful power in such a heated term; but with every glass of beer is poured into the system a liquid which rots and destroys that vital strength which must sustain the human system in moments of extremity. These long death rolls should come under the title, "Died by the saloon."

The Good Templar chief Finch maintains the necessity of that lodge for the purpose of raising funds to carry on the prohibitory reform. Just now Texas is appealing loudly for aid. The liquor associations have given their tens of thousands. It is life or death to their business, and they risk much. The Voice, of New York, reports the few hundreds that have been given to help carry Texas and Tennessee. The Good Templars do not seem at all to be fulfilling Finch's promise. On the contrary the work seems to be done by men and papers outside the secret orders.

Mr. Powderly's speech on the restriction of emigration has been very widely printed as if it were the opinion of a statesman. It surely is not that of a laboring man in the socialistic definition of labor; but he speaks for a secret lodge, most of whose members are themselves foreigners. He asks for these that their brethren over the water be kept back in their poverty and distress. "Until it can be shown that the person landing on our shores can be self-sustaining for at least one year he should not be allowed to land," says Mr. Powderly. The Catholic press, which is very loving toward their brother Knight of Labor, tells us that he repudiates Know Nothingism, which differs little from his own platform except in one particular. That system would shut the door on the Catholic foreigner. He would not.

From Cincinnati comes another proof that the Knights of Labor is a temperance order. The Brewers' Union of that city, numbering some 600 to 800 men, has been suspended from the order. If we should stop here it might appear that the denunciations of the drink traffic by the head of the order were becoming its law, as we would they might. But such a determination is a moral impossibility. Individuals may cease from the sin of drinking because of repentance, a few because it don't pay; but we shall never see the order so resolving. If there was any reason under heaven why these brewers should be disciplined it was because of their evil business. But not a bit of that; they had committed the greater crime of refusing to pay the monthly assessment for the general fund, which was lately drawn upon for a labor palace!

A dispatch from Eau Claire, Wisconsin, says that the Knights of Labor in that part of the State are all leaving their order and lodges are surrendering their charters. The Tribune of this city says the membership of the Knights has decreased forty per cent during the past twelve months. The News says that the order has dropped from a million members to less than 600,000. In Chicago assemblies that counted 38,000 names have now but 18,000. The reasons for this defection are given at some length by the News, for which we must find room in the Cynosure, but must note that the reason which should be first, and which we trust will be found to be of most influence among the seceders is not noted. It is that the un-American, un-Christian methods of a secret lodge can never be made the fit agency for the successful prosecution of true reform. This fact we believe is appreciated by the sound sense of these hundreds of thousands of workmen; and reason, aided, we trust, by religion, is asserting its power against the system started by Freemasons and intended by them never to be known to the outside world.

Since the argument before the Illinois Supreme Court several months since on re-opening the Anarchist trial in this city, there has come no word from the judges of their decision. If in favor of a new trial their report might be given at any time and would be expected; if otherwise, their opinion would not be read until the regular sitting of court in September. It is now reported and believed by the friends of the condemned men, that but one of the judges favored their cause, and they have abandoned all hope of returning to their old revolutionary life. Similar reports have come from the prisoners themselves, who are counting the days when the final sentence shall be given. The Anarchists outside of the jail are now raising a fund to employ canvassers for signatures to a petition to Governor Oglesby. They will ask for a commutation of the death penalty. Their work will be thrown away. They will do better to spend their efforts in studying those simple lessons in Christian ethics and political economy which their wretched companions rejected for the words of John Most on dynamite philosophy.

More than a year ago the Cynosure published the personal report of a missionary teacher just from the Sandwich Islands, of the unhappy leaning of King Kalakaua and his sisters to heathenism. The King himself is an adept in heathenish practices. When he visited us a few years since he was welcomed in all the Masonic lodges on his journey and participated in their pagan rites. Now that he is deposed and his cabinet obliged to flee, there is good hope that the old heathen order will be stopped in its insinuating attempts to steal back into power. The Queen Kapiolani, who landed at New York the other day on her return home from England, said all the trouble was caused by the missionary party, which, she added, "is at the root of all evil in the kingdom"—a remark that has characterized lodge worshipers ever since Ahab. The premier, chosen by the revolutionary party, is a man of age and experience, a native of England. The immediate cause of the rising was a long-growing protest against the dishonorable conduct of the king, which culminated on his exposure as a great bribe-taker. We hope to learn of the peace and prosperity of the Islands under the new administration.

The principles of the Grand Army order and its various attachments for women and youth have an able analysis in the arguments of Revs. Hinman and Chittenden in the present number and last week. A thousand explanations have been offered to show that this secret society is not political. A thousand more are needed. The charge is made good again and again by its own actions. The noisy fusillade of mischief-making politicians has shut out President Cleveland from their St. Louis meeting, and his manly letter gives them no little worry. But if they are rid of a President who could prevent the depletion of the treasury of the nation by mistaken men in a secret lodge, they cannot shake off the black man. He is coming to St. Louis to claim a right to Grand Army membership. This is being denied them, and on the ground of color alone. There is absolutely none other. If the colored Union soldier enters the Grand Army then good-bye to the hob-nobbing and sham fraternizing of the ex-Federal and ex-Confederate organizations. A friendly feeling is being fostered between these parties, which would be highly commendable if cultivated on the basis of American brotherhood and citizenship. But when it is made with all the suggestive memories of the rebellion retained in name and oath, it becomes odious because it denies the very vital national truth for which the war was made. Let the caste question come to the front. It will serve one good purpose if it opens the eyes of our ex-soldiers to the danger of the secret lodge with which they are playing.

A PERNICIOUS CLAIM.

BY ELDER SIMPSON ELY.

In a conversation with a lawyer a short time ago he claimed that Jesus the Christ was a Freemason. He seemed to be a very intelligent man in all other respects; but in this matter he betrays a sad lack of information; or his information has been gleaned from very erroneous sources. He is a good man and evidently wants to do right; but he has been following blind guides.

To say that Jesus was a Mason amounts to blasphemy. To connect the sinless One with an organization whose membership is largely made up from the ranks of infidels and worldly characters is so contrary to all that we know of his teaching and life that when men advance this claim it almost makes our blood boil with righteous indignation.

When Jesus was in the judgment hall before Pontius Pilate he disclaimed having ever done or said anything in secret. See John 18. Now after this earnest avowal of his frank and open life, who will be so base as to connect his name with "tricks that are dark and deeds that are vain?"

Jesus said, "Men do not light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house." Matt. 5. He also exhorted his disciples to "let their light shine." Can it be possible that he would so teach and then hide his own light under a Masonic bushel? It would require a bushel of impudence, on the one hand, or of ignorance on the other, to claim this.

Let Masonry stand on its own merits (?) and do not try to prop it up with such illustrious names as those of Solomon and Christ. Masonry was not born until more than a thousand years after Christ!

SECRETISM AS A FORCE IN SOCIETY.

BY MISS FRANCES S. CAROTHERS, M. D.

The most insidious and least dreaded of the active forces of social gravity, because of the immense range of its influence and its selective power of taking the best (?), is that of secret orders. Its victims are bound hand and mouth, so that in the onward sweep of this enslaving system not a voice can be heard, or a hand be raised, to warn the ignorant and uninitiated of the dangers which await its followers. That men with the imperial stamp upon the brow should so despise their princely privileges as to surrender themselves, soul and body, to debasing, oath-bound guides, and to trundle to the sons of darkness for preferment in social, business, or church relations, is passing knowledge. The "child of a King," and suffer such debasement! The "child of a King," and so despise his birthright! The world has not given itself up entirely to the spirit of evil. Christ still reigns, and "to him shall the gathering of the people be." There are, by his Spirit, movements in the cause of truth and justice, which have so increased in magnitude that systems of evil have already begun to vary from their wonted course, and soon, we trust, will be drawn to the mighty Rock and there perish. —Extract from Essay on "Social Gravity," read before the Wheaton Alumni.

THE CHURCHES—WHERE ARE THEY?

BY M. N. BUTLER.

The reform that depends on the support and liberality of infidelity and irreligion will not succeed. All great moral reforms are begun by conscientious men, prompted by both piety and patriotism. It is a lamentable fact that the great body of easy-going church people look upon these early reformers as troublers in Israel, because they will not tolerate nor affiliate with popular evils. It is the money, labor and sacrifice of these praying patriots of sterling principle that carry these great reforms in their incipency. They may be, as they generally are, ostracised by their churches for a time, but their cause goes on to triumph.

The great body of churchmen are a drawback to struggling reforms, and for this reason thousands of non-churchmen look upon popular Christianity as a roaring farce. Praying is good in its place; talk is cheap and resolutions don't cost much. The sentimentality and gush in reform work is playing out. It means work as well as talk. The praying men of America will soon have another chance to show their colors. From now on to pray and not to vote will go up before God as solemn mockery. To get down on your knees and pray for God's will to be done on earth as it is in heaven, and then vote for ungodly scoundrels, profane swearers and blackguards, is sublimely ridiculous. God pity such churchmen. How many hallelujah Republicans and Democrats cry loud and mightily, amid sighs and groans and tears, that God will give us righteous rulers, and then on election day they vote their old party tickets from dog pelter to Beelzebub.

We are glad, however, that reform is taking on a practical form. The man who would rather pray a week than give five cents is elected to "step down and out." Practical men are tired of that kind of palaver. "Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my works," says the Apostle. "Faith without works is dead." There are men of means in every neighborhood who have harped reform for years, but if they ever gave a dollar or voted as they prayed it has never been found out.

Nevertheless, there are people whose religion and good citizenship means more than hollow mockery—a sounding brass or a tinkling symbol. They are first and foremost in every good word and work. Ask a man to lend a hand or give a dollar, and you can tell about how much reform there is in him. Actions speak louder than words, and that is what the world measures men by. If there is anything God hates it is the moral coward, the man who is always preaching one thing and practicing another. These are the policy men, time-servers, who always cry "premature" and "ill-advised" at any movement, religiously or politically, that antagonizes wrong.

But especially do the ministers carry a fearful responsibility in these latter days. These are the men who pass as the anointed of the Lord God Almighty to point us and our children to a higher, nobler, purer life. How essential then that we know their ideas and views. If we teach our children that Bible temperance means "touch not, taste not, and handle not" intoxicating drinks, we don't want any man or angel to teach our little boys and girls that dram-drinking is right under any circumstances—no, not even as a sacramental observance. There are people who believe it is no more right to sip fermented wine in church on your knees, than in a saloon. Don't allow your child to attend that kind of a church, or listen to a preacher that permits the use of fermented liquor for such solemn purposes.

The true Christian is a patriot of the highest type. He is a philanthropist who sees suffering humanity as Christ saw it. To know duty is to do it. The honest churchman will not wait for worldly men to popularize a movement before espousing it. It is his privilege to find a "thus saith the Lord." He never chooses between whisky and beer; between high license and low license; between the lesser of two evils. There are true Christians, noble men of God, men who do not believe a thing can be morally wrong and practically right, men who are not afraid to face the world, the flesh and the devil. With them it is principle first and party afterward. Numbers with them have ceased to cut any figure. They are the men who hold that the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church. And they are the salt of the earth to-day, religiously and politically. Their denominations may frown on them as disturbers in Zion and cry, "peace;" but they answer back, "First pure and then peaceable." There are enough churches pledged to reform to purify the nation, if their members would do their duty. "They say and do not."

THE AMERICAN NEGRO PROBLEM SOLVED.

BY PROF. J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

"The Negro Problem" has always been the "bridge of asses" which many learned politicians, historians, geographers, and ethnologists have failed to cross. It is the pons asinorum of past ages, and still the riddle of the present.

But it seems to me that in dealing with this question, we generally forget that there are propositions demanding to be handled as theorems instead of problems. It is time alone that will furnish us the requisite data, and put the world in position of demonstrating the perplexing and difficult Negro problem. But if we are willing to handle the question as suggested, and support it with self-evident and existing truths, we shall find the result both mathematically and morally true, and we will be able to see the Negro in his present state, and then by a natural law compute what his future will be if he continues in this present condition.

Let us view the Negro as a member of oath-bound secret societies; be it Freemasons, Odd-fellows, etc. What has he become? I will enumerate his characteristics, which as a sequel he is compelled to assume, and which every reasonable man cannot deny. He is of consequence: 1st, a secretive animal; 2d, a deceiver; 3d, a blasphemer; 4th, an idler; 5th, a Christless man; 6th, an idolater, a heathen.

Man was never intended to be a secretive animal. We are not against secrecy as private opinion, nor do we ask you to bring your domestic or personal business before the public gaze. When you give alms, do not seek vain glory or worldly applause by publishing it yourself abroad. "Give thine alms in secret, let not thy right hand know what thy left hand doeth, that thy Father who seeth in secret may reward thee openly."

Do not publish your fellow creatures' faults or imperfections to the world; go to him in secret and rebuke him, then at the third rebuke, if he be incurable, bring him before the saints and not before the ungodly. All these are secrets, transient and of a limited nature, which Jesus Christ himself believed in and taught.

Nature adapts man to live by air and light on the surface of the earth, and forms caves and caverns for bats and vile, secretive quadrupeds.

An oath-bound secrecy destroys the true element of manhood in man, and makes him an unwilling tool to any movement, whether it be right or wrong, for he is bound to do anything, a "murder not excepted," for his oath's sake. Members of secret societies tell us that their object is to relieve the fatherless, the widow, the poor and the oppressed. Let us grant this to be true. But why do such works of charity as this in secret? Why secure it with the brutal, throat-cutting and body-mutilating oath? Why should the charitable work be done only by men and not by women?

Every one must acknowledge that secret, oath-bound societies destroy the sanctity of the marriage tie, which is the most tender on earth. The husband who stands before God and man and publicly vows to be one flesh with his wife, is now in a dark and secret pavilion, swearing to "hide and forever keep" all that is done in that place, where his wife dare not enter, and to conceal it from every uninitiated person under the canopy of heaven.

He is a deceiver because he pretends to have mysteries where there is no mystery, and to keep secret what has been revealed and found to be trifling and childish.

These societies are Christless, because many who do not acknowledge Christ are admitted into them, and for their accommodation the name of Christ is not used in the lodges.

They are idolatrous and heathenish in their rites and ceremonies. Whenever I take up a Masonic ritual and read such Masonic hymns as:

"Hands 'round ye faithful Masons,
Form the bright, fraternal chain;
We part upon the square below,
To meet in heaven again.
Oh, what words of precious meaning,
Those words Masonic are?
We meet upon the level,
And we part upon the square."

I imagine a circle of Kofong African heathens dancing around a fire and dismissing the ceremony in a triangle of cork woods. Both of these two ceremonies have their respective meanings and from a common origin.

From these axioms let us see what will become of the Negro in America as a secretive animal, as an heathen, and as Christless beings.

I leave everyone to solve the problem or demonstrate the theorem: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach." For every Masonic temple that you build, God speaks to you in anger by the prophet Hosea: "Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and buildeth temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities, but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof." 8: 14.

The greatest mistake of the Negro is, that when he embraces religion he regards Christianity more the religion of the white man than the religion of Christ; hence he takes in both the white man's virtues and the white man's vices. He drinks brandy, because "massa used to drink it," and he rushes into the lodge because he wants to be like massa, and wear his apron and red bindings. But, my countrymen, is it not time for us to use our own judgments and build our hope of a glorious destiny on the Rock of Ages? I do not believe that England or America have more right to the Christian religion than they have to regulate the laws of Jupiter. It is an interesting fact to me to know that the white Masons do not acknowledge or recognize colored Masons or Knight Templars. I pray that this shall continue so until the colored man finds that God, also, does not approve of it, and that he has no right to be superstitious, apeish and ungodly; and in like manner I wish that every white liquor dealer will always drive away every Negro that approaches his beer saloon, until the colored race find that they have no right to be there. Let us retain their virtues and reject their vices.

THE TRIAL OF FAITH.

BY REV. A. SIMS.

That the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ. 1 Peter 1: 7.

1. What kind of faith does the Apostle refer to? It is not faith in men or in angels—not an intellectual assent to the truth of the Bible. It is the faith of the heart. A confidence and repose in Christ as our personal and present Saviour from all sin. It is a personal faith—"your faith."

2. How is this faith tried? By temptations, discouragements, opposition, persecution, misrepresentations, afflictions, poverty, prosperity, trials of various kinds, and by obedience.

3. Why is this faith tested? Saving faith is the foundation of all Christian experience. Though a Christian may be in a perfect tempest, if his faith in God remains unshaken he is perfectly safe. But if his faith fails, though he may have everything else he will be defeated and backslide. As faith, then, is that principle by which we live; as so much depends on its exercise, no wonder the devil levels his heavy guns against it to weaken and destroy it. God, in his infinite love to our best interests and for the development and nourishment of our faith, permits it to be tried. Hence, the Apostle says, "Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing had happened unto you." In the time of Zephaniah the prophet, in speaking of his ancient people God says, "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord." Daniel says, "Many shall be purified and made white and tried." It is necessary that our faith should be tested, in order that we may learn whether it has any flaws in it, or whether it has become weakened. When everything is smooth and easy-going, we cannot tell how our faith stands. The degree of feeling we may have is no criterion. It is one of the most uncertain things in the world. It is only by the hard knocks of trial we find out how strong or weak it is. Rutherford says, "I find it to be most true—that the greatest temptation out of hell is to live without temptation. If my waters should stand they would become stagnant and impure. Faith is the better for the free air, and for the sharp winter storm in its face. Grace withereth without adversity. The devil is but God's master fencer, to teach us how to handle our weapons." Says one, "If gold, though perishing, is yet tried with fire in order to test its genuineness and to remove the dross, how much more does your faith—which shall never perish—need to pass through a fiery trial to remove whatever is defective, and to test its genuineness and full value?"

4. Why is the trial of this faith more precious than of gold that perisheth? Because:

1. We get a deeper and richer experience. "The trial of your faith worketh patience." "But the God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you." Is not this more precious than gold? Bunyan says, "Temptations, when we meet them at first, are as the lion that roared upon Samson; but if we overcome them, the next time we shall find a nest of honey in them."

2. We become more useful and bring more glory to God. "He purgeth us that we may bring forth more fruit." He thus tried Job, Daniel, the Hebrew children, Paul, and hosts of others, and their after life was more than ever conducive to the glory of God. Just when we think we can stand no more and are going to die under the pressure, is often the very time when we bear the best increase. "Gold does not increase or multiply by trial in the fire, it rather grows less; but faith is established, improved and multiplied. Gold, though it bear the fire, yet will perish with the world; but faith never will." A certain writer has said, "There are more undeveloped physical and mental resources than have ever been brought to light, and made to bless and comfort the human race. The potentialities of mind and nature, we venture to say, are almost as infinite as the infinite God himself. We know not what powers we are in possession of until our capital has been drawn upon. We do not perceive the countless millions of stars above us until night has come and brought them out; and pressure from without and from within but reveals the hidden forces of our nature. The man knows not the depth of a husband's love, and the joys to be reaped from the family circle, until the terrible messenger knocks at his home. We can accomplish more when we are under pressure than at another time, for then we but learn of our hitherto slumbering powers."

Crush the daisy and it will send forth a sweeter fragrance than ever. Bunyan was confined in the darkness of Bedford jail for twelve years, but what immense good has come of that long imprisonment. The poor, indigent, illiterate student fights against many odds, but these very difficulties only tend to develop the indomitable perseverance within him.

3. The ultimate end "might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ." "If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him." "Our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, worketh out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." We shall ultimately be found tried stones, ready and safe to put in the heavenly temple. In the building of Solomon's temple no hewing and sawing were done where the sacred building was reared. All the stones, timber, etc., were prepared in other places, and brought in a finished state to the builders. Beloved, the hewing of the stones for the spiritual temple must be done here, that at the appointed time God may find us ready to be placed as living stones in that temple. Says one, "The temptations of Satan which he intended for their destruction, frequently became jewels to adorn the crowns of God's people before the eternal throne." Matthew Henry says: "Honor is properly that esteem and value which one has with another; and so God and man will honor the saints. Praise is the declaration of that esteem; so Christ will commend his people in that day. Glory is that luster wherewith a person so honored and praised shines in heaven."

THE CHURCH AND WORKINGMEN.—Why has the church lost its grip on the workingmen? In the first place the church never had any grip on the workingman, as such. Its grip has been on him as a man and a brother. In the second place, it has lost something of its hold on many workingmen because they have so largely transferred their affection in recent years from their church to their various organizations. In communities not divided up by any secular or social fraternities, the Christian church as one great, permanent, omnipresent organization will have a much stronger hold on every class than any other attraction. But when Masonry and Odd-fellowship and the club and the numberless other associations make their advent, the church loses its grip, and no wonder, on considerable numbers in every class. In the long run the church will probably resume its sway; but for the season its sceptre trembles.—Boston Herald.

JOHN THE BAPTIST.

Herald of Christ, the day is come,

Day by prophetic lips foretold,

When from the shadow of the tomb

The page of life shall be unrolled:

The day-light dawns; the bright beams glow;

First witness that Light art thou.

Greatest among the sons of day,

Less than the least in heaven's domain,

Last of the old world, called away

Ere God in man restores his reign:

Thou seest the dawn climb up the skies,

Yet mayst not see the Sun arise.

Those beams shall tint the humblest cot,

Shall flood the plains of earth with light,

Thou mayst not feel them; 'tis thy lot

To stand upon the skirts of night.

Didst thou not long to see that morn?

Rejoice: thou seest the daylight dawn.

'Tis thine in desert paths to stand

And cry, "The Lord's highway prepare!

Heaven's promised kingdom is at hand,

Make straight the rugged pathways there!

Lay low the hills his steps before,

Who comes with fan to purge his floor.

"Upon the hills I hear his feet:

He comes to burn the chaff with fire,

And he will gather in his wheat

Upon the day of wrath and ire:

The axe is laid unto the root,

Woe to the tree that bears no fruit!"

HOW TO BECOME A SOVEREIGN GRAND INSPECTOR GENERAL.

[From the Freemason, Detroit.]

EDITOR MASONIC REVIEW:—As there appears to be considerable mystery in regard to the constitution of the Supreme Council and its powers, will you have the goodness to explain what are the necessary qualifications for a candidate for the 33 deg.? Does it require any special standard of morals or intelligence, or is the candidate compelled to be a proficient in the rituals and history of Masonry? Having the ordinary failing inherent of our good Grandmother Eve, (curiosity) there are a number of us who would like to know; for if we go in for the high figures, we do not desire to stop half-way up the ladder, neither do we desire to be placed in the position to become "rejected material." Is there any probability if we should take the degrees up to the 32 deg., which appears to be attainable by nearly all (if they can pay for them) that we could ever, by any ordinary process, attain the 33 deg., as that seems to be the cap stone of the structure? By a reply to the above, you will greatly oblige yours, fraternally, ONE AMONG A THOUSAND.

We reply, that so far as our information extends the only requisite qualifications are that the candidate for the degrees up to the 32° shall be a Master Mason, and be able to pay the necessary fees. Of course there is balloting, etc., which is always done by a few. This is easy to arrange and manipulate through one or two astute friends. In regard to the 33° and last degree that is a different affair; even of this there are different grades. There is the passive and the active 33°. The passives have the privilege of writing 33° after their names, which is "a big thing; of sitting on high seats in the Sanhedrim, but have not a word to say; or rather they may talk, but cannot vote, and of paying their own expenses to and from the place of meetings. Other than the above, the absolute qualifications of the 33°, (in some instances, at least,) so far as we have been able to observe, are perhaps better described by Dr. Gulliver in his travels in the land of Lilliput (which every boy has read) than by any other author, either Masonic or profane. For the benefit of our correspondent, and so as to refresh his memory, we quote the passage. It is not bad reading. The Dr. says:

"The Emperor had a mind one day to entertain me with several of the country shows, wherein they exceeded all nations I have known, both for dexterity and magnificence. I was diverted with none so much as the rope dancers, performed upon a slender white thread extended about two feet and twelve inches from the ground; upon which I shall desire liberty, with the reader's patience, to enlarge a little.

"This diversion is only practiced by those persons who are candidates for great employments, and high favor at court. They are trained in this art from their youth, and are not always of noble birth, or liberal education. When a great office is vacant, either by death or disgrace (which often happens) five or six of those candidates petition the Emperor to entertain his majesty and the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest without falling succeeds in the office. Very often the chief ministers themselves are commanded to show their skill, and to convince the Emperor that they have not lost their faculty. Flimnap, the treasurer, is allowed to cut a caper on the straight rope, at least an inch higher than any other lord in the whole empire. I have seen him do the somerset several times together, fixed on a rope which is no thicker than a common packthread in England. My friend Reldresal, principal secretary for private affairs, is, in my opinion, if I am not partial, the second after the treasurer; the rest of the great officers are much upon a par.

"These diversions are often attended with fatal accidents, whereof great numbers are on record. I myself have seen two or three candidates break a limb. But the danger is much greater when the ministers themselves are commanded to show their dexterity; for by contending to excel themselves and their fellows, they strain so far that there is hardly one of them who has not received a fall, and some of them two or three. I was assured that, a year or two before my arrival, Flimnap would infallibly have broken his neck if one of the king's cushions, that accidentally lay on the ground, had not weakened the force of his fall.

"There is likewise another diversion, which is only shown before the Emperor and Empress, and first minister, upon particular occasions. The Emperor lays on the table three fine silken threads of six inches long; one is blue, the other red, and the third green. These threads are proposed as prizes for those persons whom the Emperor has a mind to distinguish by a peculiar mark of his favor. The ceremony is performed in his majesty's great chamber of state, where the candidates are to undergo a trial of dexterity, very different from the former, and such as I have not observed the least resemblance of in any other country of the new or old world. The Emperor holds a stick in his hands, both ends parallel to the horizon, while the candidates advancing, one by one, sometimes leap over the stick, sometimes creep under it, backward and forward, several times, according as the stick is advanced or depressed. Sometimes the Emperor holds one end of the stick, and his first minister the other; sometimes the minister has it entirely to himself. Whoever performs his part with the most agility, and holds out the longest in leaping and creeping, is rewarded with the blue-colored silk; the red is given to the next, and the green to the third, which they all wear gilt twice around the middle; and you see few great persons about this court who are not adorned with one of these girdles."

THEY COME FROM ALL CLIMES.

The statistics at Castle Garden show that the number of immigrants landed in New York thus far this year is 133,000, which is 40,000 in excess of the same period last year. In one day during the last month there were over 11,400 landed. The authorities state that never in the history of Castle Garden have there been so many foreigners examined in one month as there was during the month of May. Immigration to the United States is increasing steadily every year, and there is no telling when it will commence to decrease. As a rule the immigrants are intelligent and of a better class than heretofore. They are from all nations in Europe. The Italians and Hungarians are least to be desired. They are brought over here principally by large railroad corporations, and are put to work on new lines or in the mines of Pennsylvania and Ohio. They can live cheaply, and the wages which they are paid are the lowest paid to any class of workmen. The Italians are men of the lowest element, who grovel for little, hoard their savings, and then return to their own homes to live out their old age in what seems to them luxury and affluence. The Irish who come here have friends who have sent for them, and they come with the intention of remaining and building up homes for themselves and their families. Most of the other nationalities come with this intention, with the exception of those that have been mentioned. They are a benefit to the country, and the more immigrants that come here, the greater will become our resources. They are principally of the farmer class, and they go to the Western States, where they settle upon farms. There is room for everybody, and there are millions of acres of land uncultivated in every State in the Union, where the immigrant can settle. Those that have come here have money and are not paupers. We want intelligent men and women, these are always welcome. The pauper class and criminal class of Italy we do not want, and Congress should take some steps to stop the railroads and other corporations from importing them.—Demorest's Monthly.

IN WHICH ARMY ARE YOU TRAINING?

THE G. A. R. LODGE CORPS OR THE ARMY OF THE LORD?

FROM A DISCOURSE DELIVERED IN THE COLLEGE CHAPEL, WHEATON, JULY 10, 1887, BY REV. A. J. CHITTENDEN.

"But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, . . . hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Eph. 2: 4, 6.

If the life, unity and security of the church on earth is to be maintained, I might say recovered, we must give more emphasis to things in which Christians agree in proportion to the variety of things on which they are liable to differ. These are times of wide-reaching thought, and thought makes differences before it reaches unity of conclusions and measures; therefore the world is not a little curious to know whether the great capital beliefs of the Christian will prove to be a bond of union between themselves, and a mark of difference toward them that are without, that will survive the stress and strain of all these agitations.

I would like to see the Christians of every community studying this text with a new fervor of interest in its great salvation facts: raised up from the dead; by a redemption through blood; to a new spirit of filial regard for Father; to a knowledge of God as he is in Christ; and to a place in a new brotherhood, which does not exist by virtue of entire sameness of opinions, but by virtue of love and social devotion.

Then I would like to see society living and walking together so as to realize what it means to "sit together in heavenly places" here on earth. The least that we can take from such words is the privilege and duty of having the society of Christ's people, and the duty of choosing it in preference to the companionship of the world. If any one has not entered far enough into our religion, or allowed religion enough to enter into him to discover these heavenly places, I pity him. If the great fact is in him, he will find the heavenly part that lies between himself and other Christians. It is a tedious and disheartening labor to be always trying to join together cold-hearted church members. We appoint a prayer meeting and invite all who love the Lord and his children to come there. No other meeting could so well serve to prove the actual condition of the heart of the church.

"Jesus loved Martha and her sister and Lazarus." Do you think that either of the sisters or the brother raised from the dead would have excused himself when their Lord came for the night, in order to attend some lodge of Rechabites or Rebekahs or Odd-fellows or Templars or Grand Army comrades or Sons or grandsons of Veterans? When Paul passed Ephesus on his way to Jerusalem, do you suppose he took pains to make the appointment to meet the church of Ephesus on some night when the Christians would be at liberty to go down to the shore without missing a lodge of heathen?

If Christians have been qualified to sit together in heavenly places—to associate in the communion of saints, what shall we say of all those schemes of fellowship which associate unsorted humanity around some idea that is purely selfish or merely temporal, and that, too, in a way to absorb time, money, acquaintance, enthusiasm and every highest interest into the appointments and habits of spiritual prostitution?

The more inoffensive the name and avowed object the more dangerously enticing is the fellowship that is forbidden. What can be more plausible than a very private organization of young people for the reclamation of drunkards? Nay; what could be more dangerous than a very private opportunity for the partially dissolute and thoroughly unchristian to break down the best protective barriers between virtue and vice, which the Christian home and the public meeting has from time immemorial erected?

The inviolable law of the churches given by the apostles was—separation. No plea of doing moral reform work was ever allowed to play tricks with the younger part of the Christian commonwealth. No sort of outside communion was tolerated in either the Jewish or Christian churches. There can be no heavenly places where Christian character and sentiment are not the first thing in place and importance. To make any other consideration a basis of regular and long-continued fellowship is to depart from Christ and to practically deny him. A Christian church on earth means Christian society on earth. The church has a mission always, but mingling with the unsaved in the direct line of evangelistic labor is quite a different thing from "sitting in the seat of the scornful" and the profligate and the despisers of Christ on terms of social compromise and spiritual equality. A spiritual mission does not call for spiritual miscegenation. When people are converted we need a place to take them to at once. To stay with them and give them no heavenly places to resort to is to rescue people from a burning building and then throw them in again. There are no heavenly places socially outside of the companionship of Christians.

The poorest church I ever knew would be a heaven compared with the average lodge character—no matter what might be its name. A genuine, zealous Christian will not go there; therefore the few nominal Christians are the more exposed by the predominating influence of secret companionship organized and sworn. All heavenly places breathe the free air of heaven. No large-hearted man can possibly enjoy the stifled atmosphere of a lodge room. It is for this reason in part that less than half of the soldiers of the late war have taken or retained membership in the Grand Army.

The voluntary gratitude of a people towards a soldier class is a reward worth having. Anything of that kind that has to be forced or preserved artificially is certainly not very much to be coveted. The surest way to destroy the gratitude that the people would naturally have towards the survivors of a national war is to undertake by close organization to monopolize all offices and proclaim incessantly their own deserts. But the Christian soldier never allows himself to deify military service. His deity is Christ and his fellowship in Christ is never reduced to par with any other fellowship. The simple reunion of veterans in annual meeting is a matter-of-course pleasure which no one cares to criticize. It is the organized and sworn social and political imperialism that uses comradeship as its tool to obtain place and power and money that we oppose; and this has been found so successful in controlling all political movements for a quarter of a century that the sons of the soldier have invented their little game by which they are to step into the footprints of their brave ancestors and continue to possess and divide the spoils of office. Is this a too severe criticism on the innocent "Sons of Veterans"? Must the gratitude of the people to their fathers be enforced by these babes in boots, brass and blue cloth, at the point of harmless bayonets and the sound of martial music for all time to come? What if the mal-administration of public affairs should give us some time a new list of veterans, emancipators of the people from the thralldom of avaricious cliques and rings of secret plotters against the honest people of the land; who then will know just how to recognize a "son of a veteran"—unless perhaps good, gentlemanly and generous, open-handed character and conduct should be a distinguishing badge of inherited worth? It is a great pity that the chaplains who were in the late war had not dared to brave something more terrible than cannon when they returned, and set their influence against this style of association in its very infancy.

The veterans and the sons of veterans will find that their mode of preserving patriotism is not at all in accord with history or human nature. A degraded people have never proved patriotic; and all but open and liberal modes of obtaining influence and a living have ever proved demoralizing and degrading. A happy and prosperous people will defend their homes. Such a people have never failed to answer the just call of the government. Rob the people of their homes and no human power will make them love their country. The administration of the last twenty-five years has been the most corrupt in our national history. The people have begun to investigate it, and when the are done they will not contradict this statement. Grand Armyism has been tolerated by a people more generous than wise, and a series of legislative acts sprung from subservient greed of office has eclipsed all modern monstrosities of the kind. The party most largely represented by this organization has set itself against any and every reform that might be adopted at the expense of votes; and not a single act of moral bravery has relieved the avaricious monotony of the rule of the nominal saviours of the country. The veteran soldier who should have been watching with jealous eye the course of human nature in office has been cajoled with praise, baited with pensions and befuddled by a system of oppression that leaves their sons with only a tithe of the benefits actually earned by their fathers. Their welfare now demands that they join with all voting sons and break the yoke before it becomes iron.

But I speak to Christians as such. You ought to know better than to perpetuate clanism in the society of a republic. We do not need it. You do not need it. As a Christian you cannot afford it. It will ruin your love for the church. It will spoil your faith in God. It will demoralize your spiritual judgment. It will break down your influence, and mar your good name. What would you think to find on one of the Christian tomb-stones beneath the city of Rome, some sign of membership in a brotherhood of military survivors written right over the cross—the emblem of all true greatness and worth and promise? Would not such association be degrading in the extreme? He who said, "I have determined to know nothing among you but Jesus Christ and him crucified," never spoke of his early service under the state as anything to be preserved along with his heroism of suffering for Christ. The commonwealth of the Jews never fell apart into classes to memorialize some war struggle just because a part of the people might have remained at home. When men did well everybody knew it, and they received their praise. "Saul hath slain his thousands and David his tens of thousands!" was the voice of the people. Neither Joshua, nor Gideon nor Samson nor David organized secret societies to keep their memories green. Christians ought to have a better opinion of human nature than to do such childish things in a republic.

Besides, when you enter these lodges you have to make a profession of religious faith which is simply heathenish. Heathenism acknowledges God under a great many symbols. But they never get beyond that simple belief. They have no Christ; and that which heathenism has not reached is exactly what lodgism of nearly every kind leaves out. They therefore coincide in their faith—the one has never known Christ, and the other ignores him in its profession of faith. Who can seriously doubt that it must partially heathenize the mind of any man to be familiar with codes and ceremonies that, ignore Christ throughout? It were far better to have no religious part in the ritual. Why do you say when you enter the lodge, "I believe in God"? We might have assumed that to your credit. But as you say nothing more than that, you virtually reply to the only question any one could have, "Do you believe in Christ?" "I do not." Why will you allow people to make a trap for you of this kind and cause you to slap Christ in the face in the presence of his avowed enemies?

If you have a spark of spirituality left in you, you know when you come home from these sittings that you have not been sitting "in a heavenly place in Christ Jesus." And you might have been. There were Christians enough within a block or two of your own home who would have enjoyed your company, and whose company would have been a grace to you. Your own wife would have allowed you to sit with her for the evening. And if you had brought into your little domestic circle the offerings in money and enthusiasm which were sacrificed in these other chambers of promiscuous humanity, there would have been a very much larger return of satisfaction.

"What part hath he that believeth with an infidel?" To join a church is to associate with that people called the church. To associate regularly with any kind of a people as a social preference is to make them your church. Your name on the roll does not make you a part of a church without your actual presence. Neither will an occasional participation in the service of communion atone for habitual absenteeism at other times.

When our armies were in the field the Christian soldier was glad enough to separate himself from the ungodly conversation of the unregenerate and mingle with praying soldiers in the chaplain's tent or under the consecrated tree. What has happened since those terrible days that the Christian now should prefer the companionship of an unbeliever, simply because he was a soldier, to the neglect of the house of prayer and the immediate service of Christ in a hundred ways? Has he been worshipping at the wrong altar? Has comradeship displaced the love of God's people? Or is it possible that he has never lost any love for Christ, and does not understand the blasphemy of speaking of the "grand encampment" over the graves of the unregenerate so as to make the word of God of none effect, and leave men to believe that military service is a passport to heaven?

We have no room in the United States for any civil "order" except the order of American citizens. We have no need in the world of any religious order except the simple order of the churches of Jesus Christ. All other bunching and banding and buttoning people together in uniform and grip and pass-word is simply the modern form of erecting altars under every green tree, to make God's people play the harlot and lose their love for things spiritual.

The gift of a little titled office and the Indian fancy for trinkets and colored cloth will befuddle the unprotected minds of our youth, and being like Melchisedek, without father or mother to advise them better, they will strut around all through the remainder of their boyhood advertising their fathers' virtues and to find when they are forty or fifty years old that the country has other business on hand, brought about partly by their own neglect. But Christians have a better protection from these things than other people, if they will simply obey their finer judgment and refrain from all Grand-Army or Grandson clanship on the ground of antagonism between the spirit of the unregenerate and the spirit of those who have been redeemed and raised up together and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

OUR CINCINNATI LETTER.

CINCINNATI, O., July 12, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The "City of God" must be faithfully defended and the aggressive work of the kingdom carried on. To this end complete consecration is called for. "When the priest was consecrated the blood of the ram was put upon the right ear, the thumb of the right hand and the great toe of the right foot to indicate that he should come and go, use his hands and powers of mind, in short, his entire self, in the service of God." The Jews expressed their loyalty in saying: "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse." Paul said: "For me to live is Christ," i. e., all that I have, am, or can be, belongs to Christ.

A Japanese family prospered in the use of the "self-restraint box." This is the account which the master of the house gives of it: "If I would buy a dollar garment, I manage by self-restraint and economy to get it for eighty cents, and the remainder I drop into the 'self-restraint box'; or, if I would give a five dollar feast to my friends, I exercise self-restraint and economy, and give it for four, dropping the remaining dollar into the box; or, if I determine to build a house that shall cost one hundred dollars, I exercise self-restraint and economy, and build it for eighty, putting the remaining twenty dollars in to the box as an offering to 'the great, bright god of self-restraint.'" On the second day of the New Year the family assembles, engages in the worship of this god and then opens the box and distributes its contents to the poor. The discipline is a blessing to themselves and it gladdens hundreds of hearts.

Barring the idolatry Christians have here an excellent example. The homage which they pay to the idol we should give to the King of kings. It is in striking contrast with the spirit discovered by an Ohio treasurer (a professed Christian), who, "when his pastor brought his annual contribution to the American Board, said to him: 'You ought not to do it. I don't think it's right. You ought to stop giving to missions, and preach for us on a smaller salary'; adding, in conclusion: 'We are heathen'; a proposition which few enlightened men would be disposed to controvert, though it is a hard rub on the heathen."

But there are consecrated spirits in the church. Dr. Cuyler says, "he had a seamstress in his church who used to give a hundred dollars a year to missions." Dr. Strong relates the following: "Sarah Hosmer, of Lowell, though a poor woman, supported a student in the Nestorian Seminary, who became a preacher of Christ. Five times she gave fifty dollars, earning the money in a factory, and sent out five native pastors to Christian work. When more than sixty years old she longed to furnish Nestoria with one more preacher of Christ; and, living in an attic, she took in sewing until she had accomplished her cherished purpose. In the hands of this consecrated woman money transformed the factory girl and seamstress into a missionary of the cross, and then multiplied her sixfold." The Saviour commended the poor widow because she gave all she had—even all her living. A church made up of such members could take the whole world for Christ. But only a few are devoted. There are few Marys to give, but many a Judas to calculate the value of the alabaster box of ointment.

It is an amazing circumstance that in 1881 the 1,200 church members belonging to the missions of the United Presbyterian Board in Egypt—most of them very poor men and women—raised 4,546 pounds, or more than $17 each for the support of churches and schools. The Baptists among the Karens have done equally well. We congratulate ourselves that the American churches give $5,500,000 for missions. But that is only fifty cents per member. If we gave as much for home and foreign missions as they gave for churches and schools our annual offering would be $170,000,000. Entire consecration is needed. Remember that we owe unto Christ even our own selves also.

Last Sabbath morning I preached in the Third Presbyterian church to an audience of five hundred. I told them the National Reform Association is in the field to stay. They propose that this nation shall swear allegiance to the King of kings, that it shall be impossible for the avowed enemies of morality and virtue to get any office or trust in this land, high or low; that our legislators and Congressmen shall deliberate with their Bibles open before them; that the Bible shall be placed in every public school throughout the Union; and that the divine law shall link the hearts and consciences of the people to the throne of God.

In the evening I preached in the Eastern Avenue M. E. church, Rev. D. N. Stafford, pastor. Rev. Mitchell, of the Dayton, Ky., M. E. church, was present and he insisted that I give that talk to the people of his charge next Sabbath evening.

I have been reading "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" by Prof. Henry Drummond. He says, "The position we have been led to take up is not that the spiritual laws are analogous to the natural laws, but that they are the same laws. It is not a question of analogy but of identity." If this be true our nation must either cease violating the plainest precepts of the divine law or go down as the nations of the past have done. Disobedience to the law of natural life in the individual, family or nation means death. But we have hope for our nation. "Pluto's prisoner, if not out of the cave, has at least his face to the light." J. M. FOSTER.

OUR BOSTON LETTER.

SATANIC EXULTATION.

In heavy gothic letters a header recently appeared in the non-partisan Boston Herald announcing the latest triumph of the Sabbath opponents.

"EXIT THE PURITAN SABBATH."

The article itself was a sort of triumph-song over the removal of the law prohibiting the circulation of the devil's bible—the Sunday newspaper. One strain, ringing with hellish taunt and sarcasm, was as follows: "It may be interesting to Rev. Jo. Cook to know that the 'Satanic press' had a free, unrestricted sale yesterday (last Sunday), a greater freedom, in fact, attending the sale of the Sunday newspapers than has hitherto been known. Before Boston was attacked by the recent spasmodic display of virtue, the periodical stores were permitted to keep open until 10 o'clock in the morning; but at that time that restricted privilege was denied them, and those who defied the law paid for their boldness in the municipal court. Under the new law the places can keep open all day."

This from a press which claims to be a public educator! What does it teach? That God's laws are a farce; that it is right to ridicule, repudiate, and willfully desecrate the Fourth Commandment. It infuses a deadly virus into the moral veins of the people which will ultimately cause religious anarchy. Aye, unless the poison is counteracted by the antidote of divine interference, I fear civilization will retrograde into grossest heathenism.

But God will interfere. The Sunday paper is a deadly foe to Christianity, and no Christian can read or in any way patronize it without complicity in its anti-Christ work. I have already said a great deal in the Cynosure concerning these Sunday abominations. The most appropriate title would be, Sunday soul-poisoners. Professor of Christianity, would you attend a wrestling match or a prize fight on Sunday? You virtually do when you read a Sunday paper. Would you visit the theatre or dime show on Sunday? You do when you read the Sunday paper. Would you attend a boat race, a horse race, or a billiard or pool match on Sunday? You do when you read the Sunday paper. Would you open your business, dabble in strikes, or quote market prices on Sunday? You do when you read the Sunday paper.

What is there in the Sunday paper for Christians? Nothing but sin. The Boston Herald, or any other paper, may feel glad over the "exit of the Puritan Sabbath," but in the excess of their jubilation they forget that the so-called—defiantly-called—Puritan Sabbath and the day of holy rest appointed by the Creator are one and the same. They may cancel the statutes of man, repeal or revise, but the laws of heaven are unalterable, infinitely more unchangeable than the laws of the Medes and Persians. In spite of the rumbling of the threatening law-quake, the chaos of religious anarchy, I hear the voice of the immortal Garfield ringing out, with slight change for adaptation, that wonderful utterance which should ever be the nation's watchword during great tribulation: "God reigns and the government of heaven still lives." D. P. MATHEWS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MEMPHIS MATTERS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I wrote you a few weeks ago on the situation of affairs (Masonically) in and around Memphis, and promised to give you further details concerning the Marion, Ark., affair; though in another State Marion is generally considered a kind of suburb of Memphis.

I have seen Elder Robinson and got from him a correct statement of the trouble in his church on the lodge question; it does not differ materially from that already communicated to you, save that there were only twenty-three of the lodge adherents who took charge of the church. The church is yet closed, and the injunction is to be sustained or dissolved before the Circuit Court Judge on Monday next.

Elder Robinson has preached regularly every Sabbath since the church has been locked up by these dignitaries of his Satanic majesty. The services have been held under a large tree in front of the church, and thus the congregation have been kept together.

There is considerable flurry in our city among the brotherhood known as the "Knights and Daughters of Tabor." It seems that the president of the Board, one J. W. Wheeler, has insulted the "Chief," who is, I believe, one Moses Dickson of Missouri. The official organ of the order, the Palladium, printed at Nashville, this State, is down on the Chief G. M., and is hitting some hard blows at the entire order. As usual, it seems that the only demoralized set of society banditti is to be found in Memphis, which is wholly given up to the power of these orders.

I was also a member of this order of Tabor, but was never inside of a lodge room, nor in any of their meetings. They were loud in the denunciation of my course, and a note clipped from the Palladium led me to believe that they had a hand in the murderous assaults made two years ago upon my home. The paper said:

At Memphis we have some good material, and also quite a lot of inferior. We have the report from reliable sources, that a certain D. G. M. of Memphis said that his members would mob the editor of this paper provided he would come to Memphis. The reporter goes on to say that when he had explained certain points to the D. G. M., that then he, the D. G. M., or mobber, said that he knew things were rotten in the head of this order, but that the editor had kept him from organizing a lodge, and he was willing to do most anything now to get rid of him. This D. G. M. is one of the supporters and body guards of the present administration, and is a very good sample of the whole lot. He is uneducated; not able to express his grievances in decent words, so he resorts to the venom of his heart, and uses language which a member of a gang of bandits would likely lose his life should he use. Yet, in our hypocritical Christian brotherhood, such men as he are chosen to baptize the babies. Daniel in the lions' den took no such risks for life and reputation as a respectable gentleman or lady is now taking in our order under the present condition of things.

This order, you see, baptizes children. I have tried to find out how the baptizing was done, but have been unable to do so. Some of the members of our church, whose husbands are of the world, have children in these juvenile, secret departments; and in conversation with one of the little girls she said, "In the Friendship lodge they baptize us; they make us go up a high ladder into the loft, and then they let us down with a long chain and call it baptizing us; it made me awfully afraid. I was blindfolded and could not see, and I just screamed as loud as I could." She also said: "The goat butts us in the back and bleats around us, but I found out it was only a big, wooden thing with hair on it."

After listening to this narrative from the little girl, I could but say, "O Lord, how long shall my people be the dupes of these ungodly and demoralizing influences."

The situation in Memphis is in a kind of comatose state: several of those who left the church have returned, and others want to come, but are ashamed. We are having quite an interesting time in prohibition matters, and we live in great hopes of carrying our State for prohibition. The lodgites are rather tame this year. On the 10th of June the Odd-fellows drove a huge billy goat in their procession as a representative specimen of the make up of the order. I suppose it had a local significance.

May God bless the readers of the Cynosure, and all who love the truth. R. N. COUNTER.

THE DAY OF DAYS.

NORTH CEDAR, KANS., July 4, 1887.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Your correspondent from Galena, Kansas, who vents his spleen against the Christian Sabbath, as such, asks the question, "What authority have you for that?" namely, "to call the first day of the week 'Sabbath'." With your permission I will answer. We have the authority of the spirit of inspiration. In Matt. 28: 1, when the words "first day of the week" first occur, the very same Greek word Sabbaton is used in the second clause of the verse that is used in the first! The word is in the genitive plural and should be consistently as well as truly rendered: "In the end of Sabbaths as it began to dawn toward the one of Sabbaths."

The Sabbaths ended were the Creation Sabbath, Heb. 4: 4, and the Jewish Sabbath, Heb. 4: 8. These were ended by Christ's fulfilling the law. He is thus the end of the law for righteousness to those who believe. Rom. 10: 4.

The "one of Sabbaths" that drew nigh or "that began to dawn" was the Christian Sabbath as alluded to Heb. 4: 10. It is to be noted that the numerical adjective "mian" is not an ordinal one to be translated "first," but cardinal to be translated one, and with accusative force, the one of Sabbaths. The same reasons obtain to translate the word Sabbath as in the former clause.

Not only is this true in this case, but in every instance where the day is called "the first day of the week" it is some inflection of the word Sabbaton, which is used and should have been translated Sabbath. The two instances in which the word Sabbaton is properly translated week in the New Testament it is in the singular and not in the plural as in Matt. 28: 1, and for the very obvious reason because if it were a plural noun in the Greek it must be translated by a plural noun in the English.

We then give the following instances of Divine authority and in the Greek for calling this day Sabbath, viz.: Matt. 28: 1; Mark 16: 2; Luke 24: 1; John 20: 1, 19; Acts 20: 7; 1 Cor. 16: 2. This ought to satisfy a reasonable man, so we hope Bro. Springer is. But as to the case which he thinks D. D. ought to be able to diagnose but are not, let me ask, Does he not call the violation of the sixth commandment murder, and of the seventh adultery, and of the eighth stealing, just as much since "Christ nailed penalties to the cross" as the Jews did before? Is there no lying and killing and stealing and idolatry and blasphemy and Sabbath-breaking since Christ died? Did Christ so end the law that there is therefore now "no transgression" as the Apostle argues?

The brother is laboring under the mistake that Christ abolished the law as a rule of duty as well as a covenant of works; in the latter sense we are "not under the law," but in the former we are still "under the law to Christ." 1 Cor. 9: 21.

And now, Mr. Editor, let me endorse most heartily your regret that the Scriptural word Sabbath is not used instead of Sunday or even "Lord's day," because there is some doubt about the last, but none about the first. Yours truly,

J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

LETTER FROM A KANSAS JAIL.

WINDFIELD JAIL, WINDFIELD, Kansas, }
7th mo., 8th day, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—About a week ago I was arrested on the charge of disturbing the peace of one of my neighbors "by singing, screaming and shouting," or in other words, holding a religious meeting. After going through the form of a trial I was assessed a fine and costs of about $65. A short time before I was arrested I had made some of the Freemasons mad by exposing their secrets at a tabernacle meeting held here in Windfield. I received an anonymous letter using me up in a terrible manner, and wishing "that my tongue might cleave to the roof of my mouth." How much the "Secret Empire" had to do with my arrest and imprisonment I do not know, but I think something. Their noted watchword in the time of Voltaire was, "Strike deep but conceal the hand." I suppose it is just the same now.

My friends have offered to get up a subscription to pay my fine and costs, but I have refused to let them do so. I believe it will be more for the glory of God for me to lie in jail awhile. I am waiting on a sick prisoner—there were twenty-three prisoners in jail when I came in. I am likely to do more good in my field of labor than I did on the outside.

Will you request all the readers of the Cynosure to pray for me. I am still purified, made white and tried. Praise the Lord. ISAAC PENNINGTON.

PITH AND POINT.

A REFORM PAPER IN ARKANSAS.

We are trying all we can to inaugurate, operate and publish a newspaper at this point on the reform order such as the Christian Cynosure. We are poor men, but we have put our means together and have bought a Washington press and type of sufficient quantity to publish a seven-column paper. Bro. Geo. W. Clark promises to help with his influence. Can you not help us in some way? Our cause is dedicated to God, and we think you can do nothing more profitable for us who need your help than in this way.—REV. A. M. MIDDLEBROOK, Pine Bluff, Ark.

SABBATH.

In the Cynosure of June 30 you give place to a contribution under the above caption in which the writer demands, "By what authority do you apply the term Sabbath to the first day of the week?" chapter and verse being the only testimony receivable in the case. I answer: by the authority of Jesus Christ. See Matthew, chapter 24, verse 20. The things spoken of in the context occurred from twenty-eight to forty years after the crucifixion, and the text intimates that it was Christ's design that a weekly day of rest and worship should be observed in the Gospel church and that it by his example and authority should be called Sabbath.—S. G., Olathe, Kansas.

ADMISSIONS OF A MASTER.

I had a long talk with one of the Sons of Ham yesterday. He is a Worshipful Master over a few of his blinded brothers. I convinced him by due trial that I was a Master Mason. He is wonderfully pleased to find me such a bright Mason, and really supposes that I have been knocked down by Jubelum; but I got my Masonry from Chicago by mail. In naming his Masonic authorities he said he had "Morgan." At our next interview I shall question him on this. He says they put their third degree candidates into a coffin, which confuses some of them so that they are almost senseless when they get out.—JAMES SPRINGER, Galena, Kansas.

A GOOD ORDER FOR GUERRILLAS AND THE LIKE.

A colored man who was in the army, named Peter Chapple, who was in the first colored Kansas regiment, called upon me at my home and said, that while in the army in this State, he knew of one John Council, a guerrilla, who was captured near Dardnell by his company. He knew him before the war, and he was wounded in the hand, and knew him then, and he knew the man was a Freemason. In a few days afterwards he was boxed up in a coffin and said to be dead. His wife with others followed after, crying, and some of the officers told them to cry harder. Since the war was over he had seen him and been at his mill, and only a short time ago he died here in this State. Mr. Chapple said that Masons seldom were hurt after being captured.—C. P. PAGET, Charleston, Ark.

THEY SPEAK NOT BY THE HOLY SPIRIT.

A preacher in writing to me on the secrecy question in reply to a letter of mine, says: "Harping and howling on secrecy from the pulpit is a foolish notion; does no good; makes enemies and no converts." In preaching on any subject it is of all importance to have Jesus with us, for he has said, "Without me ye can do nothing." The Spirit of Christ will not prompt any man to call an honest effort at preaching on secretism, "harping and howling." "If we have not the Spirit of Christ we are none of his." The Spirit of God is to lead us "into all truth," and preachers who are thus led will have as many converts to Jesus as those who "shun to declare the whole counsel of God." But "men loved darkness rather than light" eighteen hundred years ago and it is as true now as then.—CYRUS SMITH.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON V.—July 31.—The Temptation of Jesus.—Matt. 4: 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He is able to succor them that are tempted.—Heb. 2: 18.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

"Was led up of the Spirit into the wilderness." God was putting it to the test whether Jesus was qualified for his office—whether he would remain true to the spiritual idea of the Messiah, or would fall below it under temptation. Nor was the tempter in this case anxious simply to lead a good man into sin, but he was striking at the root of salvation: his aim was to undermine the principles of the kingdom of heaven, to lead the Christ, if possible, by some subtle way of conduct inconsistent with the office to which he had been chosen, and which he had freely accepted. This thought is the key to the story of the temptation.—Pres. Theo. D. Woolsey. In order to be the Saviour of tempted mankind, it was necessary that he himself should be tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin (Heb. 4: 15). For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted (Heb. 2: 18). The three temptations that follow are the same three great classes of temptations to which all men are now exposed. It was necessary that Jesus should not only be exposed to the same temptations as we are, but that he should gain the victory over them, and by the same means which are available to us. There was no doubt a preparation needed in the human Lord Jesus. He needed to feel and realize his great work, and grapple with the great difficulties in the way; to see clearly the course that lay before him, and deliberately put aside every hope and joy which would hinder his mission, accept every danger and trial, and consecrate himself wholly. It is hard for us to realize how much was involved in his choice.—P.

"To be tempted of the devil." The temptation of Christ was a real temptation, as real as our temptations, and without miraculous aids to victory, but only such aids as we all may possess. For "why was he tempted by a sagacious tempter if he could not by any possibility be led into evil? And, if he himself knew that he could not sin, what could the transaction have been to him but a mere formality? Or how is he an example to us, if his temptation is an unreality? No! They dishonor Christ's work who think thus. When he took on him the form of a servant he became by his own will subject to everything which can affect human nature."—Pres. Theo. D. Woolsey.

"And when the tempter came to him." Satan made his severest assault in the time of Jesus' greatest weakness. He still watches his time, and attacks us when weary, sick, troubled, disheartened, nervous and weak. It is not said in what form Satan came, but it is certain that it was not in any such hideous form as Satan is usually represented, or as Apollyon in Bunyan's Pilgrim. He never so appears in Scripture. If he had appeared to Christ as Satan, there would have been no temptation whatever, but only repulsion. Neither does Satan now so tempt men. He always comes in a garb of light, of beauty, of attraction; the foam of the wine-cup, not the dregs; on a golden throne, in a gilded palace, forever hiding his true nature. Only so could he tempt at all.—P.

"He said, If thou be the Son of God, command that these stones be made bread." Unless the act was wrong there would be no temptation, but merely an opportunity. Why should he not put forth the power that was in him, that he might eat? Because such power was his, not to take care of himself, but to work the work of him that sent him. Because it was God's business to take care of him, his to do what the Father told him to do.—MacDonald. It was wrong because he had taken upon himself the nature of man, and the conditions and sufferings of mankind. To have availed himself of his divine power to escape the bodily discomforts of humanity, would have been to fail in his mission of becoming our pattern, and our sympathizing High Priest, at the very outset.—Abbott. To Christ, considering the work he had to do, two things were necessary. He had to live his personal life (1) within the limits necessary to man, and (2) in perfect dependence on God. Had he transgressed either of these conditions, he had ceased to be man's ideal brother, or God's ideal Son. The moment he stooped to save himself, he became disqualified to save men.—Fairbairn.

"If thou be the Son of God, cast thyself down, for it is written." It was tempting God by a false and unwarranted use of the promises, making himself an object of supernatural care, exempted from obedience to natural laws, and hence not subject to the same laws as men. It was disobeying the whole Scriptures, defining what the Messiah should do. It was defying God's way for the coming of his kingdom. It would have destroyed the whole value and power of his salvation, gaining him subjects, not children, outward homage, and not new hearts. It would have rendered impossible the true and blessed kingdom of heaven, in a morally transformed world.—P.

"All these will I give thee." It was Satan's masterpiece; and he has continued throughout all ages to ply it, or rather to apply spices from it, when dealing with mankind.—Morrison. It will explain much that follows in Christ's life, and render the whole story very complete and consistent, if we suppose that what he was tempted to do was to employ force in the establishment of his Messianic kingdom.—Seeley. St. Luke's addition, "For that is (has been) delivered unto me, and to whomsoever I will, I give it," is full of significance. The offer was made by the tempter rested on the apparent evidence of the world's history. The rulers of the world, its Herods and its Cæsars, seemed to have attained their eminence by trampling the laws of God under foot, and accepting Evil as the Lord and Master of the world.—Ellieott.

"All these will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Not a bald act of falling in outward worship of the grim king of darkness; but such an act of worship, as when men worship money, by loving it better than God; as they worship success, by placing it before duty; a real, not a formal, worship. Satan is too wise to insist on the form, if he can gain the heart: the form will then soon come. Christ was to give up his spiritual kingdom for a temporal; his converting the world for a ruling of the world—a real act of worship of Satan, practically acknowledging him as supreme, and leaving all souls unconverted, and therefore under the dominion of Satan.—P. It was to use force and worldly policy, and all the wrong ways by which worldly kingdoms were then obtained.

"Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God." We share the third experience when we are tempted, for the sake of power, wealth, or influence, to conform to the world, and to employ Satan's instruments in even seeming to do God's service. We yield to the third when we are conformed to this world, and adopt its policies and methods, and imbibe its spirit for the sake of its rewards. We resist the third when we make a supreme love to God the sole inspiration of our hearts, and a supreme allegiance to him the sole rule of our lives.—Abbott. All the worship that Satan cares for in us, is a real service of evil. And we worship him when we are willing to do any wrong act for the sake of earthly gain; when we would lie to escape punishment, or deceive in order to make a good bargain, or use other people's money to gain wealth, or hide our principles to gain votes or popularity.—P. The one recurring peril of religion is the temptation to lower its high standard of truth and of action, in order to win the suffrages of the world.—Barrett.

SECRET SOCIETIES CONDEMNED

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

REV. THOMAS H. STOCKTON, D.D.:—Religion is as open as the sky and bright as the sun. As a man, an American, and a Christian, I love true manhood, true Americanism and true Christianity too well to approve of secret institutions of any kind.

L. L. HAMLINE, Bishop M. E. church, in his diary, 1848: "North Ohio Conference has progressed very rapidly till this time, but Masonry and Odd-fellowship have arrested us." At another time: "I have enjoyed and suffered much during this session. Masonry and Odd-fellowship, a bane in the midst of us, have done us much evil."—Life, pp. 325, 4.

A. M. MILLIGAN, D.D.:—Thus I have shown that Masonic oaths and obligations are not obligatory; that God has no part in them; that they are a profanation of his ordinance of the oath, and a usurpation of the prerogative of government under the wrath of an insulted God and the ban of outraged society: a great sin to make them but no sin to break them.

REV. J. P. LYTLE, D.D.:—We could fill a volume with extracts of the same tenor, showing, as these have shown, that Freemasonry is a distinct and positive religion with a promise of salvation; yet rejecting and denying the Lord Jesus; a religion which claims to have borrowed its principles and rites from those heathen institutions so abhorrent to God and corrupting to men.

REV. JOSHUA BRADLEY, a renouncing Mason:—A lying spirit is abroad, and speaks through all Masonic presses, and this spirit influences all who hate the truth, and will make them wax worse and worse, till sudden destruction shall overwhelm those workers of iniquity, to the astonishment of every beholder. Then Masonry will rise no more to trouble Zion, and spread delusion and death amid civilized nations.

C. B. WARD, missionary in India:—When men get saved out here they get out of the lodge of necessity. We are personally acquainted with a barrister, a doctor, a locomotive fireman, a station-master on a railway, a principal of a high school, a commissary officer, a military officer, and others who when saved at once quit the lodge for Christ's sake without any one saying much to them. The evil of the institution is too apparent to need pointing out in India.

JOSEPH S. CHRISTMAS, Pastor Bowery Presbyterian church, New York, 1830:—If these remarks should meet the eye of any follower of the Redeemer who still worships at the altar of Masonry, I beg him once more to consider whether, imposed on by the mock solemnities of the lodge and the pompous pretensions of the craft, he is not really attempting to effect a concord between Christ and Belial; and whether he does not owe it to the souls of Masons, to the honor of the church of Christ, and to the good of mankind, to come out and be separate.

DRS. LEONARD WOODS, EBENEZER PONTIER and THOMAS H. SKINNER, Professors at Andover to the Massachusetts legislature:—Praying for a full investigation into the nature, language, ceremonies, and form of rehearsing extra-judicial oaths in Masonic bodies; and if found to be such as the Memorialists describe them, that a law may be passed prohibiting the future administration of Masonic, and such other extra-judicial oaths, as tend to weaken the sanctions of civil oaths in courts of justice; and pray also for the repeal of the charter granted by this Commonwealth to the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts.

REV. MOSES THATCHER:—Our Saviour declared to the Jewish high priest, "Ispake openly to the world; and in secret have I said nothing." What now would be thought of the church if she should "tyle" her doors, impose obligations in secret, and place a perpetual seal upon the lips of her members? Would it any longer be believed that her sole object is to promote the religion of the Gospel? Now if the church, which is the purest body on earth, could not and would not be trusted as a secret society, who can blame conscientious and judicious men for drawing the conclusion that any secret society, of whatever description, is altogether unnecessary and cannot exist without becoming an object of suspicion, if not an engine of wickedness.

CHARLOTTE ELIZABETH:—Whatever worship is paid to any but God is paid to devils.

PETER CARTWRIGHT:—Masonry originated with the devil and will end with the devil.

BISHOP DAVID EDWARDS:—Membership in such societies is deserving of the discipline of the church, in the case of any of her own members, who, after due admonition, persist in clinging to their fellowship.

DR. WM. PALEY, the author and philosopher:—Promises are not binding when the performance is unlawful. When the promise is understood to proceed upon a certain supposition, and that promise turns out to be false, the promise is not binding.

DAVID R. KERR, D.D., editor of the United Presbyterian:—How can any man in good conscience swear to keep secret what, for anything he then knows, ought to be exposed? How can any man in good conscience swear to obey a code of laws yet unknown to him, and what for anything he knows, may be in conflict with the law of God? Such oaths are in their very nature essentially immoral.

REV. M. W. FAIRCHILD, Plymouth church, Lansing, Mich., address published by General Congregational conference:—These secret societies tend to weaken Christian fellowship, and diminish interest in church institutions, church services and church work. The lodge not infrequently entirely supplants the church. The testimony to this effect is overwhelming. The very nature of these orders necessarily damages church fellowship.

REV. J. T. COOPER, D. D., Philadelphia:—I wish to set before your mind, the glaring inconsistency in which professing Christians involve themselves when they become members of the society of Masons or Odd-fellows. Nothing is more sure, nothing is more susceptible of a demonstration, than that the religion of these societies rises no higher and extends no further than simple deism. They have no Christ, no mediator, not even in their prayers.

NATHANIEL EMMONS, D.D.:—I am convinced by the highest and most irresistible moral evidence, that the Masonic institution itself is the darkest and deepest plot that ever was formed in this wicked world against the true God, the true religion, and the temporal and eternal interests of mankind.

The Library of Universal Knowledge says of Dr. Emmons, who was one of the greatest of the Congregational clergymen: "When Masonry was popular he zealously opposed it."

REV. JAMES WILLIAMS, renouncing Mason and presiding elder M. E. Church, 1875:—While Christianity has its hundreds of institutions of charity and education, yet with all its boasted age you may travel from Maine to Oregon, from Dakota to Florida, from Palestine to North America, from Asia over the islands of the Pacific to Great Britain, and not find one home for the friendless, one orphanage, one asylum for the poor, or one hospital for the afflicted built or sustained by Masonic charities.

REV. WM. DELOSS LOVE, D.D., Milwaukee, report to Presbyterian and Congregational convention of Wisconsin:—Now if Masonry neither had, nor claimed to have a religion, we should have nothing to object on that point. But since it does claim to offer to men the true religion and the way to heaven, we have decidedly to say, that the society that fellowships in religion alike the heathen Chinese, the Mohammedan Arab, the American pagan savage, and the nominal Christian, is not itself Christian, does not illustrate the Christian religion nor show the way to heaven.

REV. JOHN MARSH, D. D., of the National Temperance Society, New York:—Secret temperance organizations are but stepping-stones. Young men here learn the language, forms and degrees of a temperance Masonry; and while they gather weekly in a secret lodge for, as they say, business, improvement and enjoyment, they easily slide into the more artful, deistical and dangerous Masonry, which has once and may again fill us with terror and give us blood to drink. From such a connection we say, the Lord deliver us. We plead with our temperance brethren to look at their responsibility, and at once cut loose from all connection by abandoning everything pertaining to secrecy.

EDITORS.

HENRY L. KELLOGG.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 21, 1887.

We hope the General Secretary will report soon and favorably from the secretaries of the great missionary societies, and that tract literature will be furnished every home and foreign missionary, showing the identity of lodge heathenism in the Bible and in home and foreign lands; that though their forms are ten thousand, their nature is one. By the omission of Christ they all take in the world and its god.

SECT AND SCHISM.—Our staunch friend R. W. Lyman of Cattaraugus county, New York, sends us an article against sect and schism, insisting that Christianity cannot be saved without destroying the sects any more than Lincoln could "save the union with slavery." This general doctrine is true, that sect is schism, and schism is sin; but churches with Christ's baptism, prayer-meetings, and communion tables in them are not to be destroyed, but reformed. They are not like lodges with their "cups" and "tables" of devils. These are to be destroyed. But our friend does not and cannot overestimate the evils of sect and schism. So we give the testimony of his article.

CANDIDATES FOR 1888 will from this time multiply from one motive or another; but Blaine and Cleveland will doubtless be the nominees of the old parties. At Lake Bluff Assembly one man suggested President Seelye to head the reform or Prohibition ticket. All the others, and we conversed with representatives of Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Wisconsin, were in favor of General Fiske of New Jersey and Colonel Bain of Kentucky, who are both good men, and neither of them in active connection with any secret order. General Fiske made a strong run for governor of New Jersey. He is endeared to intelligent colored voters throughout the South; his religious denomination (Methodist) is proud of him; and if he and Bain should run the Republican party would be swallowed up by the new reform party in 1888 and 1892; as the Whig party was by the Republicans in 1856-60.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE of the American party, viz., Capwell, Bailey, Conant, Paine, Needles, Cook, Howe, Stratton and Butler, reside in New York, the District of Columbia, Connecticut, Minnesota, Missouri, and Illinois. This committee can meet but once in the year, and to consult by mail is difficult; so the American convention appointed a sub-committee living near together, to meet, consult pro re nata, and report to Professor Bailey at Washington to lay their results before the National Executive committee of which he is secretary, to adopt, alter, or reject the same. Dr. Stratton, who is away summering, is chairman of the sub-committee, and a member of both. It is suggested that as soon as he returns he will call the sub-committee of nine together, and send the results of their deliberations to the National Committee by its secretary.

THE SITUATION OF THE ANTI-SECRET REFORM is this: The movement began in a local convention in Aurora, Ill., Oct. 1867, which called a national convention in Pittsburgh in May, 1868. A little fortnightly paper was started, which is now become the Cynosure. There are now twenty or more papers which advocate and endorse the reform; and the press generally recognizes the movement as an established fact. Though desiring to shun, smother, and avoid it, as something they dislike but dare not assail, when they do speak of it they treat it with respect; while the best minds of the best men in the United States accept this ground principle, that the Secret Lodge System is, in the words of Dr. Gray of the Interior, "A religion professing to save the souls of men without the mediation of Christ." During the twenty years since the Aurora Convention, like the fabled sea-god which when assailed shifted into a thousand forms, but when seized and held firmly was compelled to stand and give answers in his own proper shape, so is Freemasonry, under its thousand names and shapes, the same devil-god in all, and owns all the great temples of worship, and is the mother of the whole brood. The eyes of American Christians are being opened to the fact that any secret organization, binding its members beforehand to conceal they know not what, and to obey they know not whom, and that during life, is a "synagogue of Satan" or devil's temple, a lodge, by whatever name called; and though the secrecy is thin as gauze, and the bond of "obedience" be at first light as gossamer and soft as down; and though these myriad disguises under which the lodge now hides are deceivingly weakly, ambitious Christians, yet every true child of God will soon come out of them when they feel the cold slime of their snake-nature.

LAKE BLUFF.

THE W. C. T. U. BEING TURNED INTO A SECRET LODGE PROPAGANDA.

Last week Secretary Stoddard informed us that he was to speak on Tuesday evening at Lake Bluff Assembly on the Secret Lodge and Reforms. A number of people interested in that discussion went in to hear him from the vicinity of Chicago. He said the committee of five, Miss Willard, chairman, had accepted the topic, and he was to be called on first.

The evening came; but the subject had been dropped, with no word to Secretary Stoddard and nothing about secret societies. We were then told that the Knights of Labor would be discussed next day.

Wednesday we were entertained with a long half-day's laudation of the Knights of Labor. We asked, "Is not the other side to be heard?" Miss Willard, for the committee, answered, "The opponents of secret societies will this evening be allowed twenty minutes." Twenty minutes to answer a long half day, in which the public were promised a discussion of the Knights of Labor, and then one side given and the other put over to evening with the promise of twenty minutes!

THE SPEECHES.

A college president opened with an hour and a quarter speech, two-thirds wholly irrelevant to Knights of Labor, about prison labor, land reform, Ireland, and general descant on the sufferings of labor from capital. When he had done, no one of the audience had heard from him who formed the Knights of Labor organization, when, or where; or how to join, or what they promised!

He, however, did lay down three propositions, each one of which was distinctly false. They were: 1. "We (Knights) have no relations or connections with anarchists or socialists. None on earth are more hostile to them than we are."

Now Sept. 4th, last year, they their Chicago organ, called the "Knights of Labor," had this concerning the condemned anarchists: "May not the hanging of Parsons and his associates pass into history the same" as John Brown. "Those men will mount the scaffold as though it were the golden stairs to the gate of heaven." And in the Sept. 18th number we have this:

"THE LIVES OF THE ANARCHISTS.—The Knights of Labor will publish during the next three months the lives of the condemned anarchists, written by themselves."

2. This president of McKendree College said, "We (Knights of Labor) are opposed to all violence."

The falsehood of this statement is proved by the fact that Gov. Oglesby had two regiments of State troops a few months since to protect business men and their non-union workmen from the Knights of Labor here in Chicago. And in the Southwestern strike 30,000 Knights left work because one man was dismissed. Freight trains were stopped, and violence not only threatened but used.

3. This college president also, as did Mrs. Rogers and Miss Willard, represented the Knights as friends of temperance. This is met by the fact that Aug. 31st last, "The Philadelphia Brewers' Association unanimously voted to 'associate themselves with the Knights of Labor,' withdrawing from other workmen's unions."

Miss Willard acted as prompter the whole afternoon, introduced Mrs. Rogers as a Catholic, who had made her acquainted with Mr. Powderly, etc., sifted in brief speeches by the hour in favor of "the Knights," and, in short, is turning the W. C. T. U., which has always been an open Christian organization, into a society de propaganda fide for secret lodges.

If anyone thinks this statement too strong let him read the following circular, just received by the Cynosure from Mr. John A. Conant of Connecticut, with request for its insertion. It is written with a copying process on the ordinary printed note head of the "President's Office" of the W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill., with "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," at the top; and reads thus:

WASHINGTON, D. C., — 31, 1887.

DEAR FRIEND:—I am confident from all I learn that if you would join the Knights of Labor—women as well as men are members and there is no more a secret than in the Good Templars upon which the K. of L. society is largely modeled—you would have opened to you in every town and village an audience to talk to on total abstinence, Prohibition, the White Cross and Christianity in all its forms, such as we speakers rarely meet; an audience that does not go to church, and is not reached as it ought to be by Christian methods.

Do think and pass over this. It seems to be an open door. Sincerely yours, FRANCES E. WILLARD.

This strange circular is dated last January, but we now see it for the first time. We happen to know that Mrs. Gov. St. John and a multitude of W. C. T. U. ladies like her do not approve of their president acting as agent and solicitor for secret lodges. We expect to hear from many of these Christian women, and will give their views to our readers.

EFFRONTERY OF SECRET SOCIETIES.

"The term 'Secret Societies' so often applied to the various orders is erroneous. A secret society proper is one of which the membership, officials, system, meetings and action are unknown. The mere fact that an association sits with closed doors, discusses questions where none are admitted except those who belong to the family or organization, does not make that association a secret society. * * * No society is a secret one of which any reputable citizen may become a member by applying."—Organ of Am. Legion of Honor.

This is cool. If Masons, Odd-fellows, and "the various orders," vindicated by this writer, were hid in total, blank concealment it would defeat their object, which is to attract and swindle the weak and curious public, and establish a secret despotism by sworn obedience to unknown superiors. They conceal their mock solemn worship, their "work," and their plots. They are like gull-catchers, who hide in log-lodges, roofed with poles, covered with slices of lean whale; and while the silly birds devour the whale-meat, the gull-catchers pull them down between the poles without alarming the flock. All these "various orders" expose to view is bait; what they conceal is trap.

But he coolly tells us, "No society is secret which reputable citizens may join." Indeed! And suppose all citizens of a place were reputable, and all should join, what would become of the secrets when all were initiated, and all knew them? It never was intended that all should join. The intention is to form secret privileged orders.

But the California Patron and Agriculturist, organ of the grange, tells us the secrecy is to keep out the "black sheep," that is to say, the tricky, fraudulent, bunting farmers; when every man who knows enough to spell his name, knows that the tricky farmers are the first to join the grange, to get secret advantages of their neighbors. The black sheep crowd into the dark lodges where all are of one color; and to justify such lodges by the privacy of juries, families, etc., is to insult the magistracy and the home. Home privacies are only for decency; lodge secrets for fraud. Home privacies are temporary; lodge secrets life-long. And to pretend that the California farmers who do not join the secret granges are the "black sheep" of the agricultural flock, is to dispute human nature, the nature of secrecy, and plain, every-day observation and fact. The New York Masonic Grand Lodge has just withdrawn the charter of Prudence Lodge for receiving some of the vilest characters of the city; which shows what sort of persons are naturally attracted by secret orders.

OUR SCHOOLS AND THEIR TEACHERS.

The greatest meeting of the National Educational Association last week turned the attention of Chicago from wheat corners, the Lake-front case, and the "boodler" trials. The report of its proceedings will fill a volume, and an interesting one. We must forbear to attempt any description of the school exhibit which filled—no, was crowded into the south half of the Exposition building and covered acres. The marvelous attainments of our schools are not a whit behind the best development of the nation in other directions. We are as great a school people as railroad, or newspaper, or convention people. We must deny ourselves the pleasure of reviewing the addresses, papers and discussions. They began Tuesday evening and closed Friday evening, with three sessions daily, and in the afternoon meetings in seven different halls at the same time.

While the discussions on temperance instruction, art, industrial, technical, vocal and primary education, the Kindergarten, the duties of superintendency, etc., were often of great interest, the topic of highest import was suggested by the occasion of the centennial of the Ordinance of 1787 for the government of the "Northwest Territory." The opening address of President Sheldon, Wednesday evening, introduced this theme of profound interest, as he announced that the Continental Congress in New York adopted this famous ordinance about eight o'clock

(the time he was speaking), July 13, 1877. The history of this ordinance and its educational influence and results were discussed in able papers; but in no particular was this discussion of greater interest than in its influence on the moral character of the nation. This was very ably considered by President J. L. Pickard of Iowa State University. This discussion was preceded by the reading of the following resolution by President Sheldon of the Association:

Resolved, That the attempt to separate the cultivation of the moral and intellectual powers, which prevails in some schools, is unphilosophical, injurious to the children, and dangerous to the State; and further, that in the judgment of this Association, the Bible should be recognized as the text-book on ethics, and that the Word of God, which made free schools, should hold an honored place in them.

This ably-drawn resolution was received with hearty applause from the thousand teachers in Central Music Hall. It was drawn by President C. A. Blanchard, of Wheaton. Thursday a paper by President Strong, of Northfield, Minn., on the Christian College was followed by a discussion in the same line with the sentiment of the resolution. Wednesday afternoon in Farwell Hall, Col. Parker of the Chicago Normal School led in a debate involving the same idea of which he was an able champion. A paper Friday afternoon in Farwell Hall on "The Importance of Religious Motives and Sanctions in Moral Training," was read by Dr. Robert Allyn, of Carbondale, Ill., before a small audience. There was no discussion of the paper which took the strong ground of the "necessity" of such motives in the training of children.

This is the merest glance at a single topic in this great meeting. It is enough to show the high regard of American teachers for Bible morality in connection with their work; and promises the development of an influence which shall soon overcome the suicidal policy, inspired by Romanists and German infidels, which has banished the Word of the Living God from many of our public schools.

—We have omitted to note that the Baptist Weekly, of June 16, contained an editorial on Enoch Honeywell which quoted several paragraphs from the address prepared by himself and read at his funeral.

—The Conservator notes an incident of a United Brethren convention in Chambersburg, Pa., in which Rev. J. S. Wentz told of an Odd-fellow who wished to join the church of which he was pastor, and to which the man's wife belonged. The pastor was shown the constitution of the order to prove its innocence. But when shown its hidden wickedness, and that the name of Christ was excluded from its prayers, the poor man had to admit the fact, but his self-interest got the better of his conscience, and he claimed that notwithstanding its wicked features he must remain with the order, "because he had paid in so much money."

—In our correspondence is a brief letter from Pine Bluff, Arkansas, asking for help to start a new paper among the colored people which shall advocate Christian reforms. Since the note from Bro. Middlebrooks was in type, long letters have been received from him and George W. Clark of Detroit urging there be a fund raised to help the paper to its feet. Bro. Lewis Johnson is associated in the work. We do not think it wise to urge friends to put money into this enterprise, when the Living Way near by, a paper of similar character, needs aid also. Is it not better economy to extend and establish the press agencies we have already than to put money into new ones which cannot promise to be self-supporting?

—At Birmingham, Iowa, a number of the enthusiastic Anti-masons have drilled themselves in the Masonic ritual, and have formed a clandestine lodge, which advertises its meetings and occasionally visits neighboring towns to show the people how men are transformed from American citizens into Freemasons. The last Free Press tells of a late excursion: "Last Saturday the Clandestine Lodge made its way according to appointment to Libertyville and worked the third degree to the delight and amazement of a large audience. The Rev. Mr. Bolton, of Village township, felt called upon to put in a word for the silent Masons. He suggested that Birmingham and College Springs bore some relation to the lower regions because the opposition is so strong to the secret societies. He made many other remarks that showed his ignorance or depravity, but Wm. Miser effectually silenced him by facts and arguments. The boys did themselves great credit by their proficiency in the work, and not many lodges about here can equal them. They are ready at any time to prove this by a competitive drill. They propose to visit other lodge-ridden towns and show the urchins how prominent citizens obtain influence."

THE LAKE BLUFF CONVOCAION.

Desiring that the National Christian Association should be represented in this meeting which advertised itself in its circular, "A FREE PLATFORM—ONLY BIGOTRY, INTOLERANCE AND DISCOURTESY EXCLUDED," I applied to Dr. Jenkins, chairman of the Executive Board, for a place in the programme, and was assured that the list was already overcrowded, but there might be an opening in the "Free Parliament," which was a new feature and under the management of Miss Frances E. Willard. No one could speak officially in the absence of Miss Willard in Dakota, but Miss Mary Allen West being asked that Mrs. Stoddard be allowed to distribute the N. C. A. literature, promptly and courteously replied conceding all that was asked in the "Training School," which was the extent of her jurisdiction.

The N. C. A. Board approved the effort, and Mrs. Stoddard reached the grounds on the 6th and took a room at Lake Bluff Hotel, headquarters of the W. C. T. U. She began her work of distributing tracts and personal conversation at once, and after continuing nine days she assures me that she did not meet a single instance of discourtesy, but on the other hand received the most cordial assurance of good will from Miss Willard, Miss West and many of the noble women gathered to work and pray for the destruction of the saloon and the coming of Christ's kingdom.

I reached the grounds on the 7th, in time for the opening session of the "Free Parliament." Dr. Jenkins, who presided, asked that a question-box be passed and that all who had any subject which was germane to the Convocation's work should drop it in the box. I put in this general proposition, "The Secret Lodge system and its Relation to Moral Reforms.—J. P. STODDARD."

The questions were referred to a committee of five: Miss Willard, chairman, Judge James Baker, Rev. I. Villars, Rev. M. A. Gault, S. T. Hastings and Dr. Jenkins. Next morning Dr. Villars, the secretary of the committee, informed me that the topic had been assigned to me and the time set for Tuesday evening, and that he expected to answer the other queries (except perhaps the one given by St. John) and that he should favor my being allowed twice the time allowed to others. I was entirely satisfied and remained silent in the meetings except when called upon.

On Tuesday afternoon Dr. Villars presented the Knights of Labor from his standpoint as a devoted member of the order, in a lengthy address, which Miss Willard commended and asked him to write out for publication. Mrs. Rogers, a Catholic lady Knight, the mother of twelve or thirteen children, the youngest in her arms, was introduced as one who had a thorough knowledge of the order. The questions asked her were numerous and the lady showed skill in replying.

I asked but three, which were, except the last, promptly answered. The first referred to the religion of the K. of L., which was answered, "We have no prayers or religious services in our lodges. We meet for business and not for worship." Second, "Do the men and women take the same oath or obligation?" Answer: "They do." Third: "Would it be proper for me to read that obligation here?" This brought some of the brotherhood to their feet and occasioned quite a sensation, and it was decided in a kind of a general way that it would be improper.

Dr. Jenkins presided in the evening. Dr. Villars read and answered questions until reaching the one which St. John gave, and to which he was expected to reply. In his absence, and for the first time I spoke for five minutes, the allotted time on questions in the Free Parliament. The committee gave me twenty minutes to speak on the Secret Lodge System, etc., for which they have my thanks; and had also arranged another specialty (occurring in no other instance) by which twenty minutes was assigned to a reply to my remarks, designating John B. Finch as my opponent. I endeavored to be courteous, temperate and pointed, basing my remarks mainly upon the facts given by Mrs. Rogers in the afternoon. My opponent followed, choosing as his line of defence a personal assault, exhibiting a familiarity with terms not always popular in refined society, and laying great stress upon such words as "THIEF, LIAR, FOOL, TRADUCER," etc. If an expression of regret is pardonable on the part of one so vehemently assailed, I will say that it seemed unfortunate that my opponent devoted nearly his entire effort to portraying the personal wickedness of a single individual rather than in discussing a great and important theme on which the people desired information. He is prominent among the Knights of Labor; at the head of the Good Templar order, and in this instance the chosen exponent of the views of the management of the convocation, and until his constituency is publicly heard from, it is possibly indecorous to suggest that Mr. Finch misrepresented, rather than expressed, the will of his constituency by using unchaste language and a tirade of personal abuse.

I met with the business session, and desiring not again to come in with an application for a place on the programme at the eleventh hour, I indicated my purpose to seek a recognition on the platform, and part in the programme of the "Lake Bluff Convocation" for the National Christian Association in 1888.

SEPARATED BY VIOLENCE.

HINMAN AND COLE IN NORFOLK—THE RULE OF CASTE OVERPOWERS THEM.

NORFOLK, Va., July 14, '87.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Bro. Cole and I left Washington at 5 P. M. of the 11th, on the Lady of the Lake, one of the fine river steamers that ply on the Potomac; and, after a delightful ride down the river and bay, found ourselves next morning at Fortress Monroe. An hour later we were in Norfolk, and were threading its rough, hot and narrow streets.

Our first call was on Rev. W. D. Cook of the African M. E. church, who, since I was here in April, has been reading the Cynosure, and has become much interested in our reform. He thought that as a preliminary step there should be a meeting of the colored ministers of Norfolk and vicinity, the matter fully laid before them and their co-operation solicited. He said they had such an association which had held weekly meetings, but had adjourned for the summer, but he would undertake to call an extra meeting.

This met our approval, and in the meantime we have called on a number of pastors and have conversed with them on the subject of secret societies and secured their approval of the conference which has been appointed for next Monday morning. I need not say that most of these ministers are or have been members of secret societies, and nearly all the members of their congregations are actively connected with them.

Among the white people of this city Masonry has always been a controlling power. There is a Freemason street and a "Freemason St. Baptist church"—the largest in the place.

Tuesday afternoon Bro. Cole and I started to go over to Portsmouth. We went to the ferry and procured our tickets, and as we stepped into the waiting room Bro. Cole was ordered to go to the other side. I told him not to go, and an employe came and asked if I wished him to remain with me, and I said I did, and he suffered him to remain. But when we went on board the boat, he was at once met and ordered to go to the other side of the boat, as colored people were not allowed on that side. After some slight protest we consented to this, and I said I would go with him. I was told that this would not be permitted, and on my attempting to go I was rudely seized and pulled back. As the boat had not started we at once went on shore. There is probably nowhere else in Virginia (if in all the South) any other place where the caste spirit is so rampant.

A suit for years has been pending in the courts against this ferry company. The whole proceedings are in manifest violation of both State and National (to say nothing of Divine) law. A city that scarcely provides school accommodations for one-half its school population, and where a large percentage are illiterate, may be expected to be controlled by the "lewd fellows of the baser sort." What Norfolk needs, is that her intelligent citizens should stop brooding over the Lost Cause, and apply themselves to the living present. Instead of this, grog shops abound and lewd pictures are sold on the streets, and in the hands of both white and colored children, to the great injury of public morals. The civil authorities seem quite oblivious to this abomination. I am told that outrages on colored people, on the prosperous and cultured, as well as the poor and ignorant, are becoming increasingly frequent, and are quite intolerable. I am far from wishing to promote sectional animosity, and I know, too, that this caste spirit is not confined to the South, but until our churches cease to be divided on the color line, and our citizens become in fact, as well as in theory, entitled to the equal protection of the laws, our religion and our republicanism is grossly dishonored.

To-day there is a Baptist missionary meeting of ministers and delegates from Virginia and North Carolina at the Baptist church in Portsmouth. I hope to attend. Bro. Cole and I are each invited to preach twice next Sabbath in some of the larger churches of this city. We expect to remain here till next Tuesday morning and then go to Richmond. Pray for us that we may endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE HOME.

LOSS AND GAIN.

If the June rose could guess
Before the sunbeam wooed her from the bud,
And reddened into life her faint young blood,
What blight should fall upon her loveliness,
What darkness of decay, what shroud of snow—
Would the rose ever blow?

If the wild lark could feel
When first between two worlds he caroled clear,
Voicing the ecstasy of either sphere,
What apathy of song should o'er him steal,
What broken accents and what faltering wing—
Would the lark ever sing?

Alas, and yet alas,
For glory of existence that shall pass!
For pride of beauty and for strength of song!
Yet were the untired life a deeper wrong.
Better a single thro' of being win,
Than never to have been!

THE FAITH OF INNOCENCE.

I heard yesterday from an under official in the Home Secretary's office a most remarkable story taken from the criminal records in that office. It is a story, which if related in novel form, would be declared impossible. If it had occurred in America, newspapers would have been full of it. Here, only one or two of the society papers have barely hinted at it. The papers have kept their mouths shut simply because the Government wanted nothing said about the case. Imagine the New York papers keeping quiet about a story that the Washington administration desired to keep from getting to the public for fear it would discredit in the public mind circumstantial evidence as a means of securing conviction of alleged criminals.

The story in brief is this: "Lee, a man-servant employed in the house of a widow of advanced age in some place in Devonshire, was charged with the murder of the old lady. They lived in a retired place. Lee was the only man-servant in the house. The object of the murder was robbery. The old lady's throat was cut from ear to ear in the night without awakening anyone or creating any disturbance. The murder was only discovered the next day; Lee was the only person in the house upon whom suspicion rested. It was shown by the prosecution that he was the only one who could have committed the murder. There was a female servant in the house, but she was old and slept in a remote quarter from her mistress's bedroom. It was held that she would have been incapable of committing the murder, not having sufficient strength to make the savage cut which took her mistress's life. In fact there was nothing to even indicate her guilt, while there were hundred of pieces of evidence against Lee.

Lee declared his innocence stoutly from the first, but he was borne down by the prosecution. He was convicted by the unanimous vote of the jury, and the judge sentenced him to be hanged. There was not a shred of doubt in the minds of the public concerning Lee's guilt. In the court-room when sentence of death was pronounced Lee made a very sensational statement. Looking towards the judge he said in solemn tones, "You have sentenced an innocent man." And then looking upward, he added: "But I know that my God will protect me, and will prevent this sentence from being carried out." In the cell Lee was always confident. He said that he was protected by God and the authorities could not take his life. This singular behavior of the prisoner simply produced the impression upon the minds of the public that Lee had become crazed by much mental suffering. The day of execution came. Lee still retained his confidence. Even on the scaffold he said, "God will save me yet." The rope was put around his neck and the black cap adjusted. Lee's last words as the rope was put around his neck were, "This sentence cannot be carried out." When the trap fell the rope broke. This made a great impression upon those present. A second rope was sent for, Lee protesting that it was useless to try to hang him. He was again placed upon the trap. It fell, and the second rope broke. At this the officials became very much demoralized, and took Lee back to his cell. When the story of this bungling attempt to hang this prisoner reached the public next morning a great roar of indignation went up. Letters poured in upon the papers saying that the man had been punished enough, and under the influence of this public opinion the Home Secretary commuted his sentence to imprisonment for life.

The strangest part of this story is to come. Several weeks ago the ancient woman servant employed in the house where the murder was committed became ill, and soon it was found that she could not recover. Upon her death-bed she confessed to having committed the murder herself. Her story was so complete, so circumstantial, and substantiated by her giving places where articles connected with the murder were concealed, that its truth could not be questioned. The Home Secretary at once gave orders to have Lee released with a full pardon. But it has been done in a quiet and secret way to prevent a knowledge of the case getting to the public. This same official has also granted to Lee a pension of thirty shillings a week during his life in compensation for the wrong done to him by his unjust trial and imprisonment.—T. C. Crawford in a New York daily.

THE FRENCH AND MADAGASCAR.

General Willoughby, the American officer who, in the middle of the war, took command of the Malagasy troops, and who finally became ambassador of the Queen and negotiated and signed the treaty with the French, has contributed, an extremely interesting article to the Fortnightly Review, in which he declares that the treaty does not give the French a protectorate over Madagascar, that by the war "she has lost nothing that she greatly values, and she has preserved her independence." General Willoughby describes the people of the many Malagasy tribes as naturally robust, and as hardened to fatigue and endurance from their youth up. They number over five and a-half millions, and the Hovas, who are the sovereign tribe, and occupy the central province, number less than a million, while the Sakalavas, inhabiting the whole western side of the island, number over one million three hundred thousand. The Betsilcs and the Betsimisarakas tribes, who inhabit the east coast, are numerically very strong, their population being over three millions. All the different tribes speak but one language, and are subject to the Hovas, who are Malays, and though physically inferior, being below middle stature, have considerable mental powers and are comparatively advanced in civilization. Lighter of complexion than Spaniards, Italians or Turks, they have, as a rule, "soft, straight hair, hazel eyes, a well-proportioned and erect carriage, and are distinguished by great courage and activity." Their dialect is a written one, and they have preserved their traditions, songs and proverbs. They differ from the other tribes, who are much more powerful physically, being on an average six feet in height, but having broad, low foreheads, flatfish noses, thick lips, and wavy hair; and being mentally greatly inferior to the Hovas. The Sakalavas, who were the allies of the French, are described as being nomadic in their habits, as sly, perfidious, brutal and arrogant, and as living on plunder, so that a European is never safe a moment among them if at their mercy. Since the foundation of the present dynasty, fifty-six years ago, by Radama I., "the national history of the Malagasy literally bristles, excepting during the reign of Ranavalona II., with reforms and improvements. Ranavalona II. was a Christian when she came to the throne, and she began her reign by ordering her ancestral idols to be burned—an example which, owing to the work of the missionaries, was immediately followed by most of her people. At the close of her reign the schools numbered more than eleven hundred, and the Gospel was preached in twelve hundred churches. She inaugurated great governmental reforms, established eight departments, presided over by secretaries of state, home, foreign, war, justice, law, commerce, agriculture, finance and education, with a staff of clerks for each. Courts were established, the army organized, a rural police provided, a regular system of taxation inaugurated, and slavery abolished.

The monarchy is limited by means of a strange provision of the law, which requires that the queen shall marry her prime minister, thus bringing about a union of the classes of the noblemen, represented by the queen, and the people, represented by the prime minister. The present prime minister, who has held the office during the lives of the last two queens, is described as an enlightened reformer, and is known amongst Europeans by the honorable sobriquet of "Deal Fair." He makes a kind and wise husband to Her Majesty Queen Ranavalona III., the niece of the late queen, who is twenty-four years of age, and was educated at the London Missionary Society's School for Girls. She is described as being a model ruler and possessed of many accomplishments. In public she wears European costumes, and her palaces are furnished in European style. The French cut but a sorry figure in their attack on Madagascar. On the flimsy excuse that a portion of the island had been sold to them by the rebellious Sakalavas they made war with the queen, and, after an inglorious campaign, closing with a couple of repulses, consented to a treaty. Under the fifteenth article of this treaty the French consent to the sweeping away of all the claims founded upon the "historic rights" of 1841 and 1842, and to the recognition of Ranavalona III. as sovereign of the whole island. The first and second articles stipulate that the foreign relations of Madagascar shall be placed under the protection of the government of France, but before the queen would sign the treaty with those articles, she required an explanatory clause making it clear that Madagascar should have the right to negotiate her own commercial treaties with foreign nations, free from the interference of the French government. Madagascar consented to pay four hundred thousand pounds to France, but for this France undertook all the liabilities of the war amounting to eight hundred thousand pounds. The French have evacuated Tamatave, and now only occupy one part with a garrison so weak and so ill-supported by war ships that General Willoughby says they are practically prisoners of the Malagasy, and, as such, hostages for the observance of the treaty. In conclusion he says: "I am well assured from my experience of the Malagasy disposition that France will never acquire a protectorate over Madagascar." From all of which it would appear that France has subdued the Hovas in about the same manner that Artemus Ward won his fight, by inserting his nose between the teeth of his opponent.

DON'T SHOOT AT THE BIRDS.

Last spring we boys were having a splendid time with our rubber shooters; every boy in the neighborhood had one or more. None of our mothers liked it; some windows got broken, and when one or two little birds got killed, our mothers were much excited.

There was a bluebird that built its nest year after year in an elm tree close to one of our windows. One day my mother saw a boy shooting at it; he didn't hit, but she made up her mind it was time for the shooting to stop; and when, not long after, little Willie Brand had his eye most put out, they all thought so.

There was a fuss about it. There were pieces in the paper about how rubber shooters were dangerous things; and then the police came about and said that every boy that shot would have to pay five dollars for it. They all thought that was more than they could stand, so they stopped.

Mother had given me ten cents for mine long ago and burnt it, so I was glad when the other fellows had to stop.

This year we thought we'd have a little fun and keep quiet about it. Jim Barlow made mine, and it was a first-rate shooter, I tell you; I gave him my top and a skate-strap and thirty marbles for it; he said 'twould shoot equal to a revolver.

I was very careful how I used it, for I didn't want mother to know that I had it. I used to shoot at stray dogs and cats, though it did make me feel bad sometimes, to hear 'em howl if I hit 'em. I used to shoot at the knot hole in the barn door, too, to see how many times in twenty I could shoot in. It wasn't much fun when we had to keep out of the way all the time.

One day I was wandering about the lower end of the garden with my shooter. There were plenty of birds all around, but I didn't want to shoot at them, if I could find anything else to shoot at. I got over the fence into another lot, but still there were birds everywhere.

I shot a few times, just to frighten them a little.

Then I heard one singing beautifully right over my head. I couldn't see it very plainly, and I don't believe I meant to hit it at all, and I tell you I was frightened when it came falling right down at my feet, with a sad kind of a little scream.

I picked it up and tried to make it fly, or walk, but it would not—its pretty eyes were half shut, and it kept panting with its bill. It was a bluebird.

I knew I never could keep it from mother; for when I have been doing anything very dreadful, I always feel as if I was lost till I've been and told her. As I carried the poor bird through the garden, a drop of blood fell from its mouth right on to a great white lily that seemed looking up to ask me what I had been doing. Mother was standing near the back piazza; as I laid the bird on her hand, it stopped panting and was still.

Mother said: "What's the matter?" But there was such a lump in my throat I couldn't speak a word. Then she saw the shooter in my hand, and she said:

"Did you kill that little bird?"

I tell you it scared me, the way she spoke. I never heard her speak in such an awful voice before.

Then she said: "You have stolen away its little life—it was all the life it had. The Lord loves his helpless little creatures; he gave them to us to make us happy, and he will never bless those who are cruel to them."

Then she put the little bird up to her cheek, and I saw her tears come. She took the shooter and laid it on the kitchen fire. I didn't get any ten cents this time, you may be sure; and then she said: "You may go to your room."

I'd a great deal rather she'd whipped me than to have to go there and just have to keep thinking. I thought of all the beautiful days of sunshine I had taken away from that poor little bird, and how it would never fly through the air, or sing in the trees, or see the flowers and the grass any more. And I wondered if it had a nest and little birds, and what would become of them if it had.

And all of a sudden I jumped up as I thought of the bluebird that had come to build its nest near us for so many summers. As soon as mother let me out (it wasn't very soon, for she gave me plenty of time to think) I ran to her nest.

The little birds all held their heads straight up, and opened their big little mouths, so I almost knew their mother hadn't fed them for some time. I fed them the best I could, and I watched that evening to see if their mother'd come, but she didn't.

Before I went to bed I got a piece of soft cotton, and covered 'em up. I thought, you see, that if I took good care of 'em, they might live without their mother. But in the morning only two of them held up their heads to be fed, and before night they were all dead. So you see I had taken away all the sunshine from them, too. My sisters cried when they knew their little birds and their mother were all dead.

I don't think I want another shooter. I don't believe I'll ever see another white lily but what it'll say to me, "You killed that bluebird!"—Youth's Companion.

THE ROBIN.

My old Welsh neighbor over the way
Crept slowly out in the sun of spring,
Pushed from her ears the locks of gray,
And listened to hear the robin sing.

Her grandson playing at marbles, stopped,
And cruel in sport, as boys will be,
Tossed a stone at the bird who hopped
From bough to bough of the apple tree.

"Nay," said the grandmother, "have you not heard,
My poor, bad boy, of the fiery pit,
And how, drop by drop, this mercurial bird
Carries the water that quenches it?"

"He brings cool dew in his little bill,
And lets it fall on the souls of sin;
You can see the mark on his red breast still
Of fires that sear as he drops it in.

"My poor bron ruddy'n I my breast-burned bird,
Singing so sweetly from limb to limb,
Very dear to the heart of our Lord
Is he who pities the lost like him!"

"Amen!" said I to the beautiful myth;
"Sing, bird of God, in my heart as well;
Each good thought is a drop wherewith
To cool and lessen the fires of hell.

"Prayers of love like rain-drops fall,
Tears of pity are cooling dew,
And dear to the heart of our Lord are all
Who suffer like him in the good they do!"

—John. G. Whittier.

BIRDS KILLED BY HARSHNESS.

The Boston Journal says it is well known that birds are very sensitive to tones of the voice, and are terrified at any loud, angry words. A lady who wished to make a bobolink stop singing, at last scolded it in a loud voice and then took up a scarf and shook it in rebuke at the caged bird. In a moment the bird was still, and a short time after made a fluttering about the cage. Its owner turned to the bird and was shocked to see it fall dead. Unkind words had killed it. We know of two cases similar to this. In one case a canary-bird, and in the other a mocking-bird, died within five minutes after being spoken to in a violent, angry tone.—Our Dumb Animals.

HOW TO MAKE YOURSELF AGREEABLE.

Very rarely, if ever, young persons acquire the ability to converse with ease and fluency. This implies, first of all, good ideas, clearly and sensibly expressed. An empty mind never made a good talker; remember, "you cannot draw water out of an empty well." Next in importance is self-possession. "Self-possession is nine points in the law"—of good breeding.

A good voice is as essential to self-possession as good ideas are essential to fluent language. The voice, from infancy, should be carefully trained and developed; a full, clear, flexible voice is one of the surest indications of good breeding; it falls like music on the ear, and while it pleases the listener, it adds to the confidence of its possessor, be he ever so timid. One may be witty without being popular; voluble without being agreeable; a great talker and yet a great bore. It is wise, then, to note carefully the following suggestions:

Be sincere; he who habitually sneers at everything will not only render himself disagreeable to others, but will soon cease to find pleasure in life.

Be frank; a frank, open countenance and a clear, cheery laugh are worth far more, even socially, than "pedantry in a stiff cravat."

Be amiable; you may hide a vindictive nature under a polite exterior for a time, as a cat masks its sharp claws in velvet fur, but the least provocation brings out one as quickly as the other; ill-natured persons are always disliked.

Be sensible; society never lacks for fools. If you want elbow-room, "go up higher."

Be cheerful; if you have no great trouble on your mind, you have no right to render other people miserable by your long face and dolorous tones. If you do you will be generally avoided.

But above all, be cordial; true cordiality unites all the qualities we have enumerated.—American Agriculturist.

TEMPERANCE.

PROHIBITION NOTES FROM OHIO AND MICHIGAN.

EATON RAPIDS, MICH.

No report will or can set forth the enthusiasm which pervaded the Ohio Prohibition Convention, the intense earnestness which characterized its proceedings. The Toledo Blade, I am informed, said it was "a dismal failure." Not wishing to dispute with so reliable a man as Nasby, I would simply invite him to show us his idea of a splendid success. If about 600 delegates and an ever-surgant tide of good feeling, pride and joy, do not constitute a successful convention, I would walk miles to see what does.

The Woman Suffrage Question created some discussion. Prof. Frost of Oberlin, chairman of the committee on resolutions, upon this topic made a majority report, which declared in favor of suffrage and for its submission to the people, and a minority report, which pronounced simply for submission. The latter embodied Prof. Frost's own view, and was vigorously advocated by him. Others came to his support, Dr. Leonard among them, though after some delay. But Mother Stewart was there, and around her were Mrs. Monroe, of the W. C. T. U., and Miss Henrietta Moore, and other suffragists. Had they kept silent, the minority report must have carried; but they were not silently disposed. They said many plain things, Miss Moore speaking most plainly of all. With cool courage she even assailed Dr. Leonard, and in that convention this was not a light thing to do, for he had the hearts of nearly or quite all; declared him given to policy, and not bold in the advocacy of his convictions. Remembering his magnificent campaign of two years ago, this seemed a hard saying; but Dr. L. had said in course of the discussion that he believed in suffrage, and did not like to go against it, but felt that he must. He bore Miss Moore's attack with calm serenity, and made no reply.

The Frost Minority Report was adopted after several hours of talk. Mother Stewart and her coadjutors manifested disappointment, but were not grievously hurt. I don't think they expected to win this time. They may hope to next.

The choice of candidate for governor excited uncommon interest. At the very hour balloting began there was no popular selection. Dr. Leonard's refusal to stand made an uncertain thing. But finally two names appeared conspicuous, and all others were dropped. Morris Sharp and Walter Mills were like Abou Ben Adhem, in that they led all the rest. The friends of Mills even inclined to push him, and he developed gratifying strength, but Sharp had a certain prestige of business relation which commended him to many, and some of Mills's warmest friends were in doubt whether he ought to be put first at the front in State leadership. He would have made a gallant fight; but Sharp was chosen. Wisely then they nominated Mills for lieutenant governor by acclamation, and thus made a double-headed ticket of great acceptability and power. Mr. Sharp speaks fairly well, though a banker and a business man; and Mills has hardly a superior in all our platform ranks.

The boycott, too, is to be applied in both Ohio and Michigan. At Elyria and Bowling Green we felt it, in the former State during the camps there. Few Republicans came out during the three days' meetings at either place. Mr. E. W. Metcalf, Elyria's wealthy anti-saloon Republican, did attend, and contributed handsomely to the guarantee fund; but he is almost in straight Prohibition fellowship. He has put a good deal of money into the effort to secure Republican prohibition, and grows weary of that task. Here at Eaton Rapids the Republican boycott of Michigan has been put in active operation. This camp is primarily religious, and three days of it only were set apart for a genuine go-as-you-please on temperance, every speaker to be untrammelled.

This Camp Association at Eaton Rapids has accomplished much in little over a year. Many cottages have been erected, and several scores of tents were also occupied these recent days. The moving spirit, Rev. Mr. Hamilton, is a radical, and a man of indomitable push. He intends that this new ground shall serve well the cause of temperance; and why should it not? A purpose to make it the chief center of a large Prohibition camp circuit next year is privately expressed, and I imagine the influences then must prove widespread.

A. A. HOPKINS.

TEN SILVER DOLLARS.

At the noon prayer meeting, Fulton street, New York, the following incident was recently related: A few days before, a Christian brother found his funds at low ebb-tide. After crossing the ferry he had not a coin in his pocket, and so, unable to pay for his fare, he walked home. With some Christian work to care for, and no funds in hand for that either, his circumstances looked very perplexing. But walking by faith was no new experience to him, and he determined to trust God, no matter how much he might be tried. Next day was Sunday, and Sunday passed without relief. At twenty minutes before twelve at night there was a ring at the door bell. He answered the summons, but found no one at the door. In the moonlight, however, there glinted ten silver dollars on the doorstep, placed so as to form the first letter of his name. He did not know who brought them, but he knew who sent them. The Lord was undoubtedly the sender.—Sel.

SHUN THE APPEARANCE OF EVIL.

An old Chinese proverb says, "Do not stop in a cucumber field to tie the shoe." The meaning is very plain. Someone will be likely to fancy that you are stealing fruit. Always remember the injunction, "Abstain from all appearance of evil." Do not stop under the saloon porch to rest yourself, however shady the trees may be, or however inviting the chairs. Someone may fancy you are a common lounge there, and so your good name be tarnished. Don't go to a liquor saloon to get a glass of lemonade, however refreshing it may seem to you. Rather buy your lemons and prepare the cooling beverage at home, where others may share it with you, probably at no greater expense than your single glass would cost you. Somebody seeing you drinking at the bar, will be sure to tell the story and will not be particular to state that you were drinking only lemonade. Then, too, if you are careless about the appearance of evil, you will soon grow equally careless about the evil itself.—Sel.

A BOY BLOWN UP.—William Blatt, aged 13, living on Ninth avenue, near Ninety-sixth street, New York, determined to celebrate the Fourth in boisterous style. Considerable building is going on in the neighborhood, and the workmen use dynamite cartridges in blasting the rocks. Willie succeeded in getting hold of a few of the cartridges, which he placed in his pocket. Then he lit a cigarette. His mother, who happened to be out for a walk, came upon him suddenly, and he sought to hide his cigarette by placing it in his pocket. The cartridges ignited, and the boy was blown ten feet in the air. His abdomen and limbs were frightfully mangled and he died shortly after in great agony.

There can be no successful contradiction of the assertion that the liquor traffic is an excrescence on the body politic which is utterly without redeeming qualities. It produces no good thing. It adds nothing to the aggregate wealth of the country. Its efforts are chiefly confined to the change of articles of subsistence into those of destruction, and the introduction of those into general use, thereby involving the demoralization of the masses and the transfer of the fruits of honest toil from the pockets of the laborers and producers into those of the non-producers.

EDUCATIONAL.

—The "Normal and Agricultural Institute," at Hampton, Va., under the administration of General S. C. Armstrong, which aims to supply colored teachers for the common schools of the South, and to plant a Christian civilization among the Indians, has now 65 teachers, 536 Negro pupils, and 140 Indian students. Six hundred of its graduates and 200 of its under-graduates are now teaching about 45,000 colored children in public schools. Besides the intellectual training given at the Hampton school, instruction is given in a number of industrial departments.

—The late two days commencement exercises at Richmond, Ind., attracted a large attendance. The closing exercises were the laying of the corner-stone for a large new building and a science hall named for Mordekai Parry, of Minneapolis, who builds it. The stone for the main hall was adjusted by Walter T. Carpenter, for twenty-five years superintendent, and that for the science hall by ex-president Joseph Moore, who delivered an address, as did the Hon. B. C. Hobbs, a former president of the college. The class consisted of nineteen members, and the societies were addressed by the Hon. W. D. Bynum of Indianapolis.

—Haverford College (Friends) near Philadelphia was highly favored at its late commencement with the presence of Canon Basil Wilberforce, the eloquent Englishman lately in this country. At the conclusion of the exercises he addressed the graduating class. He said he could not point out to the rising young men of America all the shoals and quicksands and rocks they would encounter in their progress, but he could tell them from his own certain knowledge where the deep water is, and where, if they would but keep the vessel of their lives, they would not meet disaster. He told them that by making Jesus Christ the guiding star of their lives they would find that when the Lord calls a soul he does not put him in bands of iron, but floods him with new gifts which drive out every other desire. He said he hoped his hearers would place their future dependence, not upon the amount of philosophy they had acquired, but in the amount of space in their hearts occupied by Christ. One point to be avoided was that of looking superficially at the deep issues around us, the civilization of the world depending upon the way in which America decides the questions of the hour. He urged the young men to accept as their motto the word "Consider."

A TRIBUTE TO WHEATON.

The secretary of the Alumni Association committee having requested Rev. C. W. Hiatt, pastor of the High Street church, Columbus, to respond to a toast, received the following reply which is too good to be lost in a committee:

COLUMBUS, O., June 10, '87.

Your request for a response to the toast, "Wheaton College in the Pulpit," was duly received. I regret that I cannot attend Commencement this year—the only time I shall have been absent, if we may rely upon memory and tradition, since those days of primeval innocence and simplicity when the voice of the orator first broke the silence of Jewell's Grove.

The toast is a very suggestive one. It brings to mind the fact that pulpits are growing large enough to admit Wheaton College without knocking out the back end of the church. The phrase "in the pulpit" is misleading. Wheaton College usually gets on top of the pulpit where it may be seen. There is this peculiarity about the average Wheaton College pulpit—it is not made out of old pews. The pews are constructed from the pulpit. There is another peculiarity. The genuine Wheaton College pulpit has these words upon it, "Christo et Regno Ejus."

Modesty compels me to say little in praise of Wheaton College in the pulpit. Let me claim thus much, however, on behalf of my brethren:

- (1) It endeavors to be a crank—swinging around the 360° of the circle of truth.
- (2) It tries to be a soldier of the cross. Its gun usually goes off. So do the people, sometimes.
- (3) It endeavors to be human. It has no supernatural, no hollow tones. Its heart, its brain, its hand is always full—not so its pocket-book.
- (4) It doesn't crave popularity. Neither does it fear it.
- (5) It isn't particular about a ministerial coat. The robe of righteousness is good enough.
- (6) It tries to be honest with God and man. This makes some men mad.
- (7) It doesn't profess to be very modern in theology. It has a weakness for old foggy books like those of Paul and John.

(8) It believes in a personal devil. The devil believes in a personal "Wheaton-College-in-the-Pulpit."

(9) It finds great joy and peace in echoing the sentiments of the four sacred mountains—that of the Law, that of the Beatitudes, that of the Transfiguration and that of the Cross.

(10) It often lifts a prayer of thanksgiving and supplication for dear old Alma Mater. Yours fraternally on behalf of the ministers,

C. W. HIATT.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—According to the statistical report of the Sunday-schools in the United States rendered at the late International Convention in Chicago, there has been an increase in the scholar membership of all the Sunday-schools in the United States since 1884 of 365,645. It is interesting to know by what agencies this increase has been secured, for it shows that a great missionary work has been done to bring an army of 365,000 into active membership with our Sunday-schools. No more important work can be conceived of, for it has to do with the destiny of our entire country. The three last annual reports of the American Sunday-School Union, the old denominational society "that cares for the children," who are provided for by no one else, show that since 1884 it has brought 185,034 children into 4,947 new Sunday-schools, a number equal to 5,000 more than one-half of all the increase reported as having been secured by this and all other agencies during these three years. But this American Sunday-School Union did more than this—it aided 4,825 other schools, which have 46,774 teachers and 515,714 scholars,—so that in these three years it reached 9,872 communities and Sunday-schools, and 700,748 children and youth, and then re-aided and re-visited these schools 9,245 times, besides making 92,584 visits to families, supplying 45,019 destitute persons with the Scriptures, and holding 27,247 religious meetings. There is need of more just such work in our country.

—A most enthusiastic meeting was held recently at the Chicago Avenue Church in this city. Over 3,000 Swedes were present, and the Rev. G. A. Swenson, of Kansas, gave a rousing temperance address, speaking in the Swedish language.

—The congregation of Bloomfield, O., have generously tendered their pastor, Rev. J. P. Lytle, D.D., a vacation of six weeks for the present year, and for every future one so long as he remains their pastor.

—The Baptist Missionary Magazine for May reports 557 baptisms, of which 295 were on the Ongole field, Telugu Mission, India, in the month of January, and three are the first baptisms reported from Mandalay, the capital of Upper Burma.

—Twenty years ago missionaries of the English Presbyterian Church found an opening in the city of Chinchew. Nine years ago commodious mission premises were erected, and now an earnest native congregation have chosen a Chinaman to be their pastor.

—During the last ten years the gain of converts in India has been about 89 per cent. In China in the same period, the increase has been 120 per cent. In Japan the growth has reached the astonishing figure of 385 per cent.

—Bishop Shorter, of Xenia, Ohio, but lately deceased, is the second bishop that the African Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States, Canada, West Indies, and Africa has lost within three months, and the third within two years. The remaining bishops are the Rt. Revs. Payne, Turner, Wayman, Campbell, and Disney. The general conference of the African Methodist Church will be held at Indianapolis next year, and three bishops are to be elected.

—The English Presbyterian Mission in China, which has now been at work forty years, has two Presbyteries formed of native pastors and elders, and a third is about to be formed at Formosa. There are 5,000 adult communicants.

—The Turkish Government officials have now put the seal of the Sultan on thirty-two editions of the Arabic Scriptures and parts of Scriptures, thus giving the sanction of the Imperial Caliph of Islam for the free circulation of the Word of God.

—A conference on the subject of the Plenary Inspiration of the Scriptures is to be held in Philadelphia, beginning on November 15th next, and lasting until the 20th of that month. The committee having the preparations in charge is composed of Right Rev. Wm. R. Nicholson, D. D., chairman; Rev. John T. Beckly, D. D.; Rev. Robert C. Matlack, D. D.; Rev. A. T. Pierson, D. D.; Rev. James

A. Morrow, D. D.; Rev. J. Howard Smith, D. D.; Rev. J. M. Stiffer, D. D.; Rev. J. L. Litch and Geo. C. Needham.

—A wealthy brewer of Liverpool, having offered $50,000 toward a fund for a cathedral (Anglican) in Liverpool, much comment was excited. The Christian suggested that Bishop Ryle refuse it, as every pound of it represented misery and degradation of the people. Canon Wilberforce said he would "sooner see cathedrals rot upon the ground than that they should be rebuilt by the colossal fortunes that have been raised from the drinking idiocy of the English people." The Christian Leader called attention to recent pastoral of Bishop Ryle, in which he mentioned temperance as the first of five points on which the standard of religion should be raised. The Bishop himself in his letter acknowledging the receipt of the offer expresses "deep gratification," and tenders on behalf of himself and the churchmen of the diocese "heartly thanks."

LITERATURE.

LIFE AND PUBLIC SERVICES OF GENERAL JOHN WOLCOTT PHELPS. A sketch read before the New England Historic Genealogical Society. By Cecil H. C. Howard. Pp. 58. Price 50 cents. Frank E. Housh & Co., Brattleboro, Vt.

This elegant brochure is a fitting testimonial to a man of earnest zeal, high culture, clear perceptions and noble integrity. The life of a soldier and author have seldom if ever been joined with such freedom from pretension and anxiety for the real welfare of his country. His patriotism had statesmanlike qualities which are seldom recognized in our representative men, and in a life of activity might have been eminently useful to mankind. The difficulty of securing facts to form a biographical sketch was a great one, but Mr. Howard has fairly overcome it. General Phelps left no writings from which the events of his life could be retraced with much detail, and no portrait by which friends might recall his earnest and striking face. He lives in the esteem of many friends, in the love of his immediate household, and in the writings to which he gave a portion of his life. The story of General Phelps' life is an entertaining one. He was born in 1813, graduated at West Point in 1836 as second lieutenant, and distinguished himself in Indian wars that immediately followed. This experience made him ever a friend of the Indians whom he believed to be more sinned against than sinning. His services were prominent in the Mexican war where he was promoted. Some years followed in trying border experiences. In 1852 he visited Europe and remained abroad a whole year. In 1859 he resigned after accompanying Albert Sidney Johnston in the fruitless expedition to Utah. Much of the time till the breaking out of the rebellion was spent in writing against slavery. He led the first company from Vermont into the last war, and took a prominent part at New Orleans, where he was first to enter the Custom House. He was second in command in New Orleans, and his reputation was jocosely used by Butler as an excuse for his lack of fear of assassination. The negroes were swarming into the Union lines whom he began organizing as soldiers, for which there was every military reason. He was ordered instead to set them at work, but he could not brook the idea of being a slave-driver, and resigned his commission. The history of his controversy on this subject before resigning is too long to give in detail. It is enough to say that it exalted him in the esteem of all, friend or foe, who could discern high integrity in character. It is a great pleasure to recommend this little volume to the readers of the Cynosure who have in years past been familiar with the frequent articles from Gen. Phelps. It is published in paper for 50 cents; cloth 75 cents.

ALDEN'S MANIFOLD CYCLOPEDIA of Knowledge and Language. Vol. I. A to America. Pp. 630. Price for the whole set of some thirty volumes, before Aug. 1st, cloth, $7.50. John B. Alden, New York.

The completion of this work will put within reach of every American household one of the most useful of works for popular education. Its plan is a combination of encyclopedia and dictionary, the compilation being based on the excellent work of Chambers and the dictionary of Stormouth. It intends to include every word which has any claim to a place in the English language, and undertakes to combine in the most convenient, concise and economical form possible the results of the scholarship of the world. The peculiar excellence of the work is combining the dictionary and encyclopedia in a handsome and convenient form, and at so low a price that is a wonder that it can be published for such a sum.

The Cosmopolitan magazine, after two or three years of country life, has removed to New York and is determined to make its new and metropolitan location the best gaining of a career worthy of its name. A unique and artistic cover encloses the contributions of well-known and popular writers as Louise Chandler Moulton, Prof. Proctor, Joel Benton, George Parsons Lathrop, E. P. Roe and others. The illustrations are also of a high class. Mrs. Moulton writes most entertainingly of a journey in Spain. She gives charming glimpses of Spanish life and scenery with severe pictures of the brutal national pastime. Richard A. Proctor writes "How to Live a Hundred Years," with the enthusiasm of a scientist, but not of a moralist. Why should he have any disciples for his theory, if a man has a better hope than earth can give for the life after his work is done. Joel Benton's "Reminiscences of Horace Greeley" is accompanied with a fine pen-and-ink portrait.

The Morning Star, published by the Indian Industrial School at Carlisle, Pa., has probably no equal as a journal giving information about the Indians and matters pertaining to the Indian question. It is published monthly for 50 cents a year.

The July Missionary Review opens with a biography of the late courageous missionary martyr, Bishop Hannington, with whose devoted labors and final sacrifice in Central Africa the Christian world is more or less familiar. "Mission Boards—are they necessary?" is in the line of a discussion of utmost importance to the Christian church, and which every one interested in the work of the church must consider.

Beside notes from a Christian standpoint upon current topics, and an account of Dr. Pentecost's work as an evangelist in Vermont, Words and Weapons has also an address from the same eminent preacher on the Inspiration of the Scriptures.

LODGE NOTES.

The Chinese laundrymen of New York have organized themselves into a lodge of the Knights of Labor.

At San Francisco a new American party, so called, has been revived in a secret session of Californians. Among other things called for in the platform are: Unconditional repeal of the naturalization laws, modification of immigration laws, prohibition of alien land holding, and no interference by any church with the American school system.

Mr. John Tyler, son of President Tyler, has for the ninth time been elected Grand Worthy Patriarch of the Sons of Temperance of Virginia.

Secret societies sometimes work up titles that are simply sublime, as witness a suit brought in Baltimore by "William H. Perkins, worthy ruler of St. Thomas' Lodge, against Augustus Thomas, grand royal king of the United and Consolidated Order of Brothers and Sisters and Sons and Daughters of the Knights of Four Men and the Members of the Supreme Grand Royal House."

The Masonic Token thinks that the general Masonic convocation of grand masters of the York rite, to be held in Chicago, June 22, for the purpose of consulting upon subjects which interest the craft, is "apparently to consult in regard to action against bogus Scottish rites and Egyptian Masonry.—Masonic Home Journal."

A man whose physical condition had given opportunity for membership in the American Legion of Honor, and who at his death has not joined the organization, merits all the opprobrium given to his memory by those who have knowledge of his shabby neglect and failure. There is absolutely no excuse for such a man.—Am. Legion of Honor.

The project of the Buffalo Masonic Hall Association to build a Masonic temple has received a set-back by the refusal of Governor Hill to sign the bill. His grounds were that he had refused to sign several other bills of a similar nature, all of them containing clauses which provided that no tax was to be assessed upon the property. Hon. Daniel N. Lockwood, Hon. David F. Day and Gen. John C. Granger argued the matter before the governor, but he refused to change his mind.

We often hear it said that a certain brother is "way-up" in Masonry; that he is exceedingly bright in all the secret work and mysteries. The expression is most usually very improperly used. A very intelligent Mason is rare and hard to find. A brother may be able to easily work his way into strange lodges, chapters or commanderies, and readily repeat all the words and give all the grips and signs, and yet be as ignorant of the fascinating charm and beauty of Masonic literature as one who reads the orations of Cicero in Latin without understanding the language. And this lamentable ignorance of Masonry is not strange.—De-troit Freeman.

The refusal of a charter to the National assembly of iron and steel workers, recently organized at Harrisburg, threatens to result in a formidable break in the Knights of Labor.

We shall write next week of a woman, the mother of twelve children, presiding over the K. of L. of all Chicago, and appearing on the platform with a nursing child in her arms! Who shall say that woman is not superior to man?—Geneva (Ill.) Patriot.

FIFTY YEARS AND BEYOND;

OR,
Old Age and How to Enjoy It.
A most appropriate gift book for "The Old Folks at Home."

Compiled by REV. S. G. LATHEOP.
Introduction by
REV. ARTHUR EDWARDS, D. D.,
(Editor N. W. Christian Advocate.)

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the "great beyond" some practical hints and help as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of the life that now is, and to give comfort and help as to the life that is to come.

"It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors the gray head and refuses to consider the old man a burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

"The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and beautiful draught for every aged traveler to the great beyond."—Witness.

Talks

Labor Troubles,
BY REV. C. C. BROWN.

The Danger—The Laborer's Grievance—The Laborer's Foe—The Laborer's Fallacy—The Laborer's Hope—Mind and Muscle—Co-Laborers.

TIMELY TALKS ON AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

The Papers Say of this Book:
"It is well to remind the world of the great law of human brotherhood, but how to make the 'more general application of it.' 'Are there's the rub?' Our author contributes his mite in that direction, and his voice and reasoning will reach some ears and perhaps touch some understandings and move some selfish hearts that are buttoned up very closely and hedged around by over much respectability and comfortable property."—Chicago Tribune.

"The writer does his work in a way remarkable for its directness. His common sense, its impartiality, its lucidity and its force. He has no theories to support; he deals with facts as he finds them; he fortifies his assertions by arrays of demonstrative statistics. The work is among the best of the kind, if it is not the best that we have seen. While it is scarcely possible to get to the pit in the hands of all our wage-workers, we wish it could be read by every one of them."—Chicago Interior.

The Facts Stated

HON. THURLOW WEED ON THE MORGAN ABDUCTION.

This is a sixteen page pamphlet comprising a letter written by Mr. Weed, and read at the unveiling of the monument erected to the memory of Capt. William Morgan. The frontispiece is an engraving of the monument. It is a history of the unlawful seizure and confinement of Morgan in the Ganadaga jail, his subsequent conveyance by Freeman to Fort Niagara, and drowning in Lake Ontario. He not only subscribes his name to the letter, but attaches his affidavit to it.

In closing his letter he writes: "I now look back through an interval of fifty-six years with a conscious sense of having been governed through the 'Anti-Masonic excitement' by a sincere desire, first, to vindicate the violated laws of my country, and next, to arrest the great power and dangerous influence of 'secret societies'."

The pamphlet is well worth perusing, and is doubtless the last historical article which this great journalist and politician wrote. [Chicago National Christian Association, Single copy, 5 cents.]

HOME AND HEALTH.

HEARTY FOOD.

From Prof. Atwater's illustrated article in the July Century, we quote the following: "I well remember how the sensible and thrifty New England people among whom my boyhood was spent used to talk about 'hearty victuals,' and how prevalent were the doctrines that 'a hard-working man wants real hearty food,' and that 'children ought to have hearty food, but not too hearty."

"With these eminently orthodox tenets the science of nutrition in its newest developments is in fullest accord. But there always used to be an unsatisfactory vagueness about them. I never could make out exactly what were 'hearty' foods, and in just what their heartiness consisted. It has since occurred to me that these words express one of the ideas which the unerring sense and instinct of man have wrought out of his long experience, but have waited for science to put into clear and definite form. The synonym with which our science defines this idea is energy. Hearty foods are those in which there is an abundance of potential energy."

"The lumbermen in the Maine forests work intensely in the cold and snows of winter and in the icy water in the spring. To endure the severe labor and cold, they must have food to yield a great deal of heat and strength. Beans and fat pork are staple articles of diet with them, and are used in very large quantities. The beans supply protein to make energy for the wear and tear of muscle, and the fat, and more especially the pork, are very rich in energy to be used for warmth and work."

"I cannot vouch for the following, which has just struck my eye in a daily paper, but, if it is true, the workmen were sound in their physiology:

"A lot of woodchoppers who worked for Mr. S. in H. — stopped work the other day, and sent a spokesman to their employer, who said that the men were satisfied with their wages and most other things, but didn't like 'your fresh meat; that's too fancy, and hasn't got strength into it.' Mr. S. — gave them salt pork three times a day, and peace at once resumed its sway."

"The use of oily and fatty foods in arctic regions is explained by the great potential energy of fat, a pound of which is equal to over two pounds of protein or starch. I have been greatly surprised to see, on looking into the matter, how commonly and largely the fatter kinds of meat are used by men engaged in very hard labor. Men in training for athletic contests, as oarsmen and foot-ball teams, eat large quantities of meat. I have often queried why so much fat beef is used, and especially why mutton is often recommended in preference to beef for training diet. Both the beef and the mutton are rich in protein, which makes muscle. Mutton has the advantage of containing more fat along with the protein, and hence more potential energy. Perhaps this is another case in which experience has led to practice, the real grounds for which have later been explained by scientific research."

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

The late Jane Gray Swisshelm wrote with confidence of a hydrophobia cure: "I can give some facts which may be of use to somebody, thereby giving life. The time between the biting of an animal by a mad dog and showing signs of hydrophobia is not less than nine days, but may be nine months. After the animal has become rabid, a bite or scratch with the teeth upon a person, or slobber coming in contact with a sore or raw place, would produce hydrophobia just as soon as though he had been bitten by a mad dog. Hydrophobia can be prevented, and I will give what I know to be an infallible remedy. A dose for a horse or cow should be about four times as great as for a person. It is not too late to give medicine before the spasms come on. The first dose for a horse is one and a half ounces of champagne rosin, bruised, put in a pint of new milk, reduced to one-half by boiling, then taken all at one dose in the morning, fasting until afternoon, or at least a very light diet after several hours have elapsed. The second dose the same as the first, except take two ounces of the rosin; third dose the same as last, to be taken every other day. Three doses are all that is needed, and there need be no fear. This I know from my own experience, and I know of a number of other cases where it has been entirely successful. This is no guess work."

TO OLEAN CISTERNs.—Dr. Kedzie, who is good authority on the subject, says that if cistern water has acquired a foul odor it may be deodorized by using some oxidizing agent, such as chloride of soda or Labarraque's chlorinated soda. This can be found at any good druggist's, put up in quart bottles for use. To get the best results the material should be poured into the bottom of the cistern, using for this purpose a gas-pipe reaching to the bottom. Two bottles, costing about twenty-five cents each, will clean an ordinary cistern.

A complete Catalogue sent free on application.

ON FREEMASONRY.

Freemasonry Illustrated. A complete exposition of the seven degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. Profusely illustrated. A historical sketch of the order and a critical analysis of the character of each degree, by Pres. J. Blanchard, of Wheaton College. Monumental quotations and nearly four hundred notes from standard Masonic authorities confirm the truthfulness of this exposition and show the character of Masonic teaching and doctrine. The accuracy of this exposition is attested by J. O. Doobson, Past Master of the No. 191, Holland, Mich., and others. This is the latest, most accurate and complete exposition of Blue Lodge and Chapter Masonry. Over one hundred illustrations—seven of them full-page—give a pictorial representation of the lodge-room, chapter and principal ceremonies of the degrees, with the dress of candidates, signs, grips, etc. Complete work of 640 pages, in cloth, $1.00.

Ex-President John Quincy Adams' Lessons on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties. Thirty most interesting and convincing letters on the above general subject, written by this renowned statesman to different public men of the United States during the years 1831 to 1833. With Mr. Adams' address to the people of Massachusetts upon political aspects of lodge-ry; an Appendix giving obligations of Masonry, and an able introduction. This is one of the most complete and secret works extant, aside from the Expositions. Price, cloth, $1.00; per dozen, $9.00. Paper, 35 cents; per dozen, $3.50.

Freemasonry Exposed. By Capt. William Morgan. The genuine old Morgan book republished with new illustrations showing the dress of candidates, signs, degrees, grips, etc. This revelation was so accurate that Freemasons murdered the author for writing it. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Finney on Masonry. The character, civil and practical workings of Freemasonry. By Pres. Charles C. Finney, of Oberlin College. President Finney was a "bright Mason," but left the lodge when he became a Christian. This book has opened the eyes of multitudes. 1 cloth, 75 cents; per dozen, $7.50. Paper cover, 34 cents; per dozen, $3.40.

Masonic Oaths Null and Void; or, Freemasonry Self-Convicted. This is a book for the ages. The design of the author is to refute the arguments of those who claim that the oaths of Freemasonry are binding upon those who take them. His arguments are conclusive, and the forcible manner in which they are put into the words of Scripture, makes them convincing. The minister or lecturer will find in this work a rich fund of arguments. 207 pp., postpaid, 40 cts.

College Secret Societies. Their customs, character, and the efforts for their suppression. By H. E. Zeigler. Containing the opinions of many prominent college presidents, and others, and a full account of the murder of Mortimer Leggett. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00.

Five Rituals Bound Together. "Obedience Illustrated" (old work), "Knights of Pythias Illustrated," "Good Templarism Illustrated," "Exposition of the Grange," and "Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic," are bound together in cloth for $1.00; per dozen, $9.00.

Sermon on Masonry. By Rev. James Williams, Presiding Elder of Dakota District North-western Iowa Conference, M. E. Church—a second Master Mason. Published at the special request of nine clergymen of different denominations, and others. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Thirteen Reasons why a Christian should not be a Freemason. By Rev. Robert Armstrong. The author states his reasons clearly and carefully. The result of the charge is, that if properly considered, will keep a Christian out of the lodge. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

The Mystic Tie, or Freemasonry a League with the Devil. This is an account of the church trial of Peter Cook and wife, of Exeter, N. H., in which they are put on a review of Freemasonry, and their very able defense presented by Mrs. Lucia C. Cook, in which she clearly shows that the lodge is antagonistic to the Christian religion. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Ritual of the Grand Army of the Republic. With signs of recognition, passwords, etc., and the ritual of the Machineists and Blacksmiths' Unions in which they are bound together. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Are Masonic Oaths Binding on one Initiative. By Rev. A. L. Post. Proof of the sinfulness of such oaths and the consequent duty of all who have taken them to openly repudiate them. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Morgan's Exposition, Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. Composed of "Freemasonry Exposed," by Capt. Wm. Morgan; "History of the Abduction and Murder of Morgan"; "Blanche's Confession of the Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan"; "Bernard's Reminiscences of Morgan's Times"; and "Oaths and Penalties of 33 Degrees." 304 pages.

In the Coils; or, the Coming Conflict. By "A Fanatic." A historical sketch, by a United Presbyterian minister, vividly portraying the workings of Satanism in the various relations of everyday life, and showing how individual domestic, social, religious, professional and public life are trampled and held by the infernal workings of Satan. Being presented in the form of a story, this volume will interest both old and young, and the moral of the story will not have to be searched for. $1.50 each; $15.50 per dozen.

Light on Freemasonry. By Elder D. D. Bernard. To which is appended "A Revelation of the Mystery of Odd-fellowship (old work), by a Member of the Craft." The whole containing over five hundred pages, lately revised and republished. 10 cents each; per dozen, $1.00. The first part of the above work is Light on Freemasonry, 416 pages, 75 cents each; per dozen $7.50.

Secret Societies, Ancient and Modern. A book of great interest to officers of the army and navy, the bench and the clergy. TABLE OF CONTENTS: The Antiquity of Secret Societies, The Life of Julian, The Eleusinian Mysteries, The Origin of Masonry, Was Washington a Mason? Filmore and Webster's Attitudes toward Masonry, Brief Outline of the Progress of Masonry in the United States, The Tammany Ring, Masonic Benevolence, the Uses of Masonry, An Illustration, The Conclusion. 50 cents each; per dozen, $4.75.

General Washington Opposed to Secrecy. The following is the substance of a letter from John Ripper's "Vindication of General Washington from the Stigma of Adherence to Secret Societies," communicated to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania March 8th, 1837 at their special request. To this is added the fact that three high Masons were the only persons who opposed a resolution of the House to the effect that it was "undesirable to private life—undoubtedly because they considered him a seceding Freemason. 10 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Grand Lodge Masonry. Its relation to civil government and the Christian religion. By Rev. J. B. Church, at the Monmouth Convention. The un-Christian, anti-republican and despotic character of Freemasonry is proved from the highest Masonic authorities. 5 cents each; per dozen 50 cents.

The Master's Carpet, or Masonry and Babel. A popular, identical, exact the true source and meaning of every ceremony and symbol of the lodge, and prove that Modern Masonry is identical with the "Ancient Mysteries." 75 cents each; per dozen, 75 cents.

Masonry a Work of Darkness, adverse to Christianity, and inimical to republican government. By Rev. Lebbeus Armstrong (Presbyterian). 21 degrees. This is a very interesting work and no honest man who reads it will think of joining the lodge. 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Freemasonry Self-Convicted. By Rev. J. W. Bain. A careful and logical statement of reasons why secret orders should not be fellowships of the Christian Church, and by the United Presbyterian church in particular. Paper covers: price 30 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Adoptive Masonry Illustrated. A full and complete illustrated ritual of the five degrees of Female Free Masonry, by Thomas Lowe; complete ritual of the Order of the Knights of the East, Father, Martha and Electa, and known as the Daughter's Degree, Widow's Degree, Wife's Degree, Sister's Degree and the Benevolent Degree. 50 cents each; per dozen, $1.75.

Steamers' Inquiry into the Nature and Extent of Freemasonry. With an Appendix containing the report of the Grand Jury of the State of New York, and containing remarks on various points in the character of Masonry, and a Dialogue on the necessity of the Christian Church, and the necessity of the Christian Church, and the necessity of the Christian Church. 50 cents each; per dozen, $5.00. Paper covers, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.00.

The Broken Seal; or Personal Reminiscences of the Abduction and Murder of Capt. Wm. Morgan. By Sarah Morgan. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half a million horrible oaths. 18 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Exposition of the Grange. Edited by Rev. A. W. Geellin. Illustrated with engravings, showing lodge-room, signs, signals, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.50.

Good Templarism Illustrated. A full and accurate exposition of the degrees of the Lodge, Temple and Council, with engravings showing the signs, grips, etc. 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

Oaths and Penalties of the 33 Degrees. To get these thirty-three degrees of Masonic bondage, the candidate takes half a million horrible oaths. 18 cents each; per dozen, $1.00.

Reminiscences of Morgan Times. By Elder David Bernard, author of Bernard's Light on Freemasonry. This is a most convincing argument against the lodge, from a Christian standpoint. 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Bernard's Appendix to Light on Masonry. Showing the character of the institution by its terrible oaths and penalties. Paper covers: 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

FARM AND GARDEN.

SUMMER DIFFICULTIES WITH POULTRY.

There is work to do during summer which is often neglected because it is a busy season on the farm. Ridding the fowls of lice should be attended to. Even when there are no signs of lice, they may be busy at work on the fowls, making them drooping and mopey, while no amount of food will keep them in good condition. The hen, when somewhat fat, is not attacked by lice wherever she can reach, for she is provided with an oil sack at the base of the tail, from which she derives oil, not only as a protection against lice, but to assist in cleaning her feathers. The large lice, therefore, congregate on the heads and necks. If the hen is poor in flesh the lice may be found on all parts of the body. The best remedy is lard, and only a small portion should be used, which should be rubbed on the skin of the heads and necks. The fowl should then be held by the legs, head downwards, and thoroughly dusted with Persian insect powder. The quarters must also be kept very clean. Once a week is not too often to give such attention to hens in the summer. Go into the hen house at night and force a few drops of warm lard in among the feathers of the head and neck with a sewing machine oil can.

To prevent disease, keep the hens at work by making them scratch for their grain food. Overfeeding is the cause of bowel diseases in the summer, or, rather, too much concentrated food is given, and not enough of bulky. If the quarters are kept clean, there is little danger of contagious diseases unless an addition is made to the flock by bringing a bird from some other farm. When "new blood" is wanted procure a sitting of eggs of the breed desired, as it is very important that when the coops are clean and the fowls free from disease, no fowls from other places be introduced. A flock may thus be stocked with lice, or infected with disease. —American Agriculturist.

NATURAL GAS AS A DESTROYER OF INSECTS.—The following statement we take from the American Manufacturer: "Natural gas is death to nearly all kinds of insects, bugs, etc., which make war on our trees and plants. We had an escape pipe burning near some peach trees which has been troubled with curculio. Either the gas was too strong for the little pests or they were attracted to the flame and got burned. The trees were soon completely ridden of the insects, and are looking much healthier ever since. This same fact has been commented on in many places where there are gas wells. One of the Philadelphia Company's wells is located in a large orchard near Murrysville, which has been completely ridden of insects of all kinds. The unwary destroyers flew to the gas flame in millions, and their carcasses covered the ground for several rods around the well. At Economy, where a hundred or more stand-pipes for natural gas have been erected to illuminate the streets, the bugs and fruit tree vermin were slaughtered wholesale. In the mornings after the gas was lighted first there would be a fine carpet of bugs around every gas post. The chickens and turkeys would have a feast every morning, and a foot race from the roosts to see which would get to the already cooked breakfast first. The trees in this fertile locality came out in bloom much healthier this spring than formerly, partly on account of the vermin being destroyed and partly from the fact that the frosts were kept from settling by the gas lights, which burn constantly. It was noticeable, too, that trees nearest the lights blossomed several days sooner than those some distance away."

"PEG-AWAY JOBS" ON THE FARM.

With all due allowance for recreation, reading, etc., there come intervals in ordinary work on the farm, half days or more, when farmer and men are idle or unprofitably using their time. They might just as well be at work, but do not know just what to go at, and the time slips away with telling stories and ineffectual "puttering" about the place. There is plenty of work needing attention if they would only go at it. The careful farmer will look out for this and always have a "peg-away" job in mind for the occasion. It may be cutting wood, or forking over manure, or whitewashing hen-house or cow stables. Frequently there are permanent improvements needed, which the farmer is slow to begin, but which, once started, under the "peg-away" plan, would be accomplished before he was aware of it. The ground may need grading so as to give a better slope to the lawn, or to drain the surface water from the cellar or outbuildings. Hedgerows may need clearing out. Good solid stone walls will rise in this way, foot by foot and rod by rod at a time. Roadways, bridges and paths can be put in order, draining attended to, fences and gates repaired, and a great deal of permanent work done which will add convenience, profit and increased value to the farm, should it at any time be sold. —American Agriculturist.

ANTI-LODGE LYRICS.

Sing the Reform Into the Hearts of the People

One of the most popular books against lodgery is the latest compilation of

George W. Clark,
The Minstrel of Reform.

A forty-page book of soul-stirring, conscience-awakening songs, appropriate for lectures, conventions and the home circle. What can add more to the interest of a meeting than a song well sung? What means will more quickly overthrow the power of the secret lodges than to sing the truth into the popular conscience?

Get this little work and use it for God and home and country. Forty pages.

The Christian's Secret or A Happy Life. 28th THOUSAND.

Baptist Commendation.

"We are delighted with this book. It reaches to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets all doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, secures, on the result of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life." —Baptist Weekly.

Presbyterian Endorsement.

"The book is so truly and reverently devoted to the very core of Christian experience, and is eminently experimental in its teachings. It meets all doubts and difficulties of conscientious seekers after the bread and water of life, but whose efforts result only in alternate failure and victory. The author, without claiming to be a theologian, secures, on the result of a happy and rich experience to help others into a happy Christian life." —Baptist Weekly.

Methodist Word of Praise.

"We have not for years read a book with more delight and profit. It is not a theological book. No effort is made to change the theological views of anyone. The author has a rich experience, and tells it in a plain and delightful manner." —Christian Advocate.

United Brethren's Approval.

"We have seldom met with a more interesting volume, abounding throughout with apt illustrations; we have failed to find a dry line from title-page to final." —Kellogg's Telescope.

Congregational Comment.

"It contains much clear, pungent reasoning and interesting incident. It is a practical and experimental lesson taught out of God's word, and is worthy of universal circulation." —Church Union.

THE

BY THOS. E. GREEN.

Mothers—place this book in the hands of your sons. It treats of

The Tiger and His Den. The Scatlet Sin.

Cups of Flame. Embzelement.

The Devil's Printing Press. Etc., Etc., Etc., Etc.

A book that is sensational, not from excited rhetoric or florid figures of speech, but from the facts that show the matted lava from the pen of the writer. It is a book of timely warnings, where sin and crime are shown of their nature, robbed of the glamour with which they have been surrounded by the prurient literature of the day, and painted in strong, true colors. The life of the prostitute is here shown in its true light, not as a life that, though wicked, has its delights, but as a life of death, now and in future life to be abhorred. —WESTERN CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Price, postpaid, cloth bound, 75 cents. Paper bound, 50 cents. Address, W. I. PHILLIPS, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago.

NATIONAL SUICIDE, AND ITS PREVENTION.

BY OSCAR F. LUMRY, PH. D.

Prof. Lumry's book, "National Suicide and Its Remedy" will be read with profit even by those who do not accept its doctrine, that taking interest for money loaned, one or more per cent, is sin, taking something for nothing. For, as Goldsmith said of his Vicar of Wakefield,

"E'en his failings lean to virtue's side."

Dr. Lumry is a man of ideas and never fails to make his readers understand just what they are. Every sentiment he writes has such an air of honesty that it will in a measure disarm those who read to criticize. It is a good book to set people to thinking, whether they believe his theories or not. The book is well worth a careful reading and study. —Inter Ocean.

On all the points named they differ radically from those which prevail in the organization of society. Either they are true or false. It is a curious fact that all of them have been stigmatized as crazy, and yet nearly all of them have been for some years steadily gaining the adherence of men of intellectual ability. —Times.

Price, postpaid, cloth bound, $1.00. Paper bound, 75 cents.

Address, W. I. PHILLIPS, 221 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

BATAVIA CONVENTION PAMPHLET.

A Staggering Blow!

Such was to Freemasonry the great NATIONAL CONVENTION held at BATAVIA, N. Y., September 1882. It gave the world

Thurlow Weed's Great Letter

On the abduction and murder of WILLIAM MORRIS in 1882, which has been the most widely published of any American document. The dedication of a noble granite monument to the memory of Morgan and the able and eloquent address of the Convention make this a most valuable pamphlet.

—SEIC WHY.

1. Contains—
1. Portrait of Thurlow Weed.
2. Fine picture of the Monument.
3. The great letter of Thurlow Weed and his friends to the public last night of his life.
4. Address by E. Roy, D.D.
5. The monument erected by Pres. C. A. Blanchard. Addresses on "Christian Politics" by Pres. J. Blanchard, on the Character of Freemasonry by Prof. E. D. Bailey, on the "Freedom and Secret Societies" by Rev. H. H. Hinman, and very interesting personal and historical references.
6. READ ABOUT THIS GREAT HISTORICAL MEETING.

IN THE COILS;

—OR—

The Coming Conflict.

A NEW AND STRANGE STORY BASED ON STARTLING FACTS, VIVIDLY PORTRAYING A MYSTERIOUS AND DANGEROUS POWER AT WORK IN THE GOVERNMENT, THE CHURCH, AND THE HOME.

"All will agree that this is a powerfully written story." —Evangelist, (Chicago, Ill.).

"A book which we trust may have a wide circulation." —National Baptist, (Philadelphia).

"So intensely interesting did I find it that it was hard to pause until the last sentence was read. This work places the author high among the writers of fiction." —W. W. Barry, Jr., in Christian Instructor, (Philadelphia).

"Unless we are greatly mistaken, the work will do more to awaken the American church and people to the evils of Freemasonry than any other book recently published." —Evangelical Repository.

"The book will create a sensation in Masonic circles, and evoke criticism of a most relentless character. The courage of the author in attacking such a rock-rooted ulular as Freemasonry is something to admire. Fanatic though he be." —Norfolk Watchman.

"Light is needed on this subject and needed badly, and we welcome this contribution to the literature of anti-secrectism, and cordially commend it to the favorable attention of our readers." —United Presbyterian, (Pittsburgh).

"A charming work, fit to be clasped with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin'; it is indeed less a work of fiction. The volume is as valuable as a work of reference as it is agreeable, truthfully and wisely written. Our readers will not leave the book, if they begin it, till they see how it turns out." —Cynosure, (Chicago, Ill.).

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

COUNTRY.

Fifty thousand new names have been placed on the pension rolls during the last fiscal year, being the largest in any year except 1866. Not quite three thousand pensioners of the Mexican war have been enrolled.

President and Mrs. Cleveland were on an excursion to the St. Lawrence river and the Thousand Islands Saturday. Monday they were the guests of Mr. Fairchild, the Secretary of the Treasury, at Cazenovia, N. Y., and on Wednesday they will return to Washington. The President and party had a narrow escape Saturday night while returning from Clayton to Alder Creek, N. Y., owing to the connecting rod of the engine breaking and tearing up the ties and fracturing the boiler. The engineer was instantly killed, but the passengers were not hurt.

A dispatch from Washington states the President will make a visit to the West in the fall, reaching St. Louis Oct. 2.

The heat of last week was more severe than has been known in many years. In Illinois thermometers ranged on Tuesday from 100 to 110, and numerous fatal cases of sunstroke were reported. Eleven victims were reported from Cincinnati. In New York there were six sunstrokes, and the suffering in the tenement district was reported as dreadful. But Saturday and Sunday exceeded in the degree and fatality of the heat. Over seventy cases of sunstroke were reported in Chicago Saturday, twenty-eight of which were fatal, and during Friday, Saturday and Sunday the fatalities numbered some 70 with 22 others who might not recover. Reports from all the cities showed loss of life, but the greatest in Chicago. Here the thermometer at its highest was 102 Saturday afternoon in the shade. A rain storm Sunday afternoon rapidly reduced the temperature. The day was unprecedentedly hot in the city, the thermometer reaching 101 in the shade. The whole country east of the Mississippi and south of the lakes suffered from extreme heat, the thermometer throughout the entire region registering from 90 to 104.

The trustees of the fund bequeathed to the city of Chicago by the late Walter S. Newberry, for the establishment of a great public library on the North Side, have decided to locate the library edifice on the grounds occupied by the deceased benefactor as his home, being the block bounded by Rush, Ontario, Ohio and Pine Streets, and have selected Mr. William F. Poole, the librarian of the Chicago Public Library, as librarian for the new library. The fund available for the purposes of the new institution exceeds $2,000,000.

At the Bridgeport steel-mills of the Union Steel Company, in the southwestern portion of this city, Saturday, a number of persons were horribly burned by an explosion of boiling steel, three of whom will die.

In the school elections at Salt Lake City, the gentiles carried five of the twenty-one districts. These were the first elections held under the new registration act, and the Mormons are greatly cast down at the result.

The Woman's Temperance Building Association at Chicago was incorporated Wednesday, to erect a building suitable for a hall, auditorium and offices of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

N. K. Fairbank & Co.'s great lard and oil works, occupying a block in Chicago, was visited by fire early Wednesday night, which threatened the destruction of the establishment. The soap factory and oil refining house were entirely destroyed, with machinery and stock, at a loss of $160,000.

The Prohibition State Convention at Des Moines, Iowa, Thursday, was attended by but few delegates. A full ticket was nominated, V. G. Farnham, of Plymouth county, being chosen for Governor. The platform declares for separate political action in dealing with the liquor traffic; advocates more stringent amendments of the present prohibitive law; demands a reduction of passenger rates to 2 cents a mile; approves woman suffrage, and favors the establishment of postal savings banks.

Dun & Co. report that the excess of imports over exports for the three months ending June amounts to $40,000,000.

In the New York Stock Exchange Friday, Vice President A. B. Hill ascended the platform to announce the death of M. E. De Rivas, when he was taken suddenly ill, and expired in a few moments.

Four years with hard labor at Sing Sing and a fine of $5,000 was the sentence pronounced on the chief boodler Jacob Sharp Thursday by Judge Barrett in New York. Attended by his wife, son-in-law, and grandson, Sharp was almost carried to the court room. Application was made to the Supreme Court for a stay of proceedings, and the same was granted.

The fire in the Standard Mine at Mt. Pleasant, Pa., which started a year ago, has been extinguished after the destruction of property worth $100,000. It was found necessary to flood fifty acres of underground workings.

A collision occurred between freight trains on the Burlington and Missouri Roads, near Lincoln, Neb., on Friday, in which a bridge, two engines, and thirteen cars loaded with cattle were burned. Loss, $200,000.

Judge Noonan rendered a decision Friday at St. Louis that the Sunday law did not apply to base ball games, and discharged President Von der Ahe, of the St. Louis club, who had been arrested for violation of the statute.

It is estimated that the iron ore production this year will be 1,000,000 tons in excess of the output for 1886.

Plymouth, Wis., was visited by a disastrous fire Friday, by which the business portion of the town was destroyed.

Wednesday evening, at Washington, Joseph C. Kennedy, an attorney, one of the oldest residents and a personal acquaintance of many prominent men, was stabbed to death by John Daily, a laborer, who claims, in extenuation, that years ago Kennedy defrauded his (the murderer's) father.

Southern Arizona has been visited by severe rain storms and cloud bursts. The Santa Cruz River is over a mile wide, and washouts on the railroads have been frequent and numerous. A freight train was carried away by a cloud burst. Many head of stock were drowned.

Leaders of the Henry George or United Labor party are making a house-to-house canvass in New York, and they claim to have sufficient membership—75,000—to carry that city in the next election.

Forty-five alleged pauper immigrants, who were landed Tuesday at Castle Garden, are held for examination. Thirty others were liberated upon their friends promising to take care of them.

Knightsville, Ind., a mining town of 800 inhabitants, was visited by a disastrous fire early Tuesday morning that destroyed the entire business portion, causing a loss of $60,000. Six months ago a fire occurred that almost ruined the town, which had just been rebuilt, when this second blow fell.

Seven horses afflicted with glanders, at DeWitt, Ill., were killed Tuesday by orders of State Veterinarian Caswell, of Chicago. Several other horses are affected with the same disease, and will probably be killed.

FOREIGN.

The sultan, disregarding the advice of Italy and Germany, persists in his refusal to sign the Egyptian convention in its present form. The British government has positively refused to make any modifications in the treaty, and the sultan's attitude, in which he is sustained by France and Russia, makes a very embarrassing situation for Lord Salisbury.

The anniversary of the fall of the Bastille was celebrated at Paris Wednesday by demonstrations in the Place de la Concorde and the Bois de Boulogne. Extraordinary precautions were taken to maintain the peace. The German residents were advised to consult their own safety by remaining in-doors.

The St. Lawrence sugar refinery and dwellings adjoining were destroyed by fire at Montreal, Canada, Friday, with a loss of $500,000. A man named Moore was killed by a fall; others are thought to have been burned to death, and several persons were injured.

A frightful accident occurred at St. Thomas, Ontario, Friday night, in which eight people were killed and scores injured. A freight car dashed into a car containing excursionists, and the oil in the cars becoming ignited, the two trains were shortly on fire.

Mr. Gladstone said, at a banquet given by the Scottish Commoners of the National League Club, he would endeavor to promote any settlement of the Irish question which would satisfy the Irish people, and which would not in any way threaten the greatness of the empire. Lord Salisbury's cabinet finds itself on the verge of a ministerial crisis that may result in the early dissolution of Parliament. Lord Randolph Churchill and Joseph Chamberlain have destroyed the land bill, and a majority of the Cabinet prefer abandoning the bill to accepting the amendments. A new ministry may be formed, which will include Lord Hartington and Lord Randolph Churchill.

The International Arbitration association met at London Friday. Sir Wilfrid Lawson presided, and David Dudley Field made an address.

Advices from Honolulu to July 5 say that tranquility had been restored on the islands. The new ministry had assumed control and the new constitution was to have been submitted to the king on the 5th. Ex-Minister Gibson had been removed from jail to his home, where he was kept under military guard. Cyprian Webb, his late secretary, had also been arrested and released on bail. On the 4th a significantly enthusiastic celebration of American independence was held, attended by the king and members of his staff.

THE SECRET ORDERS OF WESTERN AFRICA.

BY J. AUGUSTUS COLE, OF SHAINGAY,
WEST AFRICA.

Bishop Flickinger of the U. B. church says that, "This volume will well repay a careful reading not only for its discussion and exposition of these societies, but because it gives much valuable information respecting other institutions of that great continent."

J. Augustus Cole, the author of this pamphlet is a native of Western Africa, and is of pure negro blood. He has given much time and care to the investigation of the secret societies and heathen customs of Western Africa. He joined several of the secret orders for the purpose of obtaining full and correct information regarding their nature and operation. His culture and superior powers of discrimination render what he has written most complete and reliable.

Others say: "It is a charming illustrated magazine, 40 pages monthly, of snappy and argument for the Christian home. Finely and profusely illustrated. At 5 cents a year certainly one of the cheapest, but better, one of the best. Full of the Gospel spirit. Enriches the temperance, the missionary intelligence, short stories, all clean and wholesome, calculated to promote purity and knowledge in the home circle. Whatever its circulation it ought to be doubled."—N. Y. Christian at Work.

THREE NEW BOOKS.

Bible Salvation and Popular Religion Contrasted. Second Edition. Revised and Enlarged. Paper covers, 30c. Cloth, 40c. The aim of this book is to show the great difference between true and false religion. It is heart searching. God is blessing this book to the conversion of sinners both in and out of Zion, and in the sanctification of hungry souls. We earnestly recommend you to read and circulate this book.

Self Deception, Its Nature, Evils and Remedy. By Rev. Jacob Heffelfstein. Paper covers, 15c. This book goes to the very bottom of the subject, and searches out the many fond fancies of the deceived professor. The refuges of lies behind which many are hiding, and the false hopes of sinners are here set forth in plain and powerful words. It will meet a felt want among Christian workers, and is eminently suitable for circulation among all church members.

How every Christian may Win Souls. Paper covers, 10c. This little book points out that there are certain practical means within the reach of every child of God, in the use of which he may become gloriously successful in winning souls to Christ. Stirring and encouraging.

Those of us who admire Anthony Comstock as a moral hero, in spite of the opprobrium of his enemies, the lawsuits in which he has been defendant, and the fact that he has been personally assailed and beaten, may take much comfort in the following paragraph from the Critic, the booksellers organ of New York: "I never appreciated in what wholesome dread Anthony Comstock was held by publishers until within a few weeks, when the question of reprinting a certain English novel of remarkable popularity, but doubtful morality, came up for decision. Its success in England has been exceptional, and now it has even been dramatized and brought out at one of the leading London theaters. English copies of the book have sold here like hot cakes. One bookseller told me that he had sold 700 copies over his counters, and had orders for as many more. The book was offered to half a dozen [American] publishers, but they shook their heads and declined with thanks. Even the publishers of cheap libraries, into whose net, as a rule, everything that comes is fish, declined it with a sigh. Some of those who thus passed this tempting morsel by, undoubtedly did so for conscientious reasons; others, as they confessed, for fear of Comstock." Such a wholesome restraint we may hope the saloon business will feel at mention of the names of Fisk and St. John, and the lodges at mention of—the National Christian Association.

The unwisdom of Miss Willard's advice to her temperance friends to join the Knights of Labor appears in the fact of the disintegration of that body from causes into which there seems to have been no effort to inquire. The Commercial Advertiser of New York quotes the figures given out by Powderly to show that the order has fallen from 1,000,000 to 600,000 in fourteen months, and this loss is steadily increasing, while the accessions are less month by month. "The losses," adds the Advertiser, "have been greatest in New York. District assembly 49 lost half its members within fourteen months. The first great defection was that of the International Cigar-Makers' Union, which left the assembly in a body on account of interference with its affairs during a strike. The Knights of Labor lost 28,000 men by this move alone. Afterward there were similar troubles with bakers, brick-layers, and almost every other class of artisans, resulting in the withdrawal from the order of various unions and individual members. Reports from all sections of the country show the same condition of things." In general terms the reason of this defection is a loss of confidence in the promises held out to working men by the order. And if the very class for which it was formed are disappointed in it, what better success can those expect from it whose business is the moral reformation of society? There has surely been a great carelessness on the part of those who would put the W. C. T. U. forward to break the fall of such a system.

It is a careless assumption that Protestant institutions are in no danger of overthrow from our Catholic neighbors because either of the general goodness of those neighbors or the strength of Protestantism. It has been possible for a Romanist order known as the Hermits of the order of St. Augustine to conduct the trial of their superior with zeal and bitterness in both this country and Rome for eleven months, and yet all knowledge of the matter has been absolutely concealed from the public until now. The deposed official is Father Gilmore of Waterford, New York, who voted for himself when the election was carried by a majority of one. If a trial of such length and pertinacity can be concealed, how surely may a thousand schemes be hidden which tend to Romanize and overthrow our free American institutions.

Dr. Hartzell, Assistant Secretary of the Methodist Freedmen's Aid Society, read a paper before the Cincinnati ministers the other day in which he said: "Slavery was an incident, a mere matter of method in the subordination of the blacks to the white race. The real thing is the subordination. Before the war it was slavery; just after the war it was modified peonage; now it is by limited citizenship and ostracism. No matter what the method, the thing insisted upon is enforced subordination. Against that, both civilization and Christianity protest, and manhood rebels." Against this subordination a formidable protest is being made by the colored men themselves under the lead of T. T. Fortune, editor of the New York Freeman, who proposes an Afro-American League, and hopes to organize a vast organization of his race for the purpose of maintaining their rights and arousing a just public opinion against the mob and lynch law methods of their enemies.

The closing paragraph of Mr. Fortune's appeal is worth quoting in these columns. "It was not the colored Christians," he says, "but the white Christians, who, to their eternal shame and damnation, drew the line, and continue to draw it even unto this hour. Turn to the Masonic, the Odd-fellows and the Knights of Pythias orders: did colored men draw the line in these? Did they set up colored lodges all over the country because they did not care to fraternize with the white orders? The answer can be inferred when it is stated that white Masons, white Odd-fellows and white Knights of Pythias even at this hour refuse to fraternize with or to recognize the legality or regularity of the orders their actions caused colored men to establish. Do colored people desire separate grand lodges in the temperance order? Did they ask for such? No! But the British and American Good Templars reunited last week at a conference at Saratoga, N. Y., and the only condition on which the American order would consent to reunion was that the British order would acknowledge that its action of eleven years ago in seceding from the order on the color question was odious and unsound in principle." There is a peculiar interest in this reference to the Good Templars at Saratoga, since Mr. Hastings, in his report of that meeting in Dr. Jutkins' Reason, cannot say too much about the frequent seasons of prayer and the fervent petitions, accompanied by weeping, by which he represents the union of the two quarreling lodges was divinely effected. For what end was all this Good Templar zeal and devout enthusiasm and holy supplication? What, verily, but to perfect a scheme by which the infamous color line could be kept up, the lodge united and the colored brother shut out. The whole affair seems like an oblation to the caste devil.

THE REFORMER.

Before the monstrous wrong he sets him down—
One man against a stone-walled city of sin.
For centuries those walls have been a building;
Smooth porphyry, they slope and coldly glass
The flying storm and wheeling sun. No chink,
No crevice, lets the thinnest arrow in.
He fights alone, and from the cloudy ramparts
A thousand evil faces gibe and jeer him.
Let him lie down and die: what is the right,
And where is justice, in a world like this?

But by-and-by, earth shakes herself, impatient;
And down, in one great roar of ruin, crash
Watch-tower and citadel and battlements.
When the red dust has cleared, the lonely soldier
Stands with strange thoughts beneath the friendly stars.
—E. R. Sill in the Century.

They are slaves who fear to speak
For the fallen and the weak.

They are slaves who will not choose
Hatred, scoffing and abuse,
Rather than in silence shrink
From the truth they needs must think.

They are slaves who dare not be
In the right with two or three.

—James Russell Lowell.

A MISSIONARY'S KIND CRITICISM.

[The following was written by a foreign missionary to a celebrated reformer in America. Let it stand as a warning to all who are escaping from one snare that they be not caught by another.]

There is one thing, my dear brother, which I have for sometime hesitated speaking freely to you about, and that is the first section of the dedication of your book, "Fifty Years," etc. I have waited until I could feel that we were so well acquainted that we could very lovingly and prayerfully discuss a difference of opinion. I know that you have so much opposition, such cruel persecution, indeed, from the apostate Christianity which you have left, that I shrink very much from seeming to add in the least to your burdens. But I believe that the time will come when you will see that it was very unfortunate for you to dedicate your valuable work to the Freemasons. Had you only known what a great bone of contention this question is in the Protestant churches all over the world, you would not have committed yourself so very publicly to one side of the agitation.

That some lodges have done much good, no one would deny. But Masonry itself is a system of gaudy ritualism, of showy pageantry, and of pagan ceremonials. One would have thought that you would have seen so much in Masonry that is like Romanism that you would have instinctively shunned it. But the hitch of the difficulty seems to be right here. Romanism fights Freemasonry because it is a system so much like its own priestcraft; and Freemasonry dislikes Romanism simply out of policy, because it is an "opposition shop." So Freemasons would gladly assist a priest who is escaping from the rival institution, and welcome him into their own. I have not the least doubt that the individuals whom you met in this connection were generous men, acting with noble purpose; but I am not speaking of individuals, but of the system.

To illustrate: In your book you speak of having been asked by the Archbishop of Canterbury why you did not become an Episcopalian when you left the Papacy. In your remark upon this, you say (ch. XXIX.), "The Episcopal church of England, unfortunately, when she left Rome, concealed in her mantle some of the false gods of Rome. She kept in her bosom some vipers engendered in the marshes of the modern Sodom. These vipers, if not soon destroyed, will kill her. They are already eating up her vitals. They are covering her with most ugly and mortal wounds." How is it that you did not see the idolatry, vipers and wounds of Masonry? But you will surely see it all in time.

It is strange to thousands of your earnest Christian readers that you should so strongly plead in behalf of Masonic secrecy after having seen for fifty years the diabolical use made of secrecy in the Romish church. Of course there are occasional and special instances where some things should be kept secret. But to argue that, because of such limited and local benefits which are due to ordinary privacy, we should have great systems hiding away for centuries their doings from the public gaze, is a logic which seems to multitudes of people quite unwise and absurd.

But there is one special point which, in behalf of millions of true Protestant Christians and in behalf of the Protestant churches all the world over, I must earnestly protest against; that is, when you say that "our great God called them (the Freemasons) to march at the head of the armies of liberty sent to pulverize the usurped throne of the Pope." You say that they were "the chosen ones of God to help Garibaldi, and to break the bloody sword of the Pope." Well, were not the Babylonian and Egyptian kings sometimes the "chosen ones of God" to punish apostate Israel? Does that prove that their tyrannical government and debased religious systems are worthy of our praise? Even the vile Philistines were often used of God to punish Israel's apostasy. It would not have looked quite so strange if your dedication had been to Protestant ministers and churches first and to patriots and Freemasons afterwards.

Your book appeals strongly to the liberty-loving people of America. You show how that papacy combined with slavery in a stupendous attempt to overthrow the American Union. Are you not aware that one of the mightiest agents in the Southern States rebellion was the Masonic lodge? I assure you solemnly, after years of residence in the Southern States, that the Southern Masonic lodges were hot beds of treason. I have known whole sections of country where the loyal men could not and would not belong to a Masonic lodge. I have known, after the war, the Masonic lodges to be the cradles of the Ku-Klux Klan.

As to the religious character of Masonry it only claims an outside morality. The "rough ashlar" is to be hewed and trimmed by sentimental reformation and good works, to become fit for the theoretical temple. As a Christian minister I have met with many people who are utterly deceived and swallowed up by this pretentious white-wash of ritualism and morality. Like the glittering religious show of Romanism, Buddhism, etc., it has deceived and drawn down to death multitudes of precious souls. It denies Christ in the most polite way, by simply leaving him out of the question.

As you are an apostle of temperance it is a wonder you did not see how that thousands of Masonic lodges are nurseries of intemperance in their extravagant feasts, and that thousands more are not nurseries merely, but ripe fields of drunkenness, where King Alcohol reaps his richest harvests. I have known many instances in which men upon giving their hearts to God have been compelled to drop their lodge attendance forever, because of its debasing, drunken feasts.

You, and many able writers, show how that Romanism has only borrowed the forms and doctrines of ancient heathenism, and given them a glittering gilding over of Christian names. Do you not see that Freemasonry is simply made up of the mummeries and mysteries of ancient heathenism, with a few borrowed scraps of Judaism and Christianity? I know the things whereof I speak. I have been in several secret orders myself, and have studied carefully their workings for years.

It is with deep personal affection that I write this to you. It is because I love you and your heaven-appointed work that I write so plainly. I love that noble book which you have published after so many years of hard toil. It is a book that is doing untold good, and I deeply regret that its pages have that one, sad mistake. I believe it is about the only mistake in all that large and otherwise grand book. In removing that one leaf from all the copies which passed through my hands, I feel that I am leaving the book clean and pure to go forth as a mighty messenger of God to do great work for him on earth. I earnestly plead with you, my very dear brother, that in all your future editions you should leave out these first two pages of your dedication, excepting, of course, the few lines to the Colonel who gave you personal help in your researches about President Lincoln.

God is watching over us; we are getting nearer heaven. I know you will take this earnest appeal in all kindness and spread it before the Lord in prayer; and even if you do not agree with all that I have said, I believe that you will accede to the request which I make about this removal. Paul said that some things were lawful to him but not expedient. Even if you still think that these pages are lawful and right, I believe that you will consider the sense and feelings of millions of your Christian comrades in this great crusade, and count that section as inexpedient, and so cause it to be omitted in the future.

I am writing for eternity. Should we fail to "see eye to eye" in this lower Zion, still I am sure that up in heaven you will see the force of the truth. I am now writing, and you will there thank God that he moved me to try to remove that one blot from your beautiful and blessed work. Yours in the Fountain of Life,

W. G.

"BENEVOLENT" ORGANIZATIONS.

BY REV. C. E. WALKER.

All secret societies of which we know anything claim to be protective and benevolent, claims which are not so clearly manifest. We know of some cases in court where the protective influence of Masonry, Odd-fellowship, or Pythiasism has made its "cable-tow" effective in drawing from justice the criminal who was so far-seeing as to "take the degrees" before committing his dark deeds. The benevolent part growing out of the fact that Masonry believes that as "a dead man cannot repent" he ought to be spared to his family, since to hang or imprison him for his criminality would throw "the widow and orphans" on the charities of the society of which he is a member.

Benevolence or charity does not consist of "work or duty performed for pay." Secret orders collect three to four times as much money as they pay out in their so-called charities. Did they collect and dispense dollar for dollar, the charity would not appear, but when three dollars are collected for one dollar paid "to widows and orphans," what thank have the benevolent members of these costly insurance companies, which for a pretense with their long prayers to an imagined god, quiet the minds of the wives and mothers with the hope that in case of accident to husbands and sons, provision is made to keep them off the public charities. Read Luke 6: 30-34.

Their paid charities are very small as any one may ascertain by observing closely who in the community are recipients of the aid bestowed by these orders. Very few can be found who have been able to keep up the dues, who have not sufficient for their families, and when you do find those who are benefited (?) you may be sure the benefit is reported far and near.

Some notable instances have passed under my notice as I have watched to see some of this charitable work: An argument presented to justify the existence of the G. A. R. in a certain community was the charity, illustrated by the statement that "one of their number had been sick for a few weeks, and needed some kerosene, the fact coming to the knowledge of the post, they ordered sent to the sick fraternal one-half gallon of oil!"

This was used in a lecture by the writer (not giving names or community) whereupon the G. A. R.'s looked it up and said the statement was a lie, as the books showed one gallon instead of the half; but they were only urged to look farther to learn that both were correct statements. The G. A. R. had aided two old comrades by purchasing for one a half-gallon, and the other four quarts!

But the same community had other instances of benevolence than this. Another member was sick and a committee visited him, and brought the charitable news that if the sick brother would send his girls over to the field of one of this committee there these children might pull as many rutabagas as they could use; while another of this same committee said he had a number of potatoes that he had intended to plough under, they being too small to hire gathered, and if the girls would come and gather them they would be perfectly welcome to the potatoes! Benevolence!

Reader, these are statements reported directly to the writer by our best Christian people, and are not so exceptional to the rule of lodge-charity as you may think. Nay, these are the charities that often make the heart of true Christians grow faint, as does the conduct of the lodge when a poor widow, having laid her husband beneath the sod, applies for her benefit from his lodge, only to be informed that his last dues were not paid up within the thirty days after due, and therefore she is not a recipient of a charity.

True, the church ought to be "on the look-out" for the needy more than she is, but to hoist the lodge into favor as an institution "doing more for widows and orphans than the church," is not only an unscriptural way of bettering things, but is a falsehood of the deepest dye.

Will you not "awake to righteousness" and do what you can to lead the people out of the shadow of the lodge? God bless those who let their light shine.

TRADING ON GOOD REPUTE.

BY REV. C. F. HAWLEY.

In the Masonic plan of salvation, as taught by the authority of their Grand Lodge, we have regeneration by the practice of ceremonies that are confessedly heathen, ceremonies that these accredited Masonic teachers affirm and prove to be heathen ceremonies. And in this same Masonic plan of salvation, we have sanctification by the strict observance of obligations that bind to sin.

Is it not a sin, and a crime as well, for a witness to perjure himself when called upon to give testimony in our courts of justice? If a Mason in court must strictly observe his Masonic oath, then he cannot tell the whole truth as he is judicially sworn to do; and if he does not tell the whole truth he commits perjury. And commit perjury he must when judicially sworn to tell the whole truth about what he had been Masonically sworn to keep secret, if he strictly observes his Masonic oath.

Is it not time for the churches to awake and testify against this iniquity? Should men be received to the fellowship of the church who hold themselves Masonically bound to sin? Are not those who practice the pagan-infidel worship of Masonry in fellowship with devils? And are we to suppose that a man can be in fellowship with devils, and have fellowship with the Father and with Jesus Christ?

I would not limit the mercy of God towards those who have been beguiled into the lodge, who do not comprehend the real character of Masonry. But it does seem as though when a man took an oath to keep secret he knows not what, under no less penalty than to have his throat cut across and his tongue torn out by the roots; and then proceeded to take another oath under no less penalty than to have his heart torn out; and then swears again to conceal every crime that his Masonic brethren call upon him to conceal, except murder and treason, under no less penalty than to be severed in twain and his bowels burned to ashes; and then goes on swearing until he is Masonically bound to conceal the crimes of murder and treason, and espouse the cause of the criminals so far as to shield them from punishment, that he ought somewhere, while committing such horrible blasphemy, to wake up to the fact that he is making a "covenant with death and an agreement with hell," even if he does not understand the real character of Masonry.

The effort to sanctify such wickedness by calling attention to the good men in the order, reminds me of what a Wisconsin lady affirmed of a churchman in her neighborhood. Being questioned by an officer of the church, she said, "He talked so I would have turned him out of my house, if I had not known that he was a good, holy man."

Surprised by her statement the church official inquired if the brother's conversation had shocked her modesty as a woman.

"Oh, no, nothing of that," she quickly replied. "He swore."

If he had been a common sinner she would have turned him out of her house; but knowing him to be a "good, holy man," she suffered him.

When we are convinced that profanity is not a sin, because such good, holy men swear, we may conclude that Masonry is not bad, because good men are Masons. Until then we must determine the character of men by their acts, unless we excuse them on the ground that they did it through ignorance.

DECLINE OF THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

[News, July 18th.]

From every quarter comes confirmatory reports to the statement of an extraordinary defection from the ranks of the Knights of Labor. How serious this is may be judged when upon semi-official information it is stated that during the last twelve months the order has decreased from 1,000,000 members to less than 600,000—a loss of fully 40 per cent. In all of the great centers the defection has been the largest. Whole trades have surrendered their charters in New York and Chicago. It is estimated that where the local assemblies attached to districts 57 and 24 numbered 38,000 members they could not muster 18,000 to-day in good standing. The result of the Stock Yards strike last year was to decimate No. 57 almost beyond belief, and while No. 24 has not suffered so badly its treasury tells an unmistakable tale of mismanagement and distress. A year ago district No. 24 had $2,600 to the good. To-day it is nearly that figure behind-hand.

There are many reasons for the decline of the order. Its aim was too ambitious, not to say utopian. It proposed within the republic to erect a central organization that should practically assume the duties of government over a vast body of citizens. While professing to have no political ambition or meaning, by the simple force of gravitation it found itself drawn into politics. Among the professed objects of its creation were the discouragement of strikes, the encouragement of arbitrations, the inculcation of principles of economy, intelligence, temperance, and morality among workmen. With admirable professions it won universal commendation and waxed strong and powerful. But its rapid growth proved its weakness. The character of its central governing body did not keep pace with the immensity of the interests involved. While it had ample facilities for increasing its membership, it was utterly without such a system of legislative and executive representatives as could alone insure the capacity to cope with the exigencies arising in such a heterogeneous body. Having declared against strikes it was forced into maintaining some it disapproved and ordering others which some of its members considered doubtful. It denounced the "boycott" generally and placed no interdiction upon its destructive abuse by local assemblies and districts. With strange fatality the central organization bought and furnished most extravagant headquarters for itself in Philadelphia. The general master workman's salary was increased from $1,500 to $5,000 during the incumbency of Mr. Powderly and other salaries of central officials increased. The salary of $5,000 for the head of an organization numbering a million members, although really inadequate to the position and ability required, caused more dissatisfaction than would be supposed. The spirit of socialism in the order dwelt upon the extravagance of such a sum. The disastrous failure of the 'long-shore strike in New York last year, which involved several weeks wages to 100,000 men, was a hard blow to the Knights of Labor from without, and the dissensions provoked and fostered by the Home Club have weakened it from within. The order may survive, but it will only be after a thorough reorganization and with reconstructed principles and a more representative and powerful central executive.

THOUSANDS OF MASONIC SALOON-KEEPERS.

The article below is copied from an editorial in a leading newspaper whose editor is a Freemason and who certainly knows whereof he speaks. It certainly imports that opposition to saloon-keeping is a new, strange, and unwelcome thing in the lodge. It confesses that there are "thousands of saloon-keepers who are Masons." It acknowledges that keeping a saloon is not generally considered a Masonic offense. After such admissions what becomes of the claim that Masonry is "the hand-maid of religion," or is as good as the church, or a temperance society, or will not receive any dishonorable men into membership. We may praise the order of the Grand Master of Missouri, but the necessity for the order, the opposition to it and the confession of the following article give us the general character of the lodge:

"The ramifications of Masonry are universal. Whatever touches the interests or welfare of one part of this great organization is of concern to all the parts. There has developed in Missouri a matter which it is to be presumed will attract the serious attention of the Masonic fraternity throughout the country, and perhaps even of other countries. This is nothing less than the issuance of an edict by the Grand Master of that State calling upon all Masonic lodges to enforce the law of the Grand Lodge which declares saloon-keeping to be un-Masonic and requires those who are engaged in the business and are Masons to abandon their vocation or quit the order.

"The order of the Grand Master to subordinate lodges is clear and explicit. It insists that the law of the Grand Lodge in reference to un-Masonic conduct, in which saloon-keeping is included, must be enforced, and if the inferior bodies fail to act the Grand Lodge will proceed against the offensive members of such bodies. The Grand Lodge has waited long and patiently for the violators of the law to change their business, and it does not propose to extend its toleration any farther. The saloon-keepers in this order must renounce their trade or abandon Masonry. It can easily be understood that this edict has created the greatest consternation, not alone among those upon whom it fixes the charge of un-

Masonic conduct, but among all members who understand what must be the consequences to the order at large of the enforcement of this law. Such fear that the effect of intruding into the organization under the principle involved will jar the Masonic structure to its very foundations. The order inculcates temperance in all things. Habitual drunkenness is an offense against its laws. But it has never, until the action taken by the Grand Lodge of Missouri, refused admission to the saloon-keeper who had been allowed to enter on an equality with men in any other line of business. The principle expounded by the Grand Master of Missouri is that it is not just to punish those guilty of habitual drunkenness while sparing the saloon-keeping Mason whose business it is to make drunkards. The thousands of saloon-keepers who are Masons will not read this imputation with complacency.

"There is evidently in this matter the possibilities of a very serious disturbance in the ranks of Masonry. But that great order has survived many difficulties, and it will doubtless find a way to avert any great harm to its welfare from the present threatening innovation."—Midland.

SEPARATION.

Hardly any doctrine is made plainer in the Bible than that of separation. Before the children of Israel came into the Promised Land they were warned not to make a league with the inhabitants of the land whither they were going. "For I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand and thou shalt drive them out before thee. Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods. They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make thee to sin against me: for if thou serve their gods it will surely be a snare unto thee." (Ex. 23:31-33.) In repeating this admonition in Deuteronomy, 7th chapter, the instruction is more specific: "Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son." He continues the instruction by exhorting them to tear down the altars in the land and utterly destroy them: otherwise they would be led into worshipping their gods.

In the second chapter of Judges this law is again alluded to and the people are charged with having violated it and brought themselves into great trouble. In the last chapters of Ezra it would appear that these admonitions had been almost wholly forgotten and even the priests had generally become apostate. No one can read the Bible without seeing that the one sin most frequently committed and most disastrous in its consequences was leaguings with the world. In the Lord's prayer (John 17) our Saviour recognizes the fact that we must be surrounded by sin and by sinners but he also shows that we need not necessarily become partakers of sin: "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil."

There are two divinely appointed societies, both of which may be kept pure and both of which are liable to be corrupted—the Christian home and the Christian church. Christian young men and young women have no right to intermarry with the world, with skeptics, irreligious people, or devotees of apostate worship. Such unions always bring sorrow and sin. Thousands of homes have been wrecked by disregarding this plain injunction of the Word.

Members of the churches, Christians, have no right to join in the countless societies and lodges which are outside of the church. By leaguings themselves with the world in such societies they are repeating the sin which has cursed the church in every age. They are making a league with the world which will be a snare to themselves and injure the church. "Come out from among them and be ye separate" is one of the plainest commands of God. Disobedience of this command has brought spiritual drought into the churches. What a marriage to a worldly companion is to the family, a marriage to a worldly society is to the church. Both are sinful. Both are forbidden. Both are injurious. This doctrine of separation must be preached more than it is. We are sadly in need of hearing and enforcing it now.—The American.

SOME METHODS OF LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

A man may now, if he is careful or wise in his choice of a company, insure his life, or, if insured, he may have the temerity to die, without a fairly-grounded expectation of leaving his family a lawsuit for a legacy. He may also be reasonably sure that he is not placing his own reputation (after he is unable to defend it) at the mercy of a powerful corporation intent upon saving its funds from the inroads of a just debt. And I question if it is too much to say that, given enough money, a strong motive, and a powerful corporation, on the one hand, and only a sorrowing family upon the other, and no man ever lived or died whose reputation could not be blackened beyond repair, after he was himself unable to explain or refute seeming irregularities of conduct or dishonesty of motive. No man's character is invulnerable, and no man's reputation can afford the strain or test of such a contest. Millions of dollars have been withheld from rightful heirs by threats of an exposure—the more vague the more frightful—of the unsuspected crimes or misdeeds of the beloved dead.

Thousands of cases never known to the public have been "compromised," and hundreds of heart-aches and unjust suspicions and fears about the dead, which can never be corrected are aroused in sorrowing but loving breasts by this method of doing "business." It is, of course, of the utmost importance that every precaution be taken by life insurance companies to protect the funds held by them, in trust for others, against fraud and trickery. But with the agent, the examining physician, the medical directors, and the inspectors all employed by, and answerable to, the company represented, if fraud is committed in getting into the company, one or all of these paid officers must almost, of necessity, be party to that fraud. With all these safeguards in the hands of the company, if a man is accepted as a "good risk," if he pays his premiums, surely his family has the right to expect a legacy and not a lawsuit, nor a "compromise" which must cast reproach on the dead.—Popular Science Monthly for July.

GOD'S THOUGHT AND POWER IN NATURE.

There is behind creatures, and anterior to their existence, a thought. There is a design according to which they were built, which must have been conceived before they were called into existence—otherwise these things could not be related in this general manner. Whenever we study the general relations of animals, we study more than the affinities of beasts. We study the manner in which it has pleased the Creator to express his thoughts in living realities, and that is the value of that study for intellectual man; for while he traces these thoughts as revealed in nature, he must be conscious that he feels, and attempts—as far as it is possible for the limited mind of man—to analyze the thoughts of the Creator, to approach, if possible, into the counsels that preceded the calling into existence of this world with its inhabitants—and there lies really the moral value of the study of nature; for it makes us acquainted with the Creator in a manner in which we cannot learn him otherwise. As the author of nature, we must study him in the revelation of nature, in that which is living before our eyes.

But there is an argument now brought forward, which is very specious, and about which I will say a few words. Man knows how to modify animals. If he desires it, he has the means of doing it. And every gardener knows how to produce new fruits and vegetables. All these things can be done by men. And the argument is, that nature has the same mode of procedure, and will accomplish the same objects. Mark the difference. In the one case men act with a purpose, and are watchful of the end. In the other it is accident and chance. Now, we have seen that throughout nature there are combinations which give evidence of a plan; we have seen that there is an agency at work on a thousand-fold more powerful scale than any man in the farm or garden, but yet it is an agency. It is mind in both cases; and if man can improve his cattle it is because he has mind, and the more intelligent a farmer is, the more successful he will be. But if he leaves the weather and the seasons to make his plans, he will see that nature in its wild elements will not improve his farm, any more than nature will produce any new race.

And so I say that nature teaches us everywhere the direct intervention of one intelligent Being—supreme and all-powerful—who exercises a deliberate will, according to a fixed plan; and that we may see in the study of nature another revelation of Him whom we have learned otherwise to love and adore; and that museums should be no longer considered as libraries of works of nature, but as libraries of works of God, in which we may read his thoughts, and become more familiar with him as the Father of all things. As institutions meant for that purpose, I say that museums should receive the patronage of all civilized nations; and I hope to live long enough to see the time when every school shall have its little museum as it has now its little library.—Professor Agassiz.

on natural sciences in a college during the week. Prof. Drummond was led to the discovery not only of the analogy but identity of natural with spiritual laws. The introduction is occupied with a philosophical statement which is of interest to the student, but may be omitted by the general reader without loss. Biogenesis: All life is originally a germ-cell. This is true of vegetable, animal, rational, spiritual, social, national and ecclesiastical. That cell has power to put itself forth and assimilate and incorporate foreign substances to itself, adding cell to cell until the limit is reached. Christ is the germ-cell. "He that hath the Son hath life." Degeneration: Cease using a faculty and it degenerates. "The little crustacea which have inhabited for centuries the lakes of the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky," appear to have perfect eyes, but they see not. Living in darkness the optic nerve has become "a shrunken, atrophied and insensate thread." So the natural man has eyes, but sees not the things of the Spirit. "How shall we escape if we neglect so great a salvation!" Growth: "Consider the lillies how they grow." Its spontaneousness: The lily grows without effort. The boy grows without thinking of it. "The new life" grows without one anxious care. "Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit to his stature?" We can make an artificial flower. The natural flower grows. The moralist is man-made. The Christian grows. "The Christian works from the center, the moralist from the circumference." Its mysteriousness: Life cannot be defined. There is as much mystery in nature as in grace. "The wind bloweth where it listeth and thou canst not tell whence it cometh or whither it goeth. So is every one that is born of the Spirit." Death: This is defined to be the want of correspondence with the environment. A stone does not correspond with the environments of the tree, nor the tree with those of the animal, nor the animal with those of the man, nor the natural man with those of the spiritual man. Each is dead to all above. "To be carnally minded is death." Mortification: When the "new life" has been implanted in the soul, what must we do with the "old life"? Three things. 1. Suicide: "Crucify the flesh." A converted drunkard must quit drinking at once and forever. The right hand must be cut off. Total abstinence is scientific as well as biblical. 2. Mortification: "If ye mortify the deeds of the body." Cut off the growth of the Canada thistle time and again, and the root will wither. 3. Limitation: It is right to make money. But beyond certain limitations it becomes dangerous and sinful. Eternal Life: As long as the tree corresponds with its environments, air, sunlight, soil, moisture, etc., it lives. As long as the animal corresponds with its environments, it lives. As long as the soul corresponds with its environment which is God, or is in communion with God, it lives. "This is life eternal, to know thee, the true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Eternal life is more than unending existence. Environment: The development of life depends upon environment. "The sandy hue of the sole and flounder, the white of the polar bear with its suggestion of Arctic snows, the stripes of the Bengal tiger, as if the actual reeds of its native jungle had nature printed themselves on its hide," indicate the power of environment. Natural environment will not satisfy the soul. It must have a spiritual environment. The soul asks, What is truth? The natural environment answers, "Increase of knowledge increaseth sorrow," and "much study is a weariness." Christ answers, "Learn of me and ye shall find rest." The soul asks, Who will show us any good? The world answers, There is none that doeth good, no, not one." But Christ says, "There is none good but God only." The soul cries, "Where is he whom my soul seeketh?" "No man careth for my soul," on the one hand; "Thou, O Lord, art my refuge," on the other. Conformity to type: Among plants and animals nature labors to reproduce the original type. The germ of tree, animal and man, is the same. One potter fashions it into a tree. Another fashions it into an animal. A third fashions it into a man. The Christian is the reproduction of the Christ-life. Semi-Parasitism: Certain plants, as the dodder, obtain their nourishment from others by means of sucking discs. But their own roots deteriorate and the whole plant is twarfed as a penalty. The hermit-crab appropriates the cast-off shell of some other animal. A like penalty follows. "Any principle which secures the safety of the individual without personal effort or the vital exercise of faculty, is disastrous to moral character." Witness the Church of Rome and the narrower evangelical religion; the organization furnishing safety in one case and an orthodox creed in the other, stunting the soul-life of the members. Classification: At the bottom is the inorganic kingdom. Next in order is the organic kingdom. And highest, we reach the kingdom of heaven. "Some mineral, but not all, becomes vegetable; some vegetable, but not all, becomes animal; some animal, but not all, becomes human; some human, but not all, becomes divine. Thus the area narrows. At the base is the mineral, most broad and simple; the spiritual is the apex, smallest, but most highly differentiated. So form rises above form, kingdom above kingdom. Quantity decreases as quality increases."

Last Sabbath morning I preached again in the Third Presbyterian church, on the Gospel for the Nations. Alexander Duff said, "The church is only playing at missions." We give our Benjamin's portion to the world and only our mites to the Lord. When the artist asked Cromwell how he would be painted, he said, "Paint me just as I am, warts and all." Not every Christian is so courageous. A lady gave $3,000 for jewels to adorn her person and $3 for missions. "Paint me as I am." Entire consecration is called for. "Thine are we, David," devotion to Christ's person; "and on thy side, thou son of Jesse," consecration to his cause.

In the evening I preached in the Camp Washington M. E. Church, Rev. J. N. Brewster, pastor. After my discourse brother Brewster said: "I feel like availing myself of a Methodist preacher's privilege to exhort awhile. It is very hot outside tonight, but that sermon has fired me up within. We need those truths. The Constitution does not contain the name of God. No wonder our large cities are growing worse. Our city council voted the Sabbath out two to ten. The brewers are sending money to Texas by the ten thousands to defeat the amendment the 4th of August, and I fear they will succeed. But the handwriting is on the wall. The liquor traffic must go down." When the body of John Knox was lowered into the grave, the Regent, himself one of the daring race of Douglas, said, "There lies he who never feared the face of man." So much may be said of this young brother.

The intense heat of the past few days, causing such mortality, reminds us how much we are in the hands of Providence. What a kind Father to temper the heat with cold, and the cold with heat. "With a sky but a little more bright and fiery, or a little more clouded, the plants of the earth would wither; with an atmosphere possessing a little more or a little less of the vital element, the living creatures would perish; and it would seem as if, with a little more or a little less suffering in the world, man would lead an existence now troubled and now prostrated, in the alternate violence and exhaustion of a fever."—McCosh.

The Commercial Gazette cannot find terms sufficiently opprobrious to express its hatred to the Prohibitionists. It is strange that such public defamation of pure men and women should be indulged in.

"No might nor greatness in mortality
Can censure 'scape; back-wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue!"

The slanderer is guilty of the greatest crime.

"Who steals my purée, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which nothing enriches him
And leaves me poor indeed."

The Prohibitionists hold a camp meeting on the Springfield fair grounds the 21st, 22d, and 23d inst. The first forenoon is to be occupied by Hon. John P. St. John and myself; although I am to go out, like the little elephant, and try the ice first. Among the speakers are, Col. John Sobieski, the famous Polish exile, Col. Geo. W. Bain, "the silver-tongued orator" of Kentucky, Hon. Morris Sharp, Prohibition nominee for Governor, et al. An immense gathering is expected.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AN APPEAL FROM ARKANSAS.

PINE BLUFF, Ark., July 13, 1887.

DEAR EDITOR:—I wish to write you upon a most important subject pertaining to the uplifting of my people, as pertaining to their reformation in morals, in religion, society, politics and general domestic life. Bro. G. W. Clark of Michigan came South last winter and opened the eyes of the thinking and leading negroes of this State, and indeed in every part where the blessed old Christian Abolitionist stepped his foot of reformation. God bless him and the cause for which he strives! We come to the men of the North because we know them to be the friends of falling humanity. We cannot say this of the South; not because we do not love the people of the South, for we do. We were born in the South and we must love our home or else we could not be true to our culture, our patriotism and government. But you must and do recognize the fact that the people of the North have been trained differently in their habits and education. You who have the Lord's interest at heart have not commenced at this late day in this work for selfishness and gain, but almost from your beginning your blessed mothers and fathers, who were men and women indeed, called you around their knees and prayed for your success as men in the mission field of life, to shape the destiny and lives of the human race. Consequently you have the Bible and its teachings to actuate you in all of your ideas and actions. So if you went to war you put God in your front; so you do in time of peace, in school, in church, in state and, indeed, in all you undertake. So we have the blessed text, "If God be for us who can be against us?" God will stand by his people in the right and never forsake them.

This is a day of reformation and we must reform. Reform what? Why, we answer, the reformations needed in the South are many. While you have a true conception of God, his Son and his mission, we have, as a mass, little or none. You have the fearful Anarchists; we have lynchers, ballot-box stuffers, etc. While you have the dignified, high-toned and educated ministry, we have men who have forced themselves into God's pulpit and have little or no knowledge of their duty, or "calling," as they term it. While you have men who reason about the Word of God, many of our ministers whoop, snort, cough, spit, aequal, mourn, groan and whine, and do all but preach the Word of the Lord. Don't we need reform in these matters?

But this is but the beginning. We have many and fearful agents to contend and battle against that are drinking the life-blood out of the Negro race; and not only the Negro, but thousands of poor whites who are at the mercy of these agents.

Men of the North, could you come into our Southern cities on some Saturday and see the hundreds of colored women and men go into the whisky saloons and drink down the vile poison, you would think we certainly need reform in the State of Arkansas upon this subject.

Societies are far too numerous among the colored people. It is in these societies where sharp designers lay their plans by which they overthrow the wishes and will of the honest and toiling masses of the people.

We need reform in morality. Many white men of the North and South say to the writer, Your men do very well, but your women are so depraved. This to a great extent is true. But how shall the people be warned if we don't blow the trumpet? We intend to give no uncertain sound, but be heard upon these subjects at any and all times all along the line.

Now we have tried many agencies for uplifting our people, and while all of them have not failed, many have done little better than to fail. We know that the New York Witness and the Cynosure have done more good in helping in the reform among the colored people in the South than any one hundred colored preachers we have in our midst. Now, brethren and sisters of the reform, we come to you for help and advice. Pray for us and help us with your means. We will have out a copy or issue of our reform paper within a few weeks, and we know we are poor and will need your aid. We are yours for reform,

A. M. MIDDLEBROOKS.

"REFORM IN THE EAST."

OAKLAND, Cal.

To Rev. M. A. Gault,

DEAR BROTHER:—I have just read your letter under the above heading in the Cynosure of the 7th inst. It gives me much pleasure; and it gives me just as much pain. I am afraid you are drifting into pessimism. What is the matter? Let those in the shady side of life, like myself, be pessimists; young men so prominent in great reforms should shake off all tendencies thitherward.

But what I wish to say is this: that as I am your senior brother in the old church of the Covenanters, you must permit me to give you a public rebuke; for the direction is: "Them that sin rebuke before all," i. e., all the readers of the Cynosure where your offense was committed.

1. Why do you expose the faults of our brethren in a reform journal, outside of the church, rather than in one of our own magazines? Should you not have told to the sinners themselves their sins rather than tell them to others? What good will you do to the church or the brethren in it by exposing their faults to others and in a journal read by only a few of them?

2. If a brother minister in New York invited you to preach in his pulpit, accompanying the invitation with the request that you would not preach on National Reform, there must have been some other or additional reason than the one mentioned. Whether or not, I do not believe there is a congregation in the R. P. Church, even in New York city, opposed to National Reform. If you know there is, tell it not in the Cynosure. At all events you should give that brother an opportunity to defend himself; for misereat me illius.

3. If you heard in one of our Newburgh pulpits "a G. A. R. notice," I would like to hope that that fact does not prove or even indicate that either pulpit or pew is in favor of secrecy. If you think the reading of such a notice was the sin, and probably it was, testify against it in some Covenant journal.

4. "One of our members had united with the G. A. R.," you say. But you did not tell us whether or not he had been disciplined by his session. Besides, when, two years ago, Synod was discussing the case of a brother who was suspected or charged with favoring the G. A. R., I do not remember that brother Gault had anything to say in the discussion. Moreover, could any language be more decided in its condemnation of secrecy than that of the late Synod at Newburgh?

5. If any one argued that any of the "lower secret orders were not to be condemned," it was President George himself, a champion of anti-secrecy. He would hardly be suspected of being erroneous.

And, 6. If Synod could spend most of one day session, and a whole and special evening meeting, in the discussion of and testimony against secret orders, and did not spend a quarter as much time, nor give any special meeting to even the great theme and most important work of missions, I do not like to hear the body rebuked for leaning toward secrecy. Yours for every righteous cause,

N. R. JOHNSTON.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

CHICAGO, July 21, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.—Rev. J. S. T. Miligan, in your to-day's paper, endeavors to show that the phrase, mia Sabbaton, (Matt. 28: 1; 1 Cor. 16: 2), he mia ton Sabbaton, (Mark 16: 2; Luke 24: 1; John 20: 1, 19; Acts 20: 7), means the Christian Sabbath. I do not propose to controvert Bro. M.'s statements or conclusions; for I fully admit that, so far, I do not comprehend them. His scholarship and his theology are alike beyond my depth. But I think I do understand the passages cited; and with your permission I shall try to explain them. I promise you that the humblest of your readers will understand what I have written, if they will carefully read and study the passages cited. "The Bible is its own best interpreter." I shall confine myself to the Bible and its oldest translation.

All the New Testament writers were Jews, whose mother tongue was some form of Hebrew; hence, Hebrew idioms abound in their writings. The phrase, mia Sabbaton, "one of Sabbaths," is one of these. Mia, "one," is used for prote, "first." The corresponding Hebrew phrase would be, echad shabbathoth, or echad leshabbath. This phrase does not occur in the Hebrew Bible; but we have the analogous phrase, echad lehodesh, "one of the month," a number of times. There is no doubt but that this means "the first day of the month." In the Septuagint Greek translation, which was made some three hundred years before the Gospels were written, and which was in common use in the time of the Evangelists and Apostles, this phrase is generally rendered, mia tou menos, "one of the month," or hemera mia tou menos, "day one of the month;" that is, in pure English, "the first day of the month." So also, the phrase, elos hen, "year one," for "first year," is found in the Septuagint. I give a partial list of the passages: Gen. 8: 13; Ex. 40: 2; Lev. 23: 24; Num. 1: 1, 18; 29: 1; 33: 38; Deut. 1: 3; Ezra 3: 6; 7: 9; 10: 16, 17; Neh. 8: 2; Ezek. 26: 1; 29: 17; 31: 1; 32: 1; 45: 18; Hag. 1: 1; Dan. 1: 21.

I conclude, therefore, the Bible being its own interpreter, that the phrase, he mia ton Sabbaton, means "the first day of the Sabbath," or "of the Sabbaths," according as the Greek word has a singular or plural meaning. All translators sometimes render the plural, Sabbaton, by the singular, "Sabbath;" and in this I believe they are justifiable. See, besides the passages under consideration: Matt. 12: 1; Mark 1: 21; Luke 4: 16; 13: 10; Acts 13: 14; 16: 3. I am satisfied that, in the passages before us, Sabbaton should be rendered "Sabbath," for the sake of the English idiom, if for no other reason.

But what is the meaning of the phrase, "the first day of the Sabbath?" The question is not: What did Jerome, or Athanasius, or the Council of Nice, or Luther, or Calvin, or Wesley, understand by it? but, what did it mean when it was used by the inspired writers? Here again let the Bible be its own interpreter. And remember, that not one of the five inspired writers who use it has given any explanation of it; showing that it was not a phrase newly coined, to convey some new meaning, but one that had been in common use, perhaps for ages.

The word Sabbath, Hebrew, Shabbath, Greek Sabbaton, or Sabbata, has in the Bible five different meanings:

1. Cessation, or rest. Ex. 20: 8, 10, 11. "Remember the day of the rest." That is, God's rest. "The seventh day is the rest of the Lord thy God." "The Lord blessed the day of the rest."

2. A period of twenty-four hours; as: (1) the weekly Sabbath. Ex. 16: 29; Mark 2: 28, 29; and elsewhere often. (2) The annual Sabbaths—15th and 21st of Nisan (Lev. 23: 7, 8), the 6th of Sivan, that is, the fiftieth day, or Pentecost (Lev. 23: 21), the 1st, 10th, 15th and 22d of Tisri (Lev. 23: 23-25, 27-32, 34-36).

3. A period of seven days, or a week, of which there were seven in each year, beginning with the 16th day of Nisan, the day of the Wave-Sheaf, and ending the day before Pentecost—"seven Sabbaths, or forty-nine days, complete," (Lev. 23: 15). These are the only periods of seven days that are called "Sabbaths" in the Bible. They are also called heptads, or "weeks" (Shebuoth) in Deut. 16: 9, 10, 16; Ex. 34: 22; Num. 28: 26; 2 Chron. 8: 13. In the Septuagint, they are always called hebdomades, or heptads.

4. A period of one year—the Sabbath of the land. (Lev. 25: 1-7; 26: 34, 35, 43; 2 Chron. 36: 21).

5. A period of seven years—"seven sabbaths of years, even forty and nine years," (Lev. 25: 8).

This exhausts the testimony of the Bible on this question; and "what need have we of further witness? The day in which Jesus first appeared to his disciples after his resurrection was the 16th of Nisan, "the morrow after the Sabbath, (Lev. 23: 15). The day of the Wave-Sheaf, which was the "first-fruits" of the harvest, as Jesus was, and is, the "first-fruits of them that slept." The "Sabbath that preceded this day was not necessarily the weekly Sabbath; but it was the 15th of Nisan, the first day of Unleavened Bread, in the end of which Mary the Magdalene and the other Mary came to see the tomb, (Matt. 28: 1). Whether this mia Sabbaton was or was not Sunday, depends upon the question, On what day of the common week did the Feast of Weeks begin? Once in about seven years it would begin on Sunday, not oftener. But whatever day of the creation week it may have been, it was "the first day of the Sabbath"—a phrase that sounds odd to us, simply because we have never been accustomed to a Sabbath of seven days. To the Jew it must have been as a household word. Please remember, reader, that while these seven Sabbaths, of seven days each, were also heptads or weeks, they were the only weeks in the year that were Sabbaths; also, that these heptads, "Sabbaths" might begin on any day of the common week.

The above view is confirmed by an examination of those passages, outside of the Gospels, in which the phrase mia Sabbaton occurs. The first is Acts 20: 7. Read from the 6th verse to the 16th, inclusive. Paul and his companions remained at Philippi "till after the days of unleavened bread," verse 6, and "he was hastening, if it were possible for him to be at Jerusalem the day of Pentecost, verse 16. The meeting at Troas, therefore, was on the first day of one of these seven Sabbaths; probably the fourth or fifth of them. The other passage is 1 Cor. 16: 2. Read in connection chapter 5: 6-8, and verse 8 of this 16th chapter. This letter was written about the time of the Passover, and Paul expected to visit Corinth immediately after Pentecost. He would have the Galatian and Corinthian churches "lay by them," that is, separate and consecrate their charitable contributions on the first day of each of the intervening Sabbaths.

The intelligent reader will understand all that I have written, and he will be able to raise a great many objections. Of two things, however, rest assured: He cannot raise a single objection that I cannot answer and remove; and, without recognizing the above-stated facts, he will find it impossible to produce any thing like a reasonable and satisfactory harmony of the Gospels. Jos. W. MORTON.

BIBLE LESSON.

STUDIES IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

LESSON VI.—August 7.—Jesus in Galilee.—Matt. 4: 17-25.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The people which sat in darkness saw great light.—Matt. 4: 16.

[Open the Bible and read the lesson.]

From Peloubet's Notes.

INTERVENING HISTORY.—From Feb. A. D. 27 to April, A. D. 28. Recorded chiefly in John 1: 19 to 5: 47, and in Matt. 4: 12-16; Luke 4: 14-32.

After the temptation Jesus returns to Bethabara, where John was still preaching and baptizing (last of Feb.). Here he is pointed out by John to some of his disciples as the Messiah. These disciples visit Jesus, believe on him and accompany him to Galilee. At Cana Jesus works his first miracle, at a wedding (early in March). He returns in April to Jerusalem to attend the Passover feast (April 9-16), cleanses the temple, and discourses with Nicodemus. The summer and autumn are spent in Judea. In December he goes again to Galilee, and on his way discourses to the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well. In Galilee he heals the son of the Capernaum nobleman (Jan. a. d. 28). In the latter part of March he returns to Jerusalem to attend his second Passover (March 29-April 5), and heals the impotent man at the pool of Bethesda. About this time (March, A. D. 28) John is cast into prison at Machabrus by Herod (Matt. 4: 12; 14: 3-5), and Jesus hastens back to Galilee. He is rejected at Nazareth (Luke 4: 16-30), and hereafter makes his home at Capernaum (April, A. D. 28; Matt. 4: 13). His abode in Galilee is in fulfillment of prophecy (Matt. 4: 14-16).

"Jesus began to preach." To proclaim as a herald, a message from God. Jesus had been teaching for more than a year, but for the most part privately and individually. He thus prepared the way for his public announcement of his mission and of the principles of the new kingdom. But his sermon at Nazareth at this time (Luke 4: 16-31) "appears to have inaugurated his entry upon his life-work as a preacher of righteousness."

"For the kingdom of heaven is at hand." A change was about to take place in God's way of dealing with sinful men. He was about to establish, in a duly organized form, a heavenly community, a peculiar theocracy, within the pale of which he would confer peculiar and most heavenly privileges. None but heavenly persons would be citizens of the community. Citizenship in it would not be ended but only consummated by what is generally called death.—Morison.

Peter and Andrew, and probably John, had accepted Jesus as the Messiah more than a year before (John 1: 35-42) and had accompanied him to Cana of Galilee (John 2: 8) as his disciples. But they did not receive a formal call at that time to leave all and follow Jesus permanently, and probably they "had returned for a time to their occupation as fishers, till they were called expressly to become fishers of men."

"And I will make you fishers of men." I shall teach you to wield another kind of net than that which ye are casting into the waters, the net of divine and evangelical truth. By means of it ye shall be able to catch men for God. How exalted the privilege!—Morison.

"Left their nets and followed him." Mark both their faith and their obedience. For though they were in the midst of their work (and ye know how greedy a thing fishing is), when they heard his command they delayed not, they procrastinated not, they said not, "Let us return home and converse with our kinsfolk," but they forsook all and followed.—Chrysostom. Compare Matt. 7: 21, 22, and chap. 19: 27-30. We follow Christ when we imitate his example, obey his words, walk in his footsteps toward heaven and God.—P.

"James." Probably the elder of the two brothers. James is the Greek form of the Hebrew Jacob. He is usually called the Greater or Elder to distinguish him from James the Less, the kinsman (or "brother") of Jesus and author of the book of James. He was beheaded by order of King Herod Agrippa (Acts 12: 2), A. D. 44, and was the first martyr among the apostles. His apostolic labors seem not to have extended beyond Jerusalem and Judea.—Schaaf's Bible Dictionary.

"Zebedee" (Jehonath's gift). Husband of Salome, the sister of Mary the mother of Jesus (John 19: 25); who ministered to the Lord (Matt. 27: 56), though he himself is not mentioned among the disciples of Jesus. Hence the two brothers were cousins of Jesus. The mention of hired servants (Mark 1: 20), of the two vessels employed (Luke 5: 7), and the subsequent allusion to St. John's acquaintance with a person in so high a position as the high priest (John 18: 15), seem to indicate that Zebedee, if not a wealthy man, was at any rate of some position in Capernaum.—Cambridge Bible.

"And they immediately left the ship (boat) and their father." Probably with his consent.—Lange. The call of God is above all earthly demands (Matt. 10: 37). But we are to note that they did not leave their father unprovided for; and to show this may have been the reason why hired servants are mentioned (Mark 1: 20). God's call does not bid us let our parents suffer, but forbids it (Mark 7: 10-13).—P.

"And those which were possessed with devils." Demons. The difference between this and other diseases lay not so much in its symptoms as in its cause. "Thus we find violent madness (Mark 5: 4; Luke 8: 29), epilepsy (Mark 9: 18; Luke 9: 39), dumbness (Matt. 9: 32; Luke 11: 14), blindness (Matt. 12: 22), ascribed in different persons to this cause." There seems to have been certain moral and physical conditions in which demons obtained possession both of the body and of the mind, bringing disease upon the former, and insanity upon the latter. The demoniac seemed to be completely under the power of the unclean spirit. It was a most terrible form of disease.—P. To the frequent objection, How comes it that similar possessions do not occur at the present day? it may be answered, How is it known that they do not occur even now? We cannot prove the negative. It can not be said that in many cases of insanity and the like the malady may not be traced to the direct agency of demons.—G. W. Clark.

Note (1) These were most difficult cases of diseases to heal. (2) No natural causes can possibly explain these manifestations of Christ's power. (3) His miracles, too, were characteristically unlike the acts of a necromancer. He never shrouded them in mystery; he cured in his own name, in open day, and before all the people, by a word, a touch, a command.—Abbott. (4) The miracles were, both in manner and matter, worthy of the Son of God.

IN BRIEF.

The British Government has decided to dismantle and level to the ground several of the martello or round towers in Ireland. There are in the Emerald Isle 118 of these towers, the origin of which has always been a puzzle to antiquarians.

The Vatican regards the erection of a statue of Giordano Bruno in Rome on the spot where the Romish church burned him at the stake as an insult, and the pope has directed Cardinal Hergenbrother to prepare a history of Bruno from the church point of view as an antidote to the impression in the public mind.

An exchange says, "Michigan has a law which provides that no sign, picture, painting, or other representation of murder, assassination, stabbing, fighting, or any personal violence, or of the commission of any crime, shall be posted, under penalty of fine or imprisonment. It would improve the moral condition of this country if such a law were enacted by and rigidly enforced in every State. The debasing influence of theatrical and similar posters upon the character of boys and girls is incalculable, and is realized by few parents. Equally debasing are some of the illustrated papers, the sale of which should everywhere be prohibited by law."

The immense new vault for silver at the United States Treasury at Washington is being rapidly pushed forward, and the western front of the State, War, and Navy Department approaches completion. Work on the portico and entrance and the grading of the sidewalk is daily progressing. Soon the western wing of this handsome building, which is an enormous parallelogram of grey granite, will present the same appearance as the eastern wing. The latter looks out upon the President's house and gardens and is occupied by the Navy Department. The south wing is the State Department, while the north and west wings belong to the War Department. It is expected that eventually the whole building will be given over to the business of the War Department, and others erected for the Navy and State. When the inside work on the western wing is finished one of the handsomest structures in the world will be completed; a structure presenting but one defect to the observer, it has too many windows. They are not far enough apart and give to the building the appearance of a huge conservatory. This defect is not noticeable, however, from a distance.

A bill passed the Legislature of the State of New York last winter making it a misdemeanor, punishable by arrest and fine or imprisonment, "to feed or harbor sparrows." This means that you must be careful in shaking out your crumb-cloth, that the sparrows cannot get at the crumbs. It shows the deep hostility that the sparrows have, in their short stay of only twenty years in the country, called down on them. They have, in that period, spread from the parks of New York city to the Rocky Mountains, and in that migration they have practically driven out the song-birds, and almost exterminated the useful swallows. There is no doubt but that they do a deal of mischief to vegetation and fruit by picking out the germs in the buds of trees and on the embryo budding of all kinds of grain and vegetation. It is also true that many other birds are far more useful in destroying insects that infest trees and vegetables than the sparrow. One red-breasted thrush [in this country they are called robins] will do more work in that line than a flock of sparrows. Many farmers and others are in favor of giving a bounty for their slaughter; some say five cents a dozen, some ten. They are good food, but rather tedious to prepare. Sparrows are quite common among the cottagers of Great Britain, and in France the use of them for food has prevented their becoming a nuisance, as they have in America.—Democrat's Monthly for August

BY GREAT MEN IN THE CHURCH.

PASTOR FISCH, of Paris, 1873:—The church in America must stand as one man against Masonry or be destroyed.

REV. JOEL SWARTZ, D. D., a renouncing Mason:—Its (Freemasonry's) religion is anti-Christian... Its prayers are blasphemous... Its use of the Bible is sacrilegious... The whole is a compound of Judaism and paganism.

MOSES STUART, Professor in Andover Theological Seminary, Mass, 1834:—For a long time I neither knew nor cared about the subject; but recent attention to it has filled me with astonishment; and as to somethings contained in it, with horror. The trilling with oaths and with the awful name of the ever blessed God, is a feature which I cannot contemplate but with the deepest distress.

JOHN WESLEY, June, 1773:—I went to Ballymena and read a strange tract that professes to discover "the inmost recesses of Freemasonry," said to be "translated from the French original lately published at Berlin." I incline to think it is a genuine account. Only if it be, I wonder the author is suffered to live. If it be, what an amazing banter upon all mankind is Freemasonry.—N. Y. Christian Advocate, February, 1834.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL:—I know no Temperance, Odd-fellow or Freemason fraternity that does not recognize a brotherhood with the world. "They are of the world, they speak of the world and the world heareth them." Christians, though in the world, are not of it. Any union, then, for moral purposes with the world that brings us to commune religiously with it, by the laws and usages of the institution itself, is opposed to the law and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

CHARLES G. FINNEY.—God demands and the world has a right to expect, that the church will take due action and bear a truthful testimony in respect to this institution. She cannot now innocently hold her peace. The light has come. Fidelity to God and to the souls of men require that the church, which is the light of the world, should speak out, and should take such action as will plainly reveal her views of the compatibility or incompatibility of Freemasonry with the Christian religion.

NATHANIEL COLVER, former pastor Tremont Temple, Boston:—I am free to say that it is my deliberate opinion that the vicious character of Masonry and its guilt-concealing and barbarous oaths are such, as not only to release all from their bonds, but also to lay upon them the solemn obligation to tear off its covering and expose its enormity. I regard it as Satan's masterpiece, a terrible snare to men. It sits at this moment as a nightmare on all the moral energies of our government, and utterly paralyzes the arm of justice.

DWIGHT L. MOODY.—Give them the truth anyway, and if they would rather leave their churches than their lodges the sooner they get out of the churches the better. I would rather have ten members who were separated from the world than a thousand such members. Come out from the lodge. Better one with God than a thousand without him. We must walk with God and if only one or two go with us it is all right. Do not let down the standard to suit men who love their secret lodges or have some darling sin they will not give up.

HENRY TATEM, an eminent Baptist pastor, Providence, R. I., 1833:—It was about fourteen years ago that I was first initiated into the lodge. Within a few months after, I advanced to the Royal Arch degree, and sometime after I took the degrees of Knighthood, as they are called. I well remember the horror of my feelings when the bandage was taken from my eyes and I found myself partly naked, with men standing around me pointing at me the implements of death, and a human skull was handed me to drink from, and I was required to repeat words, awful in themselves, and which I cannot distinctly recollect, but which I believe to have been the same I find given in the explanation of that ceremony in Bernard's Light on Masonry. From that time I absented myself from the lodge and chapter. My mind was afterwards led by degrees to an examination into Masonry, which I am now satisfied is repugnant to the spirit of the religion of Christ.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1887.

THE MORMONS.

UTAH TO BE A STATE TO OFFSET DAKOTA.
DEMOCRATIC TACTICS.

On the 6th of July inst., seventy Mormon delegates met in the City Hall, Salt Lake, to form a Constitution and apply for admission to the Union as the State of Utah. This is their sixth attempt to become a State. Will they succeed? It looks as though they will.

Grover Cleveland is the ablest politician now in the United States. A life-long Democrat, from a county sheriff he was made Governor of New York by Republican votes, and an overwhelming majority. Henry Ward Beecher went for him, and he was chosen President of the United States when the country was Republican from the memories of the war, beating Blaine. When accused of Maria Halpin, whose child he openly adopted, and sent the crazed mother, with whom he boarded while a bachelor, to a lunatic asylum to get rid of her importunities; when asked "What shall we say about it?" he manfully replied, "Tell the truth." Blaine telegraphed to prosecute the editor who told the truth about him. Cleveland has grown popular and Blaine unpopular.

When the Mormons came to Cleveland, he quietly asked them, "Why can't you live like other folks, out there?" The present Mormon convention is professing to do just what Cleveland asked. They have put in their Constitution a section making "bigamy and polygamy misdemeanors," punishable by fine of $1,000 and imprisonment three years, or less, at the court's discretion, and to satisfy Cleveland and the Democrats, they have provided the article cannot be amended or altered till Congress sanctions it. Nor shall a convicted bigamist or polygamist be pardoned till the President of the United States signs the pardon. Other symptoms are: Cleveland's Commission at Salt Lake are taking part with the Mormons, and are bitterly denounced by the Salt Lake Tribune, anti-Mormon. And second, President Cleveland has lately pardoned a polygamist. The Democrats gave J. O. Smith the infamous charter of Nauvoo. They went for slavery, till the slave-holders rejected Douglas for his opposition to secession, and with them party over-rides morals, and it is now apparently their party interest to take in the Mormons as they did the slave-holders. We shall see.

WILL THE MORMONS ABOLISH POLYGAMY TO GET INTO THE UNION?

The anti-Mormons say not. They are stunned, dazed, at the cool, bold playing of the Mormon leaders. They say the present Constitution is another fraud, and the abolition of polygamy a sham. Once a State, they will have Mormon governor, courts, juries, and legislature. And as O'Connell said he could "drive a coach and six horses through any statute of Parliament," so Mormon priests can and will drive polygamy through their constitutional abolition of it.

But this is not so certain. Ohio Democrats repealed their infamous Black Code, and sent Chase to the Senate to get the State offices for which they were hungry; though they did it with tears in their eyes. So let us hope that the Mormon leaders, for the sake of becoming a State, and for State offices, may have resolved to comply with Cleveland's demands, and let polygamy take its chance under an anti-polygamous Constitution. They cannot carry polygamy through Congress into the Union. This they know. May they not be making a virtue of necessity, as Judge Wood and the Ohio Democrats did when they first abolished a Black Code?

BUT WILL ABOLISHING POLYGAMY ABOLISH MORMONISM?

No; because it will not abolish Masonry, or the secret lodge system.

Joseph Smith was a Mason. Day after day he has lectured by the hour, with Samuel D. Green, in his hotel at Batavia, New York, to perfect himself in the secret ritual. He (Smith) obtained a warrant for a lodge at Nauvoo from the Grand Lodge of Illinois; and a charter for the city of Nauvoo, by the help of Stephen A. Douglas; and in return, he said he received a revelation that Douglas was the "greatest man that ever was." The Endowment House became a clandestine lodge, and the Illinois Grand Lodge withdrew its dispensation or charter. But the two systems are identical. Mormonism is Masonry and Masonry, Mormonism. Both systems are secret, and both consist of degrees; each upper degree bound by death penalties to concealment from all below, and from the outside world.

Any person who wishes proof of the identity of these systems, has only to consult any Mormon expose, and Mackey's "Lexicon" of Freemasonry. He says, "The power of a master in his lodge is absolute. He is Supreme Arbitrer,  nor can any appeal be made from his decision to that of the lodge." (Lex. Art. Master.) And the first charter of Nauvoo clothed Joseph Smith with power equally absolute and equally irresponsible. (See Ford's History of Illinois.) The same power now rests in the first president of the church. (See the Mormon Prophet, p. 117); and the only limit to this absolute power, as to that of the Romish priesthood, is the danger of exercising it. This check, the fear of the people, is all that softens the cursing and saves the life of Bishop McGlynn at this time. The same fear of the people saved for a time the lives of John and of Christ from the priests who procured their crucifixion.

Thus the only cure for the Mormon cancer is an enlightened people. But how are the people to be enlightened, when our papers, as the Chicago Inter-Ocean, gives side by side, one column condemning Mormonism and another lauding the lodge, which is Mormonism by another name; nay, which chartered Mormonism and is the mother and model of it. Even such papers as the New York Independent, which loathes the lodge, dare not tell its readers that Mormonism and Masonry are one. The secret lodge system has its padlock on the American press. But the power of these, as of all false religions, is Satanic.

The senior editor of the Cynosure, in 1864, travelled 100 miles in the Utah Valley, and never saw a more industrious, sincere people than the Mormon masses. They are spiritual demoniacs. Polygamy may perish and leave Mormonism entire. There is no cure for a false religion but the true. This will do it. But it is necessary that the civil power do its part. It must, by its Commissioners, enter the Endowment House and suppress whatever offends public decency and morals. It has the same right and duty to do it as it has to enter a gambling house or brothel. It must suppress all other governments, but that of the United States, within their jurisdiction, and all oaths of allegiance to such governments, whether at Rome or Salt Lake. If McGlynn is punished by foreign priests, or priests in this country, for mere political principles, he should be protected.

But the Mission Schools in Utah should be doubled and redoubled. The Salt Lake Tribune says, "These schools are very humbly begun. They have worked on under the ban of the dominant creed."  "But they have struggled on, increasing in number and power steadily, till they are now tremendous institutions of enlightenment."

But while the religious and secular press of this country does not and dares not analyze and expose the secret Mormon lodges, because they will, in doing so, expose and condemn the secret priestism and despotism of the Masons, Knights, and lodges of all names, which now cover and curse this country, especially the South, Mormons will remain ignorant and statesmen corrupt, and internecine war will as surely come upon us as it has upon the old nations which had a multitude of oaths.

A MACEDONIAN CRY FROM THE WEST INDIES.

While from India and Africa come the calls of Christian brethren for help against the subtle paganism of Freemasonry, the following letter to Pres. C. A. Blanchard is from an unexpected quarter. It is from the "Friend's Sea-Side Mission," at Manchi-oneal, Jamaica, in the West Indies. The letter will speak for itself. It thrills us to know that thus our God is by one and another lighting these beacon fires of truth on distant continents and islands. Let our faith and zeal rise as the emergency grows upon us; and greater and more cheering news shall come from remote regions until these fires of warning and of safety shall encircle our globe with their witness for Christ against his secret foes. The letter reads:

DEAR FRIEND:—Your article in the Christian Worker of June 2, "What have Secret Societies done for the Laboring Man?" was greatly enjoyed by myself and wife and our other workers here, and as these secret orders are now making serious inroads upon this native people and many church members are being led off by them we called a special meeting for a consideration of the subject of secret orders and I read your article from the Worker, which we think has done much good. Of course it has caused the Masons and Odd-fellows to storm and rage at a great rate; but we know in whom we have believed and feel sure that He will sustain his cause and the truth wherever it is preached in true faith.

Can you send us some tracts and books exposing Masonry and Odd-fellowism. It will greatly help us now in our time of need. These poor native people are easily led about with these secret orders and we want some literature to help us publish the truth. In Christian love, Thy friend, J. R. TOWNSEND.

The International Arbitration Association held a meeting in London lately at which the well-known philanthropist, Sir Wilfred Lawson, presided, and the eminent American lawyer, David Dudley Field, spoke. The address was a happy effort in approval of an appeal to Parliament in favor of a tribunal of international arbitration. Americans, said Mr. Field, are out of conceit with war. They had had enough of it. Although England paid dearly for the Geneva arbitration, the result brought more honor to England than the greatest military victory could have secured. There were 400,000,000 of men under arms in Europe to-day. The cost of maintaining them in soldierly unproductiveness was fabulous, besides the loss entailed by their absence from industrial pursuits, special taxation was required to support them. Nation faced nation, each armed and afraid of the other. Was it beyond the wit of man to form a European compact for a simultaneous and proportionate reduction of armaments and for the reference of whatever dispute might afterward arise between nations to arbitrators? There was no reason why such a compact should not be made, except that each nation could not trust its neighbor.

THE N. C. A. BOARD held an adjourned meeting Tuesday afternoon of last week, at which Rev. B. F. Worrell of Olathe, Kansas, was among the visiting friends present. The General Agent reported M. N. Butler of Darlington, Missouri, as ready to begin in the lecture work for a year. It was voted to recommend Miss Sarah E. Morrow of Leanna, Kansas, to be chosen a life member by the next annual meeting. Elder S. C. Kimball of New Hampshire, having requested that Secretary Stoddard attend the next convention in that State, the latter was instructed to arrange if possible a series of conventions in the New England States. Mrs. Stoddard was voted $10 on account of services at Lake Bluff. It was agreed that a general effort should be made to introduce the reform as widely as possible in the summer retreats and convocations hereafter. The salaries of officers of the N. C. A. were voted to be paid as last year.

—Solon Burroughs Esq., of Vergennes, Vermont, wishes to have speaking against the lodge. If his arrangements succeed, speaking will be had at Middlebury where the senior editor graduated—and also at Rockingham, east of the mountain where he was born.

—The National Reform Association will hold a convention at Ocean Grove, N. J., July 25, with addresses from Dr. G. R. Crooks, Prof. Rittenhouse, Mrs. Clara Hoffman and others. The action of the convention will relate to the Sabbath Question, the Bible in the Public Schools, the Christian Standard of Marriage and Divorce, the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic and kindred reforms.

—Alexander Thomson, of the N. C. A. Board, has been for several months residing on his fruit farm near Saugatuck, Michigan. His friends in the Congregational church at Bartlett, near Elgin, Ill., have sorely missed him from their number, and have lately sent him a unanimous call to become their pastor. He has consented to the call and will soon begin his new work.

—Bro. John Dorcas of Shiloh, Iowa, called on us a few days since on his way to the United Brethren Convention at Dayton, Ohio. He was determined that Iowa should be represented in that important meeting. His sympathies are enlisted by our letters from India, and he put $5 into the fund for supplying foreign lands with reform literature.

—Rev. J. A. Cole, now traveling in Virginia with Bro. Hinman, has just sent to Sierre Leone a large invoice of books against secret lodges valued at $50. These were given him for that purpose by Mr. E. A. Cook. These documents should be followed by others as the demand is aroused for them; there is room for a wide circulation in Western and Southern Africa, India and Australia.

—In spite of the intense heat of the season and the retrenchment naturally following our unusual dry season, our canvassers in Illinois report good success. Their additions to our subscription list are very encouraging, since they are an evidence that people are less afraid to read what may be said against the orders, and recognize this opposition as both legitimate and as established. Pray for this summer work.

—A letter from Bro. A. D. Zaraphonites, missionary at Andros, Greece, and correspondent of the Cynosure, tells of the gift of another son to take the place of the one whose death was so sorely mourned a year or more ago. He intends, God willing, to visit America in the fall, and will be welcomed by hundreds of old friends. The family of Mrs. Zaraphonites will also rejoice to greet her after a nine years' absence.

—Missionary Bissell of La Barca, Mexico, whose recent letter on the lodge discussion in that country interested our readers, sends a copy of the El Tesigo, the Spanish paper edited by himself in aid of the mission work. In it he notices with pleasure an article in the El Abogado Cristiano, a contemporary journal. In this Rev. C. A. Gamboa writes on the attitude which should be taken by the Christian ministry toward Masonry. We note with deepest interest these openings of a discussion in priest-ridden Mexico for the establishment of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

NOTICE

TO PATRONS OF THE IOWA CHAISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

DEAR FRIENDS:—The monthly subscription taken by your State agent, under the direction of your State treasurer, to meet the expenses of the Iowa Christian Association reform work, running from July 13th, 1886, to July 13th, 1887, is now due in full. This includes all the subscriptions taken by your State agent during the summer and fall and winter of 1886.

The State Association is in need of the subscriptions now due to meet expenses already incurred. Please, therefore, to help us out of this strait by immediately paying what is still due on your subscriptions if possible, and thus relieve your agent of the financial pressure he is under.

Will the collectors at those points where there are such call the attention of the patrons to the above notice, and remit moneys as fast as paid to the State treasurer, James Harvey, Pleasant Plain, Jefferson Co., Iowa. C. F. HAWLEY.

REFORM NEWS.

WORK IN VIRGINIA.

MEETINGS IN NORFOLK.—"ON TO RICHMOND."

RICHMOND, Va., July 20, 1887.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—You may be sure that the "heated term" did not escape our observation while we were in Norfolk. The thermometer went up to 106 degrees in the shade and it was hot all the time both day and night. This heat is about twelve degrees hotter than it ever gets on the west coast of Africa, even under the equator. Nevertheless we accomplished something. On Sunday, the 17th, Bro. Cole preached in the Queen St. Baptist church to a fair congregation and I preached at the same hour to 400 or 500 people in the Bute St. A. M. E. church. At 3:30 p. m. I preached in the same place where Bro. Cole had been in the morning, and he addressed the Bute St. people in the evening. My congregation was small and his was large, numbering perhaps 700 or 800. Rev. W. D. Cook, pastor of this church, has been reading the Cynosure since last April and is much interested in our reform. He commended the Cynosure to his people and was glad of the earnest testimony we gave against the lodge iniquity in which his people are so largely involved. Rev. Richard Speller of the Queen St. Baptist church is a Mason but not opposed to free discussion. About one hundred colored young men are about to organize a Y. M. C. A. and hold their meetings in his church. They asked Bro. Cole to address them on Tuesday night. Our ministers' meeting for Monday failed because of the absence of the president, Rev. W. D. Cook, who was suddenly called away by the death of his mother. He promised to secure a meeting for Wednesday morning which Bro. Cole would stay and attend.

I left Norfolk at 6 a. m. of the 19th on the steamer Ariel for Richmond. We went across to Old Point and Newport News, and stopped at nearly every landing on the river. We arrived at Richmond at 5:30 p. m. and had a most pleasant ride. The James is a grand river. From Hampton Roads, which is perhaps the finest harbor on the American coast, it is simply a broad estuary as far up as City Point. From here it rapidly narrows until at Richmond it is not wider than the Chicago river. But throughout its course it is well adapted to navigation.

It is easy to understand why it was selected as the place for the first permanent settlement. Newport News is becoming the rival of Norfolk as a shipping port. It has one of the largest grain elevators I have ever seen. We passed close to the ruins of Jamestown, where the first permanent settlement was made in 1608 and the first slaves landed in 1620. The remains of the old church are still standing and the river washes some of the foundation-stones of the old houses, but there is no habitation near. It reminds one of Goldsmith's Deserted Village. Williamsburg the ancient capital of Virginia, is four miles from the river and the seat of William and Mary's College. City Point is the only town on the route and is an inconsiderable place. It is the fresh water anchorage for our iron-clad fleet. There are seven gun-boats—all monitors—lying there. They looked quite formidable as well as useless for any valuable purpose. They could not stand the sea and could not convey freight or passengers. Dutch Gap was an object of interest. The canal that Gen. B. F. Butler began is used by all vessels which navigate these waters. Just here we met two large sea-going steamers coming down from Richmond. I can readily understand why the progress of our armies in their "On to Richmond" was so effectually blocked. It is most admirably situated for defence.

I have found pleasant accommodations at reasonable rates and have called on one of the pastors who promises his aid. May the Lord make our way plain. H. H. HINMAN.

FROM THE IOWA AGENT.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last writing I have been to Wasioja, Minn., to spend some time with my family, from whom I have been separated most of the year. For three and sometimes four months I have not seen these dear ones whom I tenderly love. But I trust to the loving kindness of my heavenly Lord and Master to permit me to be much with my dear companion and children in the heavenly world, while enduring separation for his sake so much of the time in this world.

They were having camp meeting at Wasioja when I reached home so I was full of work for Jesus the first week. The Sabbath following I went with Bro. Wilson, a Wasioja student, to his pastoral charge and preached for him at West Concord and Fair Point. The third week I devoted wholly to my family and to personal rest, of which I had great need.

Since leaving Wasioja I have been in Mitchell and Floyd counties, Iowa. I have been prospecting the field for future lecture work, talking up the reform, distributing pamphlets and tracts and the printed testimony of distinguished men in church and state against the lodge. I have also taken ten new yearly subscriptions to the Cynosure and some donation subscriptions to the Iowa Christian Association. On the Sabbath it was my privilege to preach the glorious Gospel of the ever blessed God.

There is drouth and chinch bugs to shorten and destroy the crops; but the intelligent Christian farmer sees good times in the maintenance of Christ's cause against the conspiracy of Satan to supplant the Gospel of Jesus with the heathen ceremonies and infidel philosophy of the secret lodge system. Some, in their shortsightedness, may "withhold more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Let us have earnest, believing prayer, liberal giving and united effort to spread the truth and victory for Christ against the lodge is sure.

C. F. HAWLEY.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS COLPORTEUR NOTES.

FREEMONT, Ill., July 20, 1887.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—After a few days of work together, Bro. W. B. Stoddard and I separated on the last day of June, he going to Byron and I to Lanark. At Lanark the secret lodges are flourishing. Nearly all the young men have joined the Masonic lodge or the Odd-fellows. The Christian minister, just a few weeks ago, was initiated in the third degree. Most of those who are opposed to secret societies dare not say so openly. R. Corning is an exception and he is boycotted. Many in Lanark, as in all places I have visited, having grown tired and discouraged in the anti-secret movement, have given up and enlisted in the Prohibition cause. It is to be hoped that they will prove more steadfast in this cause and may yet see that both causes must advance together.

Mt. Carroll is almost given over to secret societies. Rev. J. H. Hicks of the U. B. church, is a whole-souled man. He gave me his subscription and offered to secure subscriptions for the Cynosure where he preached. The last night of Bro. Arnold's lectures at Lena, about 900 people were present.

We distributed tracts at the close which the people were eager to secure. Bro. W. V. Schlung of the German Methodist church is an earnest Prohibitionist and has lost several members on account of his anti-secret principles. Rev. A. H. Rhodes (Baptist) has taken three degrees in Masonry but has left the order, believing that it, as all other secret orders, are an invention of the devil to draw the attention of men away from the church of Christ. Rev. J. H. Staugh (Lutheran) will have nothing to do with the temperance question, nor will he unite in a ministers' meeting. He had time to tell me that no one who had not been a Mason knew anything about Masonry, and that he would not believe a seceding Mason on oath, and similar stale arguments; yet he declared that he had no time to discuss the question. One of the ministers of the place told me that he had known a certain M. E. minister, recently deceased, for thirty years. During these thirty years he had won one soul to Christ, and during the same time he had influenced five or six members to join the Masonic lodge and that they were henceforth good-for-nothing in the church.

Chelsea received us well, and gave quite a number of subscriptions to the Cynosure. Nora and Warren are very strongly under Masonic control. Uncle Benj. Williams has kept the ground pretty thoroughly worked. Mr. Joseph Dobblar and Mr. Sherk are not afraid to speak their mind.

Arriving in Freeport at 9:30 a. m. I met Mr. W. W. Smith, who has charge of the Y. M. C. A. reading rooms. He has been a member of the Knights of Pythias, but left them and has since advised many young men not to join any secret society. Freeport has twenty-seven secret lodges, twenty-eight saloons and seventeen churches. Five miles northwest is a settlement where the Rock River Conference searched with a fine-toothed comb to find a man who was not a Mason, but nearly all seemed to be afflicted by the beast, and now they have a 32 deg. Mason who had to stop a revival meeting to attend a lodge meeting. They that be for us are mightier than they that are against us, so we dare not doubt that the truth will, finally, triumph. G. A. CONRAD.

OBITUARY.

ALBERT B. KELLOGG died from paralysis at his home in Wethersfield, Ill., on Saturday morning, July 23. He was widely esteemed as among the oldest settlers of that community and would soon have attained to his eighty-eighth year. His long life was one of Christian usefulness though in an humble sphere, and his convictions of Christian duty and reform were known of all men in his vicinity. The assistant editor of the Cynosure is one of his five sons.

JAMES PETERMAN died at his home in Prairie township, Holmes county, Ohio, March 19th, 1887. He was born in Columbia county, Pa., April 5th, 1805. He was the son of James and Elizabeth Peterman, who emigrated from Philadelphia at an early day and entered land in the Fishing Creek Valley, Pa., at what is known as the Peterman Rocks, near the Allegheny mountains. James was the seventh of a family of ten children, five sons and five daughters, only four of whom are living.

James, like the majority of the early pioneers' sons, was raised on a farm, where he grew up a self-reliant, energetic man. In 1828, at the age of 23 years, he bid farewell to friends and home, and started out to earn a home for himself with empty hands and empty pockets. He crossed the Allegheny mountains on foot and alone, his rifle being his only companion. In speaking of those days he said: "During my first day's travel I shot a bear, and traded the meat for my first meal and a night's lodging, and sold the hide for four dollars, which was quite a fortune to me at that time. After his arrival in Ohio he procured work on the canal at Dover, and afterwards in Beaver county, Pa., where he built a lock in the canal, he being a stone mason. He saved the money he earned and bought 160 acres of timber land in Ohio, on which he lived for more than fifty years. He was married in 1834 to Miss Jane Beatty of Beaver county, Pa., who died in 1842.

A second wife, married in 1844, died in 1883. Nine children are still living. He was a useful, honored, upright man. Several times elected to office, he discharged his duties with credit to himself and friends. He was a great reader and thinker, and member of the Presbyterian church many years. He took great interest in the reform represented by the Cynosure and was bold to advocate its principles. He will be long remembered in the community in which he lived as being a good neighbor and honest in all his dealings.

—Portugal, like Spain, is Roman Catholic, but it is not entirely barred to Gospel influences. In Lisbon four evangelists are laboring under the leadership of Canon Pope, of the Episcopal church. The Scotch Kirk has in Senor Carvalho an active agent in the capital and neighborhood. The Methodist evangelist, Ventura, has his headquarters at Oporto. A correspondent from Lisbon writes: "What we need most are native evangelists and preachers."

THE HOME.

STEP BY STEP.

"He knoweth the way that I take."

The fog hangs thickly about me
As I start to begin the day,
I see not the hills or the meadows,
No beauty is on the way;
And carefully step by step I take
Lest I loose myself, or fall;
But ever the path is opening out,
And the sky is high over all.

The way is never so hidden
But the next step can be seen,
And a guide is ever beside me
Who always a light has been;
And every hour the sun on high
More strongly and brightly shines,
And the beautiful landscape afar is shown
As the sun in the West declines.

Long is the reach of life's journey,
But the way grows strangely fair,
And the nearer I get to its ending
The sweeter the songs in the air.
The heart laughs out in its gladness
As the home is coming in sight,
And the western skies are all golden,
When the day melts into the night.

Courage, O weary pilgrim,
Timidly journey on;
The mists that are thick about thee
Will soon be over and gone.
Take the step that is nearest to thee,
And soon shall the shrouded way
Brilliantly open before thee
In the full, fair light of the day.

IN AN OLIVE GARDEN AT MENTONE.

If there is one prayer in which we should all unite for ourselves, and for all our brethren in Christ, it would be a prayer for our increased usefulness. We desire each one to bring forth fruit unto God's glory; we care not to be conspicuous as the poplar, or majestic as the cedar, but we would be useful as the olive. These olive groves, in which we, some of us, spend so many hours, ought to teach us a lesson concerning the bringing forth of precious results from all our planting and watering in the Lord's vineyard. I have a thousand thoughts about them which come and go too swiftly for me to put them down. I love the olive better than any other tree, and yet I cannot describe it, for it is ever changing. It is every day different, every ten minutes different in color and tone. See how it varies from the bright silver gray of one day, to the dark green, and almost blackness of another! True picture of our experience in its glitter and its gloom, but evermore a constant sermon upon fruitfulness! I have known many begin with an aversion to the olive, and yet before long they have confessed it to be the most mysterious and fascinating of trees.

OIL FROM STERILE SOIL.

There is this to be learned without much thought: the olive brings forth its useful oil, mother of light, from an almost sterile soil. Some of the ground in which the olives grow might produce other crops; but in many other instances, if the olives were not there, it would produce nothing at all. Most excellent olive oil is produced from a rocky soil in Greece, which is simply a bare, burning limestone: indeed, it seems to verify the Scriptural expression of "Oil out of the flinty rock." Brave is this achievement of the olive; and it is performed all around us. This ought to show to us that we can be good workers for the Lord, and successful fruit-bearers for his glory, without having the pick of places. We may take our position as God has placed us in it, and honor the name by which we are called. Usefulness is as possible in obscurity as in publicity, and we can glorify God as truly in sickness as in health, in poverty as in wealth. Our temptation will be to think we could do exceedingly well in somebody else's sphere, but that we may be pardoned if we do not shine in our own. This is to lay a false and flattering unction to our souls: if we do no good where we are, neither should we have been useful anywhere else. A barren tree blames the soil, but the real fault is in itself. The best fruit is often produced in the worst situation. Solomon saw the hyssop on the wall, and the cedar in Lebanon; but I have seen far greater wonders, for I have seen the cedar on the wall, and the hyssop growing in Lebanon; that is to say, I have seen the noblest character where the position was unfavorable, and the poorest graces where all things tended to produce a grand result. What a shame, that the man of ten talents should sometimes bring in less interest for his Lord than the poor servant who never had but one! And yet it is often so. On a far-spreading tree, in a fat soil, I have looked in vain for fruit, while on the rocks I have seen the olive branches breaking down with their excessive wealth of berries. It is not our surroundings and circumstances, but the inner life, and the power that is within, that will determine the quantity of fruit that we bear.

FRUIT-BEARING TREES NOT ALL ALIKE.

Another lesson that we may learn from the olives is not to expect fruit-bearing trees to be exactly like one another. I think if a reward of ten thousand pounds were to be offered to any one who could produce two olive trees exactly alike, no one would be found to claim it. They could produce two alike when they had sawn off all the branches that bore fruit, and left only dead stumps; but as long as they are fruitfully alive, each one differs from the other. One twists and twirls in all sorts of shapes, and another is quite straight and comely; one seems to concentrate its branches, and fashion them into a single cup, while another is a forest tree, whose beauty lies in its untrimmed liberty of growth. Mark how, in its adornment with lichens, or in a certain smoothness and oiliness of life, each olive tree varies from its neighbor. There is no pattern for an olive tree. That tree which bears the most olives might serve as a capital model for the rest; but even in that case its particular form might turn out to be the most uncomely, so far as mere appearance is concerned. There is no model, and it would be idle to attempt to make one. The Dutch gardener of the olden time was very particular about trimming his hedges close, and clipping his yews so that he had a verdant peacock in one corner, and a huge green cheese in another, and these designs he repeated forever and a day. This is unnatural and stiff. Little children say first, "How beautiful!" and then, "How funny!" The Lord God has not so made the forest trees, nor even those which bear fruit, for man. He loves naturalness and variety; and let us in this thing agree with him, and never try to found a school of workers, or fashion a set of people all of one mould. There is a special beauty in the olive groves as the result of this diversity, and we ought to be grateful to the great Husbandman for so arranging his trees.

I find among many excellent people a feeling of surprise that godly people are not all alike. They say, "We cannot understand how So-and-so can be a Christian, and have such strange ways." Some express their surprise that God should make use of persons and modes of procedure which are so outré and extravagant in their esteem. Our tendency is to accept ourselves as patterns, and censure all divergences from our excellent selves. You cannot understand why yonder olive is so peculiar. Shall I tell you? A wandering wind came this way one morning and so fiercely twisted that young tree when it was supple, that it bears the trace thereof, and will bear it for hundreds of years. And this with its hollow trunk was assailed by a little worm when it was itself little, and the nibblings of that enemy have left lines and scars which will never be erased. Numerous agencies have been at work here, carving to good purpose. The hand of beauty smoothed yonder bough, while the tooth of time gnawed this bark. The great Gardener, who still walks the olive groves, made one grow in this way and another in that. We had better leave them alone. Among us who are called Nonconformists it is perfectly unreasonable and inconsistent to expect conformity. In some matters I believe in the dissidence of dissent, and delight to see those natural diversities which are the mark of life, and the beauty of health. Everybody living unto God should live according to the life that the Lord has placed within him, and not according to somebody else's life. Let the sober glorify God by his seriousness, and the cheerful by his gladness. Let the reasoning mind use its logic to holy purpose, but let it not snuff out all that is emotional, nor even that which is humorous and playful in others. One complained of a certain brother that he had too much wit; but it was justly remarked of the censor that no one would ever bring that charge against him.

FRUITFUL TREES BEAR THE MARK OF SUFFERING.

I think you will see in the olive tree one other lesson, namely, that this fruitful tree seems to bear the mark of suffering. I have called it a ligneous agony; a death-throe in wood. Some of them are twisted and gnarled in such anguish that one would think they had heard the groans of Gethsemane. Well does the olive embody the great agony. The pangs that rent the Saviour's heart in the garden have often been brought before me when resting among these trees. If you will observe them, not so much the younger ones as those of venerable age, you will compare them to serpents, in their strange twistings and coilings. Some of them are split to the very heart, and broken from the root upward as with an axe. One wonders how they live; but, indeed, they are full of life. I am told that even the old roots which are brought to us in our baskets for the fire would grow if they were buried in the ground. If that be so, it would be very hard work to extirpate an olive tree. It has so much life in it, that if it is buried in the soil, it will send out shoots. Even when it is in the fire, it burns with a clear flame, far more bright than that of any other wood, for it is full of the oil of life; and even in perishing it does its best to enlighten those who cast it on the fire. I suspect that if we care to do great things for God, we shall have to become gnarled and twisted by suffering. I suppose that a few good people may possibly escape from trial and suffering, but I do not know them. Those whose lives are very easy are usually of small account in the matter of usefulness. Many who are doing very little would be all the better for the fertilizing processes of pain and anguish. Even a week or two of gout might cure them of fancies, and put them upon real work. Sympathy with others is not learned without personal suffering. The power to comfort grows out of our own afflictions. Depend upon it, those useful workers whom you so much envy, have their private griefs, which minister to their usefulness, or keep them humble under their success. Those whom the Lord honors in public be chastens in private. These sicknesses and sorrows of ours have a fertilizing effect, or at least they ought to have. Every cold wind, as well as every sunbeam, helps to put oil into the olives, and grace into believers. Skillful mariners sail by all winds, and we ought to make progress through all circumstances.

So, then, brethren, we will, like the olives, try to be fruitful under difficulties, we will leave others to develop their graces and do good in their own way, and we will ourselves look out for personal affliction, counting it not strange concerning the fiery trial as though it were a new thing upon the face of the earth.

We will come to these olive trees another day, and hear what they have to say to us. They will not leave their fatness even to be promoted over the trees, and therefore we shall find them here when the climbing brambles of the hour have passed away. —C. H. Spurgeon.

THE MEASURING ROD.

Greta Brown was one of the brightest, most enthusiastic and popular girls in Miss Gerry's school. She stood first in her classes; she led the games; into whatsoever she undertook, she put an overflowing enthusiasm which ensured her success in all. There was, however, one thing which Greta Brown undertook into which she did not throw this same charming enthusiasm and energy which worked such wonders in everything else. What that one thing was you will see before you finish this story.

One bright Sunday morning in June, Greta donned her new suit and went to church. Her pastor, Dr. Milken, preached from the text, "Grow in grace," but, to tell the truth, her thoughts were not very much on the subject. They ran something like this:

"Grow in grace"—2 Peter 3: 18. Well, I'll remember the text for grandma. How pretty these five rows of gilt braid do look on this gray dress; but I must have this cuff altered. The waist puckers badly, now I am sitting down. How ugly Kate Graham's bonnet is, and how sober she looks! What can Dr. Milken be saying? 'Growing into the stature of the perfect man.' What does that mean?" And then her thoughts ran off onto something else. (Of course you, my reader, are very much shocked, as you may be, for you, certainly, never have thoughts like these in church!) But, after all, the words, "Grow in grace," did somehow stick in Greta's mind.

Now, when she came home, her brother Mark happened to tell the story of King Frederick of Prussia, whose hobby it was to collect the tallest men from all parts of Europe for his famous guards, and who rejected every applicant for that much-coveted position unless he measured a good deal over six feet. When Greta went to sleep that night, Dr. Milken's text and Mark's story mixed themselves up in a most curious way as a dream—the strangest one of all the strange dreams she had ever had. And here it is just as she herself told it to her aunt the next day.

"I dreamed that I was on my way to school, when suddenly I noticed a great crowd collecting on the green. People were hurrying to and fro, and when I asked what this commotion was about, a girl said, 'Why, don't you know? It's Measuring Day! and the Lord's angel has come to see how much our souls have grown since last Measuring Day.'

"Measuring Day!" I said; 'measuring souls!' I never heard of such a thing!' and I began to ask questions, but the girl hurried on, and after awhile I let myself be pressed along with the crowd to the green.

"There, in the center, on a kind of throne under the great elm, was the most glorious and beautiful being I ever saw. He had white wings; his clothes were a queer shining kind of white, and he had the kindest and yet most serious face I had ever beheld. By his side was a tall, golden rod, fastened upright in the ground, with curious marks at regular intervals from top to bottom. Over it, on a golden scroll, were the words, 'The measure of the stature of the perfect man.'

"The angel held in his hand a large book, into which he wrote the measurements, as the people came up in regular turn, on the calling of their names. The instant each one touched the golden measure a most wonderful thing happened. Each one shrank or increased to his true dimensions—his spiritual dimensions, as I soon learned, for it was an index of the soul-growth which was shown in this mysterious and miraculous way, so that even we could see with our eyes what otherwise the angel alone could have perceived. No one could escape the terrible accuracy of that strange rod.

"The first few who were measured after I came I did not know, but soon the name Elizabeth Darrow was called. She is the president of the Aid for the Destitute Society, you know, and she manages ever so many other societies, too, and I thought, Surely, Mrs. Darrow's measure will be very high indeed. But the instant she touched the rod she seemed to grow shorter and shorter, and the angel's face grew very serious as he said, 'This would be a soul of high stature, if only the zeal for outside works which can be seen of men had not checked the lovely secret graces of humility and trust and patience under little daily trials. These, too, are needed for perfect soul-growth.'

"I pitied Mrs. Darrow as she moved away, with such a sad and surprised face, to make room for the next. It was poor, thin, little Betsey Lines, the seamstress. I never was more astonished in my life than when she took her stand by the rod. Immediately she increased in height till her mark was higher than any I had seen before. And her face shone so I thought it must have caught its light from the angel's, which smiled so gloriously that I really envied poor little Betsey, whom before I had rather looked down on, for she dresses so meanly and looks so forlorn. And as the angel wrote in the book, he said: 'Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven.' And Betsey passed on, and Dr. Miliken took her place."

"I knew he would measure well, and he did; and the angel said, 'How beautiful are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation! Winning souls for Christ is the surest way to win soul-growth for thyself.'

"And then, Aunt Jay, I began to tremble for myself, for when had I tried to win any souls for Christ? After the first few weeks of the revival two years ago, when I joined the church, somehow I began to lose my interest in religious things, and I thought that if I kept on going to church and Sabbath-school, and saying my prayers and reading a chapter in the Bible nearly every day, I was doing all that was necessary for a young Christian, and I never thought much about growing in grace or trying to win souls for Christ. So I began to tremble lest my turn should come, but just then Hal Drayton's name was called, and I thought surely his mark will be nearly as low as mine, for he is the jolliest boy I know, and just as fond of games and good times as I, and just as ready for a lark.

"But here was another surprise. He measured nearly as high as Betsey, and the angel said, with a sweetness that thrilled me through and through, 'Let no man despise thy youth, but be thou an example of the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in purity. Such the Lord loveth, and such shall grow speedily toward the stature of the Perfect Man.'

"And then I knew that Hal had cared more for his religion than I for mine, and I longed to get away before my turn should come, but I seemed to be held fast.

"The next was Lillian Edgar, who dresses so beautifully that I have often wished that I had such clothes on and so much money. The angel looked sadly at her measure, for it was very low, so low that Lillian turned as pale as death, and her beautiful clothes no one noticed at all, for they were quite overshadowed by the glistening robes beside her. And the angel said in a solemn but gentle voice, 'Oh, child, why take ye thought for raiment? Let your adorning not be that outward adorning of putting on of apparel, but let it be the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. Thus only can you grow like the Master.'

"Old Jerry, the cobbler, came next—poor, clumsy, lame old Jerry—but as he hobbled up the steps, the angel's face fairly blazed with light, and he smiled and led him to the rod, and behold! Jerry's measure was higher than any of the others—even than Dr. Miliken's! The angel's voice rang out so loud and clear that we all heard it, saying, 'He that humbleth himself shall be exalted; whosoever shall humble himself as a little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.'

"And then, oh! Aunt Jay, my name came next, and I trembled so I could hardly reach the angel, but he put his arm around me and helped me to stand by the rod. As soon as I touched it I felt myself growing shorter and shorter, and though I stretched and stretched, and strained every nerve to be as tall as possible, I could only reach Lillian's mark—Lillian's! the lowest of all, and I a member of the church for two years!

"Oh! Aunt Jay! I grew crimson for shame, and whispered to the angel, 'Oh! give me another chance before you mark me in the book as low as this. Tell me how to grow. I will do so as gladly, only do not put this mark down!'

"The angel shook his head sadly. 'The record must go down as it is, my child. This rule will help thee: Whatsoever thou doest, do it heartily as unto the Lord, in singleness of heart as unto Christ. This one thing do: press toward the mark. The same earnestness which thou throwest into other things will, with Christ's help, make thee to grow in grace.'

"And with that I burst into tears, and I suddenly woke and found myself crying. But, oh, Aunt Jay, I shall never forget that dream. I was so ashamed of my mark!"

Do any of my readers know any girl like Greta Brown, who throws more enthusiasm into everything else than the one most important of all, the growth of her Christian character?—Evangelical Messenger.

TEMPERANCE

WINE AND THE BIBLE.

BY J. H. KELLOGG, M. D.

While there is no evidence in the Bible that the use of intoxicating wine ever did, or ever could do, any one the slightest possible good, we have the illustrious example of some of the most eminent Bible characters as teetotallers.

The Israelites.—During the sojourn of the children of Israel in Egypt, they were undoubtedly total abstainers, since their masters, the Egyptians, at that time made no use of any fermented liquor. During their journey in the wilderness, the Israelites were of necessity abstainers, their only drink being the purest water from the rock. To this long discipline of temperance might be largely attributed that hardihood, fortitude, and bravery which enabled them to sweep out with astonishing rapidity the enervated nations of Palestine, who had wasted their energies by intemperate and riotous living, and were thus easily vanquished, though protected by strong walls and fortresses.

The Nazarites.—At the time of the establishment of the ceremonial law, there was also instituted an order of teetotallers. They were called Nazarites. They dedicated themselves wholly to the service of God, and one of the conditions of the dedication was total abstinence from the use of wine. To insure a perfect observance of the pledge, all wine was prohibited, whether fermented or unfermented. Many of the finest personages of the Bible were members of this class. It is quite probable that Daniel and his three brethren were Nazarites, since they refused to drink the king's wine, preferring pulse and water.

Samson.—This Hebrew Hercules was a teetotaler from his birth. None of his muscles were weakened by alcoholic degeneration. None of his nerves were paralyzed by stimulants. He was a Nazarite, and is a fair illustration of the incompatibility of alcohol with strength. Milo, the famous Greek who rivaled Samson in his prodigious strength, was likewise a total abstainer, as well as a vegetarian.

The Rechabites.—These were a sort of family temperance society. They abstained from the use of wine because commanded to do so by their father; and the Lord commended them for their constancy. If the sons of the present age were as careful to follow the commands of their fathers as were those of ancient times, there would certainly be fewer drunkards. But drink deprives a youth of natural affection. It leads him to trample upon the authority of his father, and treat with contempt the prayers and tears of a loving mother. What a terrible monster is drink!

The Essenes.—The class of Jews known by this name were very temperate in all their habits. They were strict teetotallers, carefully avoiding the slightest indulgence in fermented drinks. They were noted for their rigorous piety. It is thought by many that John the Baptist was a member of this class. He was a Nazarite at least.

Timothy must have been a total abstainer, since it was necessary for Paul to advise him to take a little wine (sweet wine) for his "stomach's sake." There would have been no propriety in such advice had he been in the habit of using wine.

History, as well as the Bible, furnishes numerous examples of temperance.

Pythagoras, one of the most renowned philosophers of ancient times, was an advocate of total abstinence. Neither he nor his followers made use of wine.

Wine was prohibited to those who were training for competition at the national games. It appears evident, indeed, that there have always been societies analogous to temperance societies, or organizations opposed to the use of intoxicating drinks. There are even at the present day barbarous tribes, the individuals of which are strict abstainers, the use of wine being prohibited by their religion.

The relation of the Bible to temperance may be summed up in the following brief conclusions to which the evidence presented must lead us:

1. The use of intoxicating drinks is not commanded in the Bible.
2. The use of fermented wine is not recommended.
3. Its use is not countenanced either as a harmless practice or as a necessary evil.
4. Total abstinence is nowhere condemned.
5. Many texts commend abstinence, and some command it.
6. There is nothing in the Scriptures which disagrees with the principles of total abstinence and nothing which sustains moderate drinking.
7. Hence the Bible agrees with science and common sense in denouncing the use of intoxicating liquors, and commending temperance.

In the face of these facts, can any person who has a particle of faith in the inspiration of the Scriptures, and in man's accountability to his Creator, continue to indulge in the use of wine to any degree whatever? We do not see how it would be possible for a conscientious man to do so and still preserve "a conscience void of offense."—Gospel Sickle.

WHAT SHE DID.

Christiana Dickson, the wife of one of the first settlers of Erie county, Pennsylvania, was a small, blue-eyed, low-voiced woman, extremely timid, but she had a horror of drunkenness.

She lived in days when the use of liquor was universal. But when her sons were born, she resolved to put a stop to whisky-drinking in her home. Her husband being absent, her brothers called for the help of the neighbors, according to custom, to put up a barn needed on her farm. They all assembled and went to work, while she prepared a great dinner. After an hour or two, whisky was asked for. She refused to provide it.

Her brothers, and at last an elder in the church, came to reason with her; to tell her that she would be accused of meanness. Without a word the little woman went to the barn, and baring her head, stepped upon a log and spoke to them:

"My neighbors," said she, "this is a strange thing. Three of you are my brothers, three of you are elders in the church—all of you are my friends. I have prepared for you the best dinner in my power. If you refuse to raise the barn without liquor, so be it. But I would rather these timbers shall rot where they lie than to give you whisky."

The men angrily went home; the little woman returned to the house and for hours cried as though her heart would break. But the next day every man came back, went heartily to work, enjoyed her good dinner, and said not a word about whisky.
